SOUTHERN PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION (South Africa) (formerly Sentinel Publishing Association). A publishing house owned and operated by the Southern Africa Affairs Committee of the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists and situated at the corner of Old Ottery Road and Clifford Street in Ottery, a suburb of Cape Town, South Africa. The plant publishes religious, health, and educational books, periodicals, and tracts for the denomination, by the offset process. The plant uses modern processes throughout, from desktop editing to a well-equipped bindery and dispatch department.

History

History. Soon after his arrival in South Africa in 1887, D. A. Robinson, seeing the need for a small press on which to print announcements and sermons, wrote of his need to the Review and Herald Publishing Association. Sympathetic to his desire, they purchased and dispatched a small handpress, which arrived in Cape Town in 1890.

It is not known where the press was situated, but A. Druillard was one of the first to operate it. In 1892 the press was moved to the basement of the newly dedicated Roeland Street church building, where it continued for about four years. It was on this press in 1895 that the first SDA tract in an African language was printed, one prepared in Xhosa by Richard Moko.

In the hope that printing might become one of the industries of the school and supply work opportunities to the students, the press was moved in 1896 to a small building erected for it in the rear of the Claremont Union College buildings on Rosmead Avenue, Kenilworth. The building was divided into three small rooms, one for the typesetters, one for the press, and one for the donkey engine. The editorial office remained in the Roeland Street church for 24 years after the press was moved.

In September 1895 the first issue (4,300 copies) of the South African Sentinel, a 16-page English journal, came from the press, followed shortly by De Wachter, a paper in Dutch. The Sentinel was received enthusiastically by the colporteurs and church members, and by the beginning of 1896, 10,000 copies of each issue were printed, and of the Wachter, 5,000. Both papers carried a subscription price of 3/6 (85¢) per year. In 1904 The South African Missionary, a paper intended for circulation among church members, was begun; later replacements have included the African Division Outlook, South African Division Outlook, South African Union Lantern, and Maranatha.

The press carried the name South African Publishing Company. No attempt was made to print large books, which were imported. As missionaries in the north mastered new languages, they submitted manuscripts for songbooks, primers, or simple school readers to the publishing company for publication. Those who through the years led out in the work were A. Druillard, R. F. McPherson, George Israel, Shaw Tarr, J. W. Johnson, and C. P. Crager.

On Feb. 14, 1916, the Sentinel Publishing Company was formally organized, with W. B. White (the union president), board chair, and W. B. Commin, secretary-treasurer and manager. In 1917, when the college moved to Natal, the publishing house moved into the lower floor of the classroom-church building, which was remodeled and became the permanent office and factory of the company.

When W. H. Branson became president of the newly organized African Division in 1920, he recommended that the publishing house should be greatly expanded and made capable of producing large books. In a cable to the General Conference in Washington, D.C., he appealed for and received funds with which the plant in Kenilworth was enlarged and more equipment secured.

Among those who gave years of service to the institution were Fred Visser and J. G. Slate, whose names appear for the first time in the board minutes of 1921. Visser served the house in the composing room for more than 50 years, retiring in 1962, while Slate was manager and treasurer from January 1921 until he returned to America in 1948. Also mentioned in the minutes of 1921 is the name of D. E. Robinson, the first full-time editor, and for many years a worker in the Southern African Division. Many of the editors who served during the years were at the same time carrying other responsibilities. Only three or four were permitted to devote their full time to editorial work.

As the colporteur work expanded, especially after World War I, the work at the publishing company likewise expanded to meet the increasing demand for books. As the missionaries entered new language areas there was a growing demand for publications in the vernacular tongues. Evangelistic periodicals published include the Signs of the Times, formerly the South African Sentinel and Tekens van die Tye, formerly De Wachter. A second period of great expansion came during the time of World War II and the years following, when business increased from £21,054 in 1941 to £70,416 in 1950. The number of employees increased from 21 in 1947 to 34 in 1951.

In 1963 the word “company” was dropped from the name and the word “association” substituted. In 1982 the name was changed from Sentinel Publishing Association to Southern Publishing Association. The staff of 62 in 1993 consisted of men and women of all the main races of South Africa. Books, periodicals, tracts, and other materials were published in seven languages.

The original two-story building was in continuous use from 1917 to 1991, when, because it needed extensive repairs, the property was sold. Land was bought at the present site and a modern factory erected. The building was dedicated to the service of the Lord on May 22, 1992.

Managers: W. B. Commin, 1916—1920; J. G. Slate, 1921—1948; M. E. Dawson, 1948—1951; F. L. Bell, 1951—1955; P. W. Willmore, 1955—1960; D. K. Short, 1960—1977; J. M. Stephenson, 1977—1979; D. H. Thomas, 1980—1990; J. G. Hibbert, 1990—1994; L. R. Johnson 1994— .

Southern Publishing Association (Tennessee)

SOUTHERN PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION (Tennessee). A former publishing house located at 1900 Elm Hill Pike, Nashville, Tennessee. It served the Southern and Southwestern union conferences.

Earlier Seventh-day Adventist Publishing Work in the South. In 1890 the short-lived Southwestern Publishing Company in Dallas, Texas, first issued The Southern Sentinel, “devoted to the defense of Religious Liberty.” On Sept. 1, 1889, the Review and Herald of Battle Creek, Michigan, opened a branch in Atlanta, Georgia, which on Dec. 1, 1891, began a four-page mimeographed colporteur newsletter, The Southern Agent, which eventually became These Times.

The first Seventh-day Adventist printing in Nashville was done by the Tennessee River Conference and J. E. White. In 1900 the conference began The Tennessee River Watchman, often called The Watchman. J. E. White brought his printing equipment to a former barn-chickenhouse on the then-suburban estate Rokeby, which had been rented by L. A. Hansen to house his treatment-room workers, at 1908 Grand Avenue, near Vanderbilt University. Here White founded the Gospel Herald Publishing Company and began printing volume 3 (January 1901) of the Gospel Herald, which he had launched in 1898 as the organ of the Southern Missionary Society, of which he was the leading spirit. Already in December 1900 the society had bought a small tract of land and a two-story brick store at 1025 Jefferson Street, in the city, for $1,900 (original price $4,300), but the Herald Publishing Company (shortened form of the Gospel Herald Publishing Company) did not move to that site until March. Ellen White visited there in the spring of 1901 and a number of times later.

Birth of the Southern Publishing Association. At the General Conference session in Battle Creek, Michigan, the Southern Union Conference was organized on Apr. 9, 1901. The first public act of its president, R. M. Kilgore, Apr. 16, 1901, was to request that the Atlanta Branch of the Review and Herald be transferred to the Herald Publishing Company, then privately owned but soon to be incorporated. This new company was reported as organized on May 16, 1901, and incorporated on June 4, 1901, as the Southern Publishing Association, a stock company with capital stock of $25,000 (increased to $50,000 on May 9, 1902).

Appeals in the Review and Herald in the summer of 1901 enabled the Southern Publishing Association to complete a larger building (begun that spring) adjoining the Jefferson Street building. It served the house for four years.

Saved From Closing. During its first three years the publishing house ran behind in operating expenses some $36,000. Because of this increase in indebtedness (the institution was still plagued by debts with which it had been born: purchase of the equipment of the Herald Publishing Company and liabilities of the Atlanta branch), a General Conference investigating committee advised reducing the Southern Publishing Association to a depository for the Review and Herald. When A. G. Daniells carried this report to Ellen White, she was “deeply perplexed and sorely grieved”; but she consented to it. Before action could be taken, however, a message from Mrs. White changed the minds of the committee. She told them that their plans were wrong, that the Lord desired a printing plant in the South, and His prospering hand would be with them if they would persevere. The General Conference Committee, especially Daniells personally, set about to solve the problems; better business methods were instituted, and the tide turned.

Expansion. On Oct. 31, 1905, the Southern Publishing Association bought a seven-acre (three-hectare) tract of land on 24th Avenue, North, then outside the city, from J. E. White, and sold the Jefferson Street property for enough to pay all the expenses of the new buildings and the cost of removal. One section of the new plant was begun in autumn 1905 and occupied the next spring. The increase in prosperity of the institution was reported as “almost phenomenal.” Said the manager, I. A. Ford, “Truly the Lord led in the establishment of the publishing house in its present place.” In January 1906 the form of incorporation was changed to a nonstock company with increased conference constituency.

Beginning in February 1905, the Southern Publishing Association opened several branches, two of which—one in Fort Worth, Texas (1905), and the other in Atlanta, Georgia (1909)—functioned until the great depression of 1932. Others operated briefly in Hickory, North Carolina (1906—1908), and in New Orleans, Louisiana (1907—1911).

Expansion and Publishing Through World War I. Considerable building followed the relocation, including the two-story office building, with a chapel, on the front wall of which were painted the words “What hath God wrought!”

Most noted of early books published by the house were The Story of Joseph, The New Testament Primer, and Best Stories From the Best Book, all by J. E. White, and Christ Our Saviour, adapted for children by Ellen White from her Desire of Ages. These filled Mrs. White’s specifications for books to be published in and for the South of that day, where so much of the work was carried on for the underprivileged—“Books telling the truth in simple language, and abundantly illustrated” (Review and Herald 78:349, May 28, 1901). Many underprivileged of both races learned to read from The New Testament Primer, published in 1906—1907. J. E. White also wrote for the Southern Publishing Association in 1909 the 500-page doctrinal book Past, Present, and Future.

Leon A. Smith, son of Uriah Smith of the Review and Herald and an editor at the Southern Publishing Association (1906—1918), was a prolific tract writer. His largest contribution was the revision of his father’s Marvel of Nations, retitled The United States in Prophecy (1914). The most important early doctrinal contribution of the SPA to SDA evangelism was Bible Footlights (1907), an unsigned compilation of Bible studies, but its most extensive one was its Watchman Series of two-page tracts, which sold for 50 cents a thousand and went “by millions” to carpet the South. The set of organized tracts called The Family Bible Teacher (1906—1907), followed by J. L. Shuler’s Home Bible Course, was the forerunner of the Bible correspondence courses so extensively used today.

A 1905 publication for the General Conference Sabbath School Department was a lesson quarterly on religious liberty and health and temperance. Since then the Southern Publishing Association published a number of books on Sabbath school activities, plus lesson-help books to accompany some of the individual lesson quarterlies.

The Southern Publishing Association produced a number of small paperbound books that were combined with other titles from the Review and Herald in a series that sold by millions. These were called “The Busy Man’s Library” by the SPA and “The Crisis Series” by the Review and Herald.

In 1910 R. L. Pierce, manager of the Fort Worth branch, needed so many books to fill colporteur orders that he applied to the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company for a freight rate on a carload of books. His request was discarded as unreasonable. Later the Cottonbelt Line gave him a carload rate. The two carloads he ordered from the Southern Publishing Association were reported as the largest book shipment from any publisher to enter that area.

War and Depression. During World War I, when orders for paper took months to be filled, supplies sometimes ran dangerously low. But one carload came through from the mill in two days “under U.S. Government bond,” labeled “war material”—for which even passenger trains had been sidetracked. As the SPA trucks unloaded the first of this paper at the plant, the last ream of the old stock had been put on the presses. No one ever discovered how this delivery had been speeded up.

During the fall of 1920, as the price of Southern cotton almost vanished, colporteur orders vanished with it. Then the great depression of 1929—1932 hit even harder, and repeated pay cuts were made. Simmering in the background for 15 years was the constant urging by some that the SPA be reduced to a depository. A skeleton factory force did painting, repair, and maintenance work when presses slowed, but commercial work kept the presses rolling. M. F. Knox, treasurer, went out every Thursday to collect from customers to meet Friday’s payroll, which never failed.

New Physical Plant. Because of the problems of an aging physical plant located in a deteriorating neighborhood, the board of directors voted on June 7, 1972, to relocate and build a new publishing house. Construction of the 112,000-square-foot (10,400-square-meter) structure began in March 1973. Bad weather delayed work at the 6.6-acre (2.7-hectare) Elm Hill Pike site. The first department to transfer, the bindery began moving on Nov. 11, 1973. Open house for the $1.4 million plant took place on Mar. 11 and 12, 1974.

Later Publications. SPA sought to meet special audiences and needs. Its Better Living Series and Flame Series consisted of small, inexpensive saddle-stitched paperbacks. The BLS concentrated on health and family topics. The Flame Series covered contemporary doctrinal subjects and issues. Both series were used in doctors’ rack programs. The Heritage Library offered reprints of early SDA books that shaped denominational thinking. SPA’s Anvil Series aimed at the inquiring SDA mind. Two of the early Anvil Series titles were Gottfried Oosterwal’s Mission: Possible (an examination of SDA missions) and Perfection: The Impossible Possibility (doctrine of perfection) by four SDA theologians.

For several years the house associated an artist-designer with each editorial department. The resulting book and magazine designs won many art awards and set trends in denominational graphics. The editorial staffs employed surveys and research programs to determine the unmet needs of its public. Surveys, for example, helped select the subjects of the Anvil Series and the titles to be included in the Heritage Library.

In collaboration with the Ellen White Estate, Inc., the SPA brought out the following compilations from her unpublished manuscripts or earlier works: The Adventist Home, Child Guidance, Counsels to Writers and Editors, Fundamentals of Christian Education, Messages to Young People, a three-volume set called Selections From the Testimonies, and Happiness Homemade.

Periodicals. The Southern Publishing Association issued the following periodicals: Gospel Herald (1901—1903), The Gospel Sentinel (1909—1911), the Church Officers' Gazette (1948—1951), Home and School (1932—1938), The Southern Missionary (1903—1905) and its continuation, the second Gospel Herald (1905—1910), Adventist Home (1951—1973), Still Waters (1963—1974), MV Kit (1951—1974; transferred to General Conference Youth Department in 1975); Message Magazine, and These Times (formerly called The Southern Watchman, The Watchman, and Our Times).

In 1917 the Ingathering magazine began to be used as a regular issue of The Watchman magazine (These Times) and in 1940 an Ingathering magazine for Blacks as an issue of Message Magazine. From about 1934 special Ingathering leaflets for singing bands, Christmas carolers, and solicitation of institutions were added.

These Times popularized the concept of special issues devoted to one topic and introduced the use of four colors throughout the whole magazine.

The Southern Publishing Association also entered the field of printing covers for church bulletins to provide SDA subjects and information.

On Mar. 5, 1980, because of an economic decline and the growing need to utilize denominational printing equipment efficiently, a special committee consisting of representatives from Southern Publishing Association, the Review and Herald Publishing Association, the General Conference Publishing Department, and General Conference officers met to prepare a proposal that would lead to the merger of the two publishing houses.

As a result, on Mar. 18 the constituency for Southern Publishing Association met and voted to implement the proposal for merger. On Mar. 19 the constituency for the Review and Herald Publishing Association met and voted the same. Then on Mar. 20 a joint meeting of representatives from both publishing houses met in the Takoma Park church and voted that “the assets and liabilities of the two houses” be “combined under one corporate structure.”

It was made clear to the constituents at that time that it was hoped the two houses would eventually operate on a single site that was yet to be determined. A search committee was authorized to begin investigating possible locations.

“In the meantime” it was planned that “dynamic operations in each of the plants, at Nashville and Washington, D.C.,” would continue. Consensus was that the Washington facilities would produce journals, Ingathering materials, and subscription books, whereas the Nashville plant would produce trade books, learning materials, Bibles, and book binding.

Later in 1980 and in early 1981 staff from the Nashville facility began being transferred to the Review and Herald Publishing Association’s base of operations in Washington, D.C.

Board Chairs/Presidents: C. F. McVagh, 1912; S. E. Wight, 1913—1921; J. L. McElhany, 1921—1923; G. W. Wells, 1923—1927; J. J. Nethery, 1927—1929; N. S. Ashton, 1929—1933; S. A. Ruskjer, 1933—1936; G. A. Roberts, 1936; J. K. Jones, 1937—1943; O. Montgomery, 1943; J. W. Turner, 1944—1948; H. T. Elliott, 1948—1949; V. G. Anderson, 1949—1951; G. Calkins, 1951; A. L. Ham, 1952—1954; W. H. Branson, 1955—1959; W. B. Ochs, 1959—1963; Theodore Carcich, 1963—1966; G. A. Huse, 1966—1971; W. R. Beach, 1971—1975; W. D. Eva, 1975—1980.

General Managers: R. Hook, Jr., 1912; R. L. Pierce, 1913—1924; M. F. Knox, 1926—1932; G. A. Huse, 1932—1939; M. V. Tucker, 1939—1943; E. A. Moon, 1943—1944; H. C. Kephart, 1944—1951; H. P. Evens, 1951—1954; E. A. Moon, 1954—1960; I. H. Ihrig, 1960—1970; C. L. Paddock, Jr., 1970—1975; W. Ross Wollard, 1975—1980.

Southern Review

SOUTHERN REVIEW. See These Times.

Southern Sanitarium

SOUTHERN SANITARIUM. See Southern College.

Southern Section

SOUTHERN SECTION. See Pakistan; Trans-European Division.

Southern Tidings

SOUTHERN TIDINGS (1907— ; 1907—1910 as Report of Progress; 1910—1932 as Southern Union Worker; merged with Field Tidings to become Southern Tidings; monthly; file in GC). Official organ of the Southern Union Conference of the North American Division. In 1909, after the Southeastern Union Conference was formed, a new union paper, Field Tidings, began to be issued. At the reorganization of the unions into the Southern Union Conference in 1932, Southern Tidings came out, its first issue, Mar. 23, as vol. 24, no. 12, apparently regarded at the time as the continuation of Field Tidings, which had ended with vol. 24, no. 11, the preceding week. However, the 1942 volume of Southern Tidings was numbered 36 (omitting 34 and 35), as it would properly be if treated as a continuation of the Southern Union Worker, which originated as Report of Progress two years earlier than Field Tidings.

Southern Training School

SOUTHERN TRAINING SCHOOL. See Southern College.

Southern Ukrainian Conference

SOUTHERN UKRAINIAN CONFERENCE. See Euro-Asia Division; Ukraine.

Southern Union Conference (Euro-Asia Division)

SOUTHERN UNION CONFERENCE (Euro-Asia Division). See Euro-Asia Division; Kazakhstan; Kyrgyzstan; Tajikistan; Turkmenistan; Uzbekistan.

Southern Union Conference (North American Division)

SOUTHERN UNION CONFERENCE (North American Division). A North American administrative unit comprising the following local conferences: Carolina, Florida, Georgia-Cumberland, Gulf States, Kentucky-Tennessee, South Atlantic, South Central, and Southeastern. Headquarters: 3978 Memorial Drive, Decatur, Georgia. Statistics (1992): churches, 842; members, 149,612; church or elementary schools, 218; academies, 12; colleges, 3; hospitals, 11; ordained ministers, 590; credentialed commissioned ministers, 70; licensed ministers, 92; licensed commissioned ministers of teaching, 132; licensed missionaries, 138; credentialed or licensed literature evangelists, 114; elementary teachers, 644; secondary teachers, 208. Official organ: Southern Tidings.

Institutions

Institutions. The following educational institutions operate in the Southern Union area: Atlanta Adventist Academy; Bass Memorial Academy; Collegedale Academy; Florida Hospital College of Health Sciences; Forest Lake Academy; Georgia-Cumberland Academy; Greater Atlanta Adventist Academy; Greater Miami Academy; Highland Academy; Madison Academy; Miami Union Academy; Mount Pisgah Academy; Oakwood Academy; Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists; Oakwood College (a General Conference institution located in the Southern Union).

The following Adventist Health System/Sunbelt hospitals are located in the Southern Union area: East Pasco Medical Center; Florida Hospital; Gordon Hospital; Jellico Community Hospital; Medical Center Hospital; Memorial Hospital; Smyrna Hospital; Takoma Adventist Hospital; Tennessee Christian Medical Center—Nashville; Tennessee Christian Medical Center—Portland; Walker Memorial Medical Center.

History

History. The Southern Union Conference was organized Apr. 9, 1901, in the former General District no. 2. It was the first of the six formed from the General Conference districts in North America following an organizational pattern similar to that already existing in Australasia. The Southern Union began with three conferences—Cumberland, Florida, and Tennessee River—and an unorganized mission field including six states, in which during that summer five other conferences were organized: Alabama, Carolina, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi. The Southern Missionary Society became a branch of the union conference, and the Southern Publishing Association was established, publishing the Southern Watchman (see These Times) as the official organ. The headquarters were at Nashville, Tennessee, until 1932.

In 1908 the eastern half was separated to form the Southeastern Union Conference. In 1909 the Southern Missionary Society was succeeded by the Southern Union Mission as the branch fostering the work for the Black people in the conferences. This sort of mission arrangement in both the Southeastern and the Southern unions was later replaced by regional departments. In 1946 the South Central Conference and the South Atlantic Conference were formed and became constituents of the Southern Union. The Southern and Southeastern unions reunited in 1932, with headquarters in Decatur, Georgia. In 1981 the South Atlantic Conference was divided and the Southeastern Conference was formed.

Presidents: R. M. Kilgore, 1901—1902; G. I. Butler, 1902—1907; G. A. Irwin, 1907—1909; C. F. McVagh, 1909—1912; S. E. Wight, 1912—1920; J. L. McElhany, 1920—1922; Charles Thompson, 1922; G. W. Wells, 1922—1926; J. J. Nethery, 1926—1928; N. S. Ashton, 1928—1932; S. A. Ruskjer, 1932—1935; G. A. Roberts, 1935—1936; J. K. Jones, 1936—1943; E. F. Hackman, 1943—1947; V. G. Anderson, 1948—1957; D. R. Rees, 1957—1964; LeRoy J. Leiske, 1964—1965; H. H. Schmidt, 1965—1980; A. C. McClure, 1980—1990; M. D. Gordon, 1990— .

For presidents of the eastern part of this territory between 1908 and 1932, see Southeastern Union Conference.

Southern Union Mission

SOUTHERN UNION MISSION. See South Africa, Republic of; Lesotho; Swaziland.

Southern Union Worker

SOUTHERN UNION WORKER. See Southern Tidings.

Southwest Academy

SOUTHWEST ACADEMY. See Honam Academy.

South-West Africa

SOUTH-WEST AFRICA. See Namibia.

Southwest Conference

SOUTHWEST CONFERENCE. See Bosnia and Herzegovina; Trans-European Division.

Southwest Indian Mission

SOUTHWEST INDIAN MISSION. See Native Americans; Southwestern Union Conference.

Southwest Korean Conference

SOUTHWEST KOREAN CONFERENCE. See Far Eastern Division; Korea.

Southwest Region Conference

SOUTHWEST REGION CONFERENCE. A unit of church organization comprising the congregations of Arkansas, Louisiana, New Mexico (except San Juan County), Oklahoma, and Texas; one of the five local conferences that make up the Southwestern Union. All races make up the membership, but the majority of the constituency is comprised of the Black population of the area (3,957,986). Statistics (1990): churches, 86; members, 14,784; church schools, 11; teachers, 29. Headquarters: 2215 Lanark, Dallas, Texas. The conference forms part of the Southwestern Union Conference.

Local churches—Arkansas: Fort Smith (Love’s Chapel), Hot Springs (Sharon), Little Rock (Shiloh), Monroe (Twin Pines), Pine Bluff (Northside), West Memphis (New Life); Louisiana: Alexandria (Smyrna), Baton Rouge (Berean, Faith), Coushatta (First), Covington (Ephesus), Hammond (Emmanuel), Kenner, Lake Charles (Sharon Chapel), Mansfield (Memorial), Minden (New Start), Monroe (Macedonia), Natchitoches (First), New Orleans (Coffin, East, Ephesus, Westbank United), Shreveport (Cedar Grove, Philadelphia), Tallulah (First), Thibodaux (Central); New Mexico: Albuquerque (Bethel [Hispanic], Bethesda), Hobbs (Mount Carmel), Las Cruces (Philathea), Roswell (Beulah); Oklahoma: Enid (Philadelphia), Lawton (New Life), McAlester (Friendship), Muskogee (Berean), Oklahoma City (Tenth Street), Okmulgee (Maranatha), Sapulpa (Philadelphia), Tulsa (Bethel); Texas: Amarillo (Mount of Blessings), Athens (Lone Star), Austin (Alpha), Baytown (United), Beaumont (Emmanuel Temple), Cleburne (Emmanuel), Corsicana (Bethel), Dallas (City Temple, Faith Temple, Fellowship, Penuel), Elgin (Emmanuel), El Paso (Smyrna Mid-City), Euless (Mosier Valley), Fort Worth (Grace Temple, Total Victory), Garland (Casalita Drive), Hillsboro, (Mount Olive), Houston (Bellfort, Berean, Hebron, New Life, Smyrna), Jefferson (Jefferson City), Killeen (New Hope), Lubbock (Manhattan Heights), Lufkin (North), Marshall (Emmanuel), Missouri City (Houston-Fondren Worship Center), Nacogdoches (Cariker), Navasota (Smyrna), Odessa (Ebenezer), Palestine (New Life), Port Arthur (Mount Olive), Round Rock, San Antonio (Ephesus), Texarkana (Bethel), Tyler (Faith Temple, Sharon), Waco (Mount Lebanon), Waxahachie (Wyatt Street), Wichita Falls (Emmanuel), Willis (Conroe-Emmanuel).

Companies—Louisiana: Slidell (Glad Tidings); Texas: Bryan (New Life), Fort Worth (Evangel of Truth).

History

History. Beginning of the Work in the Area. The Seventh-day Adventist faith was preached and taught to Blacks in the territory of the present Southwest Region Conference at least as early as 1876, in the same year in which the Rust brothers, SDA laymen, came into Texas and gathered the first group of White converts in the Dallas area. D. M. Canright, visiting Texas in May 1876, reported that one of the young members, Eddie Capman, was conducting a night school three times a week for Blacks teaching old men and little children together to read and write. He also described a preaching service for Whites where many Black people, according to the local custom, sat outside and listened.

Later the same year A. B. Rust reported going with Parson Medlin, who had attended Capman's night school, to preach in several neighboring counties. In a community of 700 at Mansfield, Texas, he preached in their log church, which had a large bower erected in front of it where White visitors sat outside. The next spring Joseph Clarke and his wife, from Ohio, taught a school at Grand Prairie, near A. B. Rust's home, in a building that had been erected by the Blacks with the aid of contributions from the local White citizens.

The first Black church in the area of the present Southwest Region Conference was organized at New Orleans, Louisiana, on June 4, 1892. This was the result of the work of C. M. Kinney, pioneer Black minister, who had found six Black SDAs in the city on his arrival the preceding October. He reported the newly founded church as the fourth Black church in the denomination (preceding it were those at Edgefield Junction, Tennessee, 1886; Louisville, Kentucky, 1890; and Bowling Green, Kentucky, 1891).

A 1901 report from Sidney Scott, a Black minister, tells of a group of converts in Catcher, Arkansas; also of a whole congregation, the "Monarch" church, although he does not mention the place. Also in 1901 a group was organized into a company in Houston, Texas, as a result of the work of two colporteurs, Mrs. Pack and Mrs. Dysart, who had won converts there in 1898. This company was organized into the Berean church on Feb. 21, 1921, with a membership of 63, after a series of meetings held by the union's Afro-American evangelist, M. G. Nunez.

Other workers and evangelists in the area were A. C. Chatman, Page Shepard, W. S. North, T. B. Buckner, N. B. King, J. H. Lawrence, J. G. Dasent, F. S. Keitts, T. H. Coopwood, Caleb Martin, and John W. Green.

From 1936 to 1938 new churches were organized in Fort Worth, Laredo, Palestine, and Longview, Texas. In 1941 and 1942, 48 more were baptized from two meetings in the Valley and Corpus Christi.

Organization of the Black Work. There was no continuous method of organization. For certain years (1911, 1912, 1921, 1922) the Yearbook lists a Southwestern Union Mission for colored, organized 1910. Beginning in 1917, there were, under one or another of the local conferences, departments, or missions, or committees, and from 1932 a union Negro Department (or committee); these continued until 1946; then a regional mission, comparable to the regional conferences in several other unions, was set up.

The Southwestern Mission. On Dec. 16, 1946, the Black constituency of the Arkansas-Louisiana, Oklahoma, Texas, and Texico conferences (the region of the Southwestern Union) were combined and organized into the Southwestern Mission (effective Jan. 1, 1947). This was not the same as the Southwestern Union Mission for Colored, organized 1910, with an executive committee composed of union executive committee members and three Black ministers. This new mission was a unit comparable to a conference, with its own officers, committee, and departmental secretaries, and headquarters at 3711 Oakland Avenue, Dallas, Texas. The first mission officers chosen by the constituency were W. W. Fordham, president; V. L. Roberts, secretary-treasurer and home missionary secretary; J. H. Jones, publishing secretary; Helen Wiggans Beckett, Sabbath school secretary. At the end of two years as a mission, the membership was 1,939 and the total net worth was $35,824.85.

The Southwest Region Conference Organized. On Jan. 17, 1950, the Southwestern Mission constituency met in the Friendship Baptist Church in Dallas, Texas, to hold its first biennial session. W. W. Fordham, president of the mission, made his report giving the progress of the mission during the preceding two years. J. C. Kozel, secretary-treasurer of the Southwestern Union, who served as chair for the session, was so pleased with the progress the mission had made during the short period of existence, that he entertained a motion to change the organization from a mission status to that of a conference. The change was approved and the new organization was named the Southwest Region Conference of Seventh-day Adventists. The same headquarters were maintained. The following officers and departmental secretaries were elected: W. W. Fordham, president; V. L. Roberts, secretary-treasurer; C. C. Cunningham, educational, MV, and Sabbath school secretary; V. L. Roberts, Book and Bible House manager; O. Dunn, publishing secretary; V. L. Roberts, press secretary; C. C. Cunningham, temperance secretary; W. W. Fordham, religious liberty secretary.

The period following the conference organization was one of growth and progress and a search for adequate housing for an expanding office. In 1958 the conference headquarters were moved from Oakland to the new site at 1900 South Boulevard. In this large building, the conference office shared headquarters with the City Temple church and Southwest Region Academy. In 1968 the purchase of a building on Lanark Street provided space for the conference headquarters.

Presidents: W. W. Fordham, 1946—1954; H. R. Murphy, 1954—1956; V. L. Roberts, 1956—1969; W. J. Cleveland, 1969—1976; W. C. Jones, Sr., 1976—1986; R. E. Barron, 1986—1990; R. L. Lister, 1990— .

Southwestern Adventist College

SOUTHWESTERN ADVENTIST COLLEGE. A coeducational level III university operated by the Southwestern Union Conference on a spacious campus at Keene, Texas, in the Dallas-Fort Worth metroplex. The college is fully accredited by church, regional, professional, and state bodies and (1993) offers degrees in 31 areas, including M.Ed., B.A., B.B.A., B.S., and B.S.W. as well as corresponding minors, associate degrees, and certification courses.

In addition to the usual preprofessional programs, the college is approved to offer the associate degree in nursing as well as the baccalaureate degree and degrees in long-term health-care administration. The college has grown consistently since it graduated its first four-year-degree students in 1969, when it enrolled 428, to 890 in 1992—1993.

A college-owned conglomerate, Southwestern Colorgraphics, Old Betsy Village (containing numerous shops and an affiliated supermarket) and Villa Inn, follows the SAC tradition of emphasis on the work ethic.

The college buildings include Evans Hall for classes and chapel, the Findley Administrative Center, the Chan Shun Centennial Library, Scales Hall for the sciences, the Committee of 100 Cafeteria, Barron Building and chapel for theology, Mabee Center for the arts, Leiske-Pultar gymnasium, Moran Hall for communication, Hagen Hall for nursing, and the SAC Museum of Student Life as well as four dormitories: Hamilton Hall and Meier Hall for men, and Harmon Hall and Hadley Hall for the women. Other major structures include the apartments for married students, and the buildings that house maintenance and other supportive departments.

Other facilities of the college include Callicott Park, the Raymond and Anna Beem Broadcast Center, KJCR FM, and Amalgam TV studios.

History

History. As Seventh-day Adventist work developed in the Lone Star State, and as the converts felt the need of an educational institution to prepare denominational workers, W. S. Greer, president of the conference (1892—1894), spearheaded a movement for such a school. Traveling in a two-wheeled hammock cart and presenting the need to churches and companies in North Texas, he was largely responsible for the establishment of the Texas School, which opened on Jan. 7, 1894, with 56 students.

Greer and several laymen—including Woods, Mosley, and Wallen—gave their personal notes for approximately 800 acres (320 hectares) in Johnson County, after receiving notice that on Feb. 22, 1893, the General Conference, in Battle Creek, had voted the establishment of the Texas school in response to a memorial from that conference. At the 1893 camp meeting in Dallas, announcement was made of this purchase, and tracts of land were made available to all who wished to move to the school site. A mass exodus began from Peoria, Dallas, and other cities. There were no roads on the 800-acre (320-hectare) tract (only paths and trails), no water systems, no vehicles except horse-drawn carriages, and no homes. The residents lived in tents during November and December 1903, until they could build living quarters.

The school was conducted in a building that served as a meeting place for the church also. Rapid growth of the population of Keene made it necessary to double the size of the school building before the end of the 1894 school year. Enrollment had reached 90. That same year the community raised sufficient funds to build a coed dormitory that they called the School Home. It housed faculty as well.

During the second year the enrollment increased to 160. Industries were begun and a major classroom and administration building was constructed in 1895.

In the latter part of 1895, when the General Conference assumed control of the school, it became the principal SDA educational center for the entire Southwest, eventually serving Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Louisiana. Beginning in 1897, it was called Keene Industrial Academy. In 1916 it became Southwestern Junior College.

Looking forward to four-year college development, the union constituency voted in 1963 to change the name of the school to Southwestern Union College. In 1975 it was again changed, this time to Southwestern Adventist College.

Principals of Keene Industrial Academy: C. B. Hughes, 1894—1897; C. C. Lewis, 1897—1902; Alvin Covert, 1902; August Kunz, 1903; C. B. Hughes, 1903—1907; C. M. Sorenson, 1907—1909; C. B. Hughes, 1909—1915; F. R. Isaac, 1915—1916.

Presidents of Southwestern Junior College: William Edward Nelson, 1916—1921; F. R. Isaac, 1921—1923; P. L. Thompson, 1923—1928; Chester E. Kellogg, 1928—1935; H. H. Hamilton, 1935—1944; W. H. Shephard, 1944—1946; J. V. Peters, 1946—1954; C. N. Rees, 1954—1958; L. G. Scales, 1958—1962; Raymond S. Moore, 1962—1963.

Presidents of Southwestern Union College: Raymond S. Moore, 1963—1964; Paul Wilson, 1964; E. C. Wines, 1964—1971; Leroy J. Leiske, 1971—1974; Calvin G. Gordon (interim president); 1974—1975.

Presidents of Southwestern Adventist College: Donald R. McAdams, 1975—1984; Marvin Anderson, 1984— .

Southwestern Uganda Field

SOUTHWESTERN UGANDA FIELD. See Eastern Africa Division; Uganda.

Southwestern Union Conference

SOUTHWESTERN UNION CONFERENCE. A North American administrative unit comprising the following local conferences: Arkansas-Louisiana, Oklahoma, Southwest Region, Texas, and Texico, with headquarters at 777 S. Burleson Blvd., Burleson, Texas. Statistics (1992): churches, 496; members, 56,959; church or elementary schools, 85; secondary schools, 7; ordained ministers, 247; licensed ministers, 32; Bible instructors, 4; elementary teachers, 212; secondary teachers, 76. Official organ: The Southwestern Union Record.

Institutions

Institutions. Burton Adventist Academy; Central Texas Medical Center; Chisholm Trail Academy; Huguley Memorial Medical Center; Huguley Nursing Center; Huguley Place Retirement Center; Jefferson Adventist Academy; Ozark Adventist Academy; Parkview Adventist Academy; Sandia View Academy; Sierra Vista Hospital; Southwestern Adventist College; Summit Ridge Retirement Center; Valley Grande Academy; Valley Grande Manor, Willow Creek Hospital.

History

History. The Southwestern Union Conference was formed in 1901 with the territory of Missouri, Colorado, Kansas, Texas, Arkansas, Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma (and Indian Territory). It was reorganized in 1902 with the conferences of Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas (Arizona went to the Pacific Union, and the rest to the Central Union). At the end of 1907 New Mexico was returned to the Southwestern Union. In 1932 Louisiana was added. For the formation of the South Texas, West Texas, and Texico conferences, see Texas Conference. There were at different times, on the union and local conference levels, various Black missions, departments, or committees replaced in 1947 by the Southwestern Mission, which became the Southwest Region Conference in 1950. There were also listed in the Yearbook, from 1935 to 1939, a Southwest Indian Mission, and, from 1940 to 1943, a Cherokee Indian Mission under the Oklahoma Conference.

Presidents: C. McReynolds, 1901—1902; G. C. Rupert, 1902—1903; N. P. Nelson, 1903—1905; C. Woodward (acting), 1905—1906; C. Santee, 1906—1907; R. C. Porter, 1907—1908; C. Santee, 1908—1910; G. F. Watson, 1910—1916; J. W. Christian, 1916—1918; M. Lukens, 1918—1923; M. B. Van Kirk, 1923—1932; R. L. Benton, 1932—1942; J. W. Turner, 1942—1952; L. C. Evans, 1952—1966; B. E. Leach, 1966—1986; Cyril Miller, 1986— .

Southwestern Union Record, The SOUTHWESTERN UNION RECORD, THE (1902— , until Jan. 1, 1936, as Southwestern Union Record; then until 1966 as The Record, reverting at that time to the original name. Biweekly; file in GC). Official organ of the Southwestern Union Conference.

Spain

SPAIN. A country located in the southwestern part of Europe. It is joined with Portugal, and both together constitute the Iberian Peninsula. Spanish territory is made up of 194,880 square miles (504,740 square kilometers), including the Balearic Islands in the Mediterranean and the Canary Islands in the Atlantic Ocean. Its population (1994) is 39.3 million. The predominant religion is Roman Catholicism. There are a large number of agnostics and about 300,000 Protestants. Within the past few years a growing number of Asian religions have been penetrating at a rapid pace into Spain.

Spain's first inhabitants were the Celts and Iberians. A vast number of Phoenicians and Carthaginians settled in the south of Spain. In all likelihood, the Tartessian Empire was located there, the land to which Jonah wanted to go in order to get as far away as possible from Nineveh. The Romans made the Tartessian Empire part of their empire. The most important Roman ruins are found in Italica, Seville, Mérida, Segovia (the Aqueduct), and in Tarragona. In the eighth century, the Iberian Peninsula was invaded by the Arabs and occupied until 1492, when the king and queen of Spain reconquered Granada and expelled them from Spain. During that same year Christopher Columbus with his three ships discovered America. The Spanish Inquisition was established in Spain in 1478 before the Protestant Reformation began to take form in Europe and penetrate into Spain. Casidoro de Reina and Cipriano de Valera, monks of the Convent San Isidoro del Campo near Seville, translated the Protestant Bible into Castilian Spanish.

In 1931 the first Spanish republic was established along with a constitution that recognized the Roman Catholic Church as the official religion in Spain. The Spanish Civil War, 1936—1939, reestablished the Roman Catholic Church in its dominant position and it became the official state religion. During a period of 40 years General Francisco Franco governed the country. During this time the Seventh-day Adventist Church suffered many difficulties until 1975. After the dictator died, the monarchy was reestablished with King Juan Carlos I and Queen Sofia on the throne. The Adventist Church has participated at many cultural meetings when Queen Sofia has been present.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The Spanish Union of Churches is made up of the territory of Spain, with Gibraltar, Andorra, and the Canary Islands. It is an atypical union in that it is composed of churches and not of missions or conferences. It belongs to the Euro-Africa Division, with headquarters in Berne, Switzerland. Statistics (1992): churches, 56, and nine groups that meet regularly; members, 5,964; ordained ministers, 27; licensed ministers, 13; colporteurs, 29. Headquarters: Madrid.

Institutions

Institutions. Christian education plays an important role. A school in Sagunto, Valencia, had 671 students and 61 employees in 1992. Classes that prepare students for admittance into the university include a theology program, a language and culture program for foreign students, and teaching courses. The school also offers university courses. There are three elementary schools located in Barcelona, Madrid, and Zaragoza, with a total of 550 students attending. The printing house, Editorial Safeliz, with headquarters in Madrid, produces books and magazines for the union and for the American market. Granovita is an institution that provides food products, with its headquarters in Valencia. In Cardedeu, near Barcelona, there is the rest home Maranatha, with 40 residents.

Seventh-day Adventist Work

Seventh-day Adventist Work. Begin-nings. The territory of Spain was assigned to the Latin Union Conference when it was organized in 1902, but SDAs had not yet entered that country. The organizing session of the new union conference, held in Geneva, Switzerland, in July, recommended taking immediate steps to enter Spain and Portugal. As a result, B. G. Wilkinson, Jean Vuilleumier, and Jules Robert were sent in February and March 1903, to survey the possibilities and to evaluate prospects for evangelism in Spain, giving special attention to the large cities of Barcelona and Madrid. On his return, Jules Robert wrote: "After a stay of four weeks in Spain, we have only good reports to give of this country, in regard to the facilities for evangelization, because, in spite of existing conditions, God has opened a way" (in Messenger de la Prophétie, May 1903, p. 43).

During the summer of 1903 Frank Bond and his brother, Walter, who volunteered to pioneer SDA work in Spain, arrived from California and settled in Barcelona, capital of Catalonia. Despite language difficulties (the people spoke Catalan) they went to work, using their meager knowledge of Spanish. In October they moved to Sabadell, a nearby town, where they opened a school. In June 1904 three people were baptized, one of them being José Abella, who later worked successfully as a minister in North Africa and Portugal. A little later Maria Serra Casals and her daughter, Lola, who became a Bible instructor, joined the church by baptism. Lola Casals was the first Spanish Bible instructor.

In 1904 William Robinson and his wife came from England to take charge of the work in Spain. He and Frank Bond went to Barcelona, while Walter Bond remained in Sabadell. After a brief return to America, Walter Bond returned in 1905 to become the leader of the work, a responsibility that he carried until his death. In 1906 Frank Bond was transferred to the city of Valencia.

SDA publications played an important part in the work in Spain. At the Latin Union session held in 1906, Walter Bond reported that in four months tracts totaling 108,000 pages had been sold and that an additional 17,000 pages had been given away. The report of 1907 contained the names of several colporteurs, among whom were Joaquim Matas, Lope Nicolas, and J. Vicente Garcia.

At the end of 1907 there were 29 Seventh-day Adventist church members in Spain. Through strenuous efforts, and often in spite of strong opposition, especially in the villages, continuous progress was made. In 1909 new colporteurs were added, among them Salvador Iserte, Sr., and Pedro Sanz.

In 1911, after John L. Brown arrived from Mexico to direct the colporteur work, a new impetus was given this branch of church activities. Through the years thousands of large books have been sold in all the mainland provinces of Spain and in the Balearic and the Canary islands, also in Spanish Morocco. Especially successful was the sale of the health book Guia Practica de la Salud (“Practical Guide to Health”), but religious books were sold also.

In 1910 the first general meeting of the Spanish Mission was held. During the winter of 1911—1912, evangelistic meetings were held in Barcelona, Cartagena, and Murcia, with the Barcelona church membership reaching 47. At the third annual meeting held at the end of August 1912, it was decided to begin work in the province of Jaen. At the end of 1912 the total membership in Spain was 114. About this time Lope Nicolas, V. J. Garcia, and Pedro Sanz, who had been working for several years as colporteurs, entered the ministry.

In 1914 several workers died: Lola Casals, a Bible instructor; Walter Bond, the mission director; Lope Nicolas, an evangelist; and the following year E. F. Forga, from Peru, who had served as an editor and translator for the mission. By the end of 1916 there were seven churches and companies in Spain with 169 baptized members. Little work had been done in Madrid, the capital. Hans Struve settled there in 1924.

The Spanish Mission was a part of the Latin Union Conference until 1926, when with Portugal it became the Iberian Union Mission. At that time Spain was divided into the East Spanish Mission, with headquarters in Barcelona, and the West Spanish Mission, with headquarters in Madrid. These missions were reunited in 1932 as the Spanish Mission (after 1939 a detached mission of the Southern European Division). In 1952 the name was changed to Spanish Church. The Barcelona Publishing House (see Safeliz Publishing House) was organized by L. E. Borle in 1915. For more than 20 years it published a monthly paper, Las Señales de los Tiempos (“The Signs of the Times”), and also a church paper, until the civil war ended such activity in 1936. In 1940 the church was restarted with 245 members, according to the records of that year.

During the 1940s, under the presidency of I. Aguilar, a new thrust in expanding the SDA mission took place. Colporteurs began their work with a small publishing house in Madrid. The doors of Excelsior Academy on Calle Alenza were opened, and theology classes were offered to the first pastors of the postwar era. The school was closed by the police until 1965, when it reopened once again. In 1967 a seminary was opened in Valencia and later moved to Sagunto, where it remains. In 1952 the Editorial Safeliz officially opened with a capital of 150,000 pesetas financed by five pastors. In 1988 Editorial Safeliz became the property of the Spanish Adventist Union. Two establishments, Granovita and Maranatha were founded after that. All four establishments are enjoying a prosperous economy.

In the 1960s Angel Codejón, president of the Spanish church, began work in the area of religious liberty. As a result, the church began to receive official permission for all churches to function and hold services.

With the new Spanish constitution the church was given total liberty in October 1978. Gone are the days when young men were incarcerated for being faithful to their religion while in the army. In 1976 Her Majesty Queen Sofia of Spain visited the Adventist church of Alenza in Madrid.

By 1993 the church was taking full advantage of its religious liberty to hold meetings of all kinds, including stop-smoking clinics and public evangelistic efforts, in all parts of Spain. In 1987 all Spanish SDA workers were allowed to join the Social Security system. In October 1992 the Spanish Union signed the Agreement of Cooperation With the State of Spain. In July 1993 membership surpassed the 6,000 mark.

Spalding, Arthur Whitefield

SPALDING, ARTHUR WHITEFIELD (1877—1953). Educator, author, editor. At 14 years of age he began secretarial work for R. M. Kilgore, continued with J. H. and W. K. Kellogg, and, during his college days, with E. A. Sutherland of Battle Creek College. He married Maud Wolcott in 1899.

As an educator he was head of the English Department of Emmanuel Missionary College (1903—1906), principal of Bethel Academy (1907—1909), cofounder (with Sidney Brownsberger) of the Fletcher Institute, principal of the Elmshaven school (1913), and principal of the Hurlburt Rural Training School (1916—1917). He was editor of the Watchman Magazine from 1918 to 1921.

From 1922 to 1941, as founder and secretary of the Home Commission of the General Conference, Spalding gave much attention to working for youth and children. As early as 1919 he had formed a Mission Scouts organization and had been active in junior camp work.

He wrote much throughout his lifetime, chiefly for young people, but also on a history of the Seventh-day Adventist Church. Among his 30 books are Days of Youth, Footprints of the Pioneers, Makers of the Home, Man of Valor, The Measure of a Man, Men of the Mountains, and Origin and History of Seventh-day Adventists.

Spanish-American Seminary

SPANISH-AMERICAN SEMINARY. See Sandia View Academy.

Spanish-American Training School

SPANISH-AMERICAN TRAINING SCHOOL. See Thunderbird Academy.

Spanish Food Factory

SPANISH FOOD FACTORY (Granovita). A food factory located at Sagunto, Spain, on the campus of the college. Founded in 1984, it started with six employees and a turnover of $100,900. The idea to set up a health food industry came from the food department of the college. Despite many difficulties, the company developed its activities and in 1992 reached a turnover of $1,460,000. Main products are cereals, soy milk, meat substitutes, fruit bars. The total range includes 108 different products.

Managers: Santos Garcia, 1984—1986; Oscar Bel, 1986—1991; José L. Gómez, 1991— .

Spanish Publishing House

SPANISH PUBLISHING HOUSE. See Safeliz Publishing House.

Spanish Sahara

SPANISH SAHARA. See Western Sahara.

Spanish Union of Churches

SPANISH UNION OF CHURCHES. See Andorra; Euro-Africa Division; Gibraltar; Spain.

Sparrow, Hubert Martin

SPARROW, HUBERT MARTIN (1891—1960). South African missionary. Born into a Seventh-day Adventist home near Grahamstown, South Africa, he entered Claremont Union (now Helderberg) College and was baptized in 1906. Two years later he interrupted his studies and spent two years at the Maranatha Mission in Kaffirland. There he set his eyes on the mission fields to the north. Returning, he graduated in 1912 from the theological-normal course, and then proceeded to Natal and taught a church school.

In 1914 he went north to work as a teacher and then as out-school inspector at Inyazura and Lower Gwelo missions and in 1918 to Solusi Mission, where he became principal of the station. In 1921 he was ordained to the ministry.

Sparrow went to the United States and spent three years at Emmanuel Missionary College, receiving his B.A. and B.Th. degrees. Returning to Solusi in 1927, he again took up his position as principal, but in 1929 he was called to superintend the Southern Rhodesian Mission Field and a year later the Northern Rhodesian.

In 1933 Sparrow became president of the South-East Africa Union Mission, with headquarters in Blantyre. New missions were opened up at Lake View in Angoniland, and at Munguluni, the only station established in Portuguese East Africa.

From 1941 to 1943 he administered the Tanganyika Mission Field (at that time part of the Northern European Division). Then, under the Southern African Division, he was the first president of the East African Union, serving eight years.

Broken in health after nearly 40 years in the tropics, where the Sparrows buried two of their children and where travel and work under all types of conditions had taken a toll, they retired in 1950 to the south coast of Natal. However, Sparrow was soon conducting cottage meetings and taking a leading part in the construction of a modest church building for a new company.

Spectrum

SPECTRUM. A quarterly, interdisciplinary journal of opinion, scholarship, and creative writing. Published by the Association of Adventist Forums, the journal states as its purpose: “To encourage Seventh-day Adventist participation in the discussion of contemporary issues from a Christian viewpoint, to look without prejudice to all sides of a subject, to evaluate the merits of diverse views and to foster Christian intellectual and cultural growth.”

From its first appearance in 1969 through its first five years of publication more than 200 individuals from different areas of the Seventh-day Adventist community contributed to its pages. Most contributors have been academics teaching in SDA schools. Persistent topics have been: the relation of science to religion, especially with respect to Creation; the relation of church to state; the role and authority of Ellen White; the structure of Seventh-day Adventist financing, especially education.

Spectrum was conceived initially by Roy Branson, associate professor of Christian ethics at Andrews University.

Editors: Molleurus Couperus, 1969—1975; Ray Branson and Charles Scriven, 1975—1978; Roy Branson, 1978— .

Speech and Hearing Association of Seventh-day Adventists

SPEECH AND HEARING ASSOCIATION OF SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS.

A former organization of Seventh-day Adventist professionals in speech pathology and audiology. Purposes of the association were to contribute to the evangelistic outreach of the church among those with disabilities, to provide information about training programs to interested students, to provide information to denominational institutions about qualified professionals available for employment, to encourage and devise ways to extend services to language-, speech-, and hearing-impaired Seventh-day Adventist members and their families, and to provide Christian fellowship for SDA students majoring in these professions at nondenominational schools.

The organization was established in San Francisco, California, in 1972 with a charter membership of 44. Representatives of four SDA colleges and three hospitals elected as the first officers: president, Norma K. Bork, Ph.D.; secretary-treasurer, Norma S. Parker, M.S.; and editor-public relations, Roy Hartbauer, Ph.D.

Membership was open to any SDA serving or in training for professions in speech pathology and/or audiology. Those in allied professions, such as education of those with a hearing disability, education of those with learning disabilities, or physical therapy, and parents or others responsible for the care of disabled persons could become affiliate members.

Regional representatives who advised and assisted the local conferences in utilization of the unique services of the members were organized into a house of delegates and were advisory to the executive committee. The association published a quarterly newsletter, SHASDA News, and maintained a directory of SDA professionals.

Meetings of the association were held in conjunction with the annual meeting of the American Speech and Hearing Association.

Spicer Memorial College

SPICER MEMORIAL COLLEGE. A coeducational residential institution owned and operated by the Southern Asia Division offering baccalaureate- and master's-level programs. The college is situated on 78 acres (32 hectares) of land bordered by the Mula River, the government botanical gardens, the village of Aundh, and the University of Poona. The city of Pune (formerly Poona) is located in western India, about 110 miles (180 kilometers) southeast from Bombay.

Spicer College offers four-year curricula leading to bachelor's degrees in accountancy, agriculture, biology, botany, business administration, chemistry, computer science, economics, elementary education, English, geography, graphic arts, Hindi, history, home economics, Indian history, industrial arts education, industrial arts technology, management, mathematics, Occidental applied music, Occidental music, office administration, physics, psychology, religious history, religious philosophy, social service, and zoology.

The Schools of Business, Education, and Religion also offer two-year curricula leading to master's degrees and diplomas in business administration, theology, Old Testament Studies, New Testament Studies, elementary education, and secondary education. Plans are under way to add an M.A. in pastoral ministry.

The college provides opportunities for student employment and industrial education in auto mechanics, bakery and confectionery production, carpentry, farming and vegetable production, metal construction, printing, processed food production, and refrigeration.

In 1992, enrollment was 837 students at the undergraduate level, with a faculty of 86, and 132 at the graduate level, with a faculty of 14. The enrollment at the high school and plus-two levels was 398, with a faculty of 26; and at the two elementary schools, 502, with 28 teachers. Total enrollment of full and part-time students exceeded 2,000.

History

History. In 1915 two institutions were established to provide advanced training for Indian youth. In July G. G. Lowry started the South India Training School in Coimbatore, and in November I. F. Blue founded the Indian Christian Training School at Lucknow, apparently to serve the entire country. The school in Coimbatore drew students from Nazareth, Pondicherry, Coimbatore, and Andhra, whereas the school in Lucknow attracted students from Burma, Nazareth, Andhra, Bombay, the North, and the Northwest.

The school in Coimbatore was moved to Bangalore in 1918, and in 1920, following the plan that this South India Training School should be the most advanced of the schools in south India, a one-year post-high school course in Bible was added. In 1922 the South India Training School moved to Krishnarajapuram, just outside Bangalore.

Meanwhile, in 1919 the India Union Mission was reorganized into the Southern Asia Division, with headquarters at Lucknow. The same year the school at Lucknow closed, and its students transferred to Hapur and Lasalgaon, two institutions founded that year. The high school section at Lasalgaon was later transferred to Spicer College in 1944.

By 1937 the Division Council affirmed that apart from Vincent Hill School and College (an institution primarily for children of missionaries and domiciled Europeans) in the north, and the South India Training School, all other schools would restrict their instruction to the high school level. The South India Training School was upgraded to junior college status and renamed Spicer College in honor of the pioneer William Spicer. The institution was immediately placed under the direct care of the division and designated to serve all the unions of Southern Asia.

In 1942 the college was moved to its present location in Pune, nine miles (14 kilometers) from the division headquarters, and the following year renamed Spicer Missionary College. In 1946 Spicer was elevated to senior college status and offered four-year curricula in theology, education, history, business administration, and English.

In 1948 an elementary school opened on campus, and in 1955 the college was renamed Spicer Memorial College. About 1966 the SASDA food factory, a division institution on an adjoining area, was attached to the college. The food factory, constructed largely of prefabricated metal, houses the metal construction industry as well as several departments of food processing.

Publications include the student monthly newspaper, the Spicerian, started in 1948, and the annual pictorial, the Oreodoxa, started on the golden jubilee of the college, 1965. In that year a book on the 50 years of history was written by George R. Jenson and published by the college.

Accreditation

Accreditation. Spicer College is fully accredited by the General Conference Board of Regents, and authorized to offer undergraduate and graduate programs. Since 1966 the University of Poona has been accepting graduates of this college for master's level studies. At the present time this practice is being followed up by other Indian universities as well. In 1993 some of Spicer's M.A. graduates were enrolled at the University of Poona for doctoral studies.

In 1980 Spicer College was approved as an examination center of Andrews University, and schools of Religion, Education, and Business Administration were organized to offer master's degrees conferred by Andrews University, and master's diplomas from Spicer.

The Association of Indian Universities in 1992 announced that college work done at Spicer was to be considered equivalent to that of any Indian university.

Principals/Presidents: G. G. Lowry, 1915—1918; E. M. Meleen, 1918—1924; O. A. Skau, 1924—1930; L. B. Losey, 1930—1938; E. W. Pohlman, 1938—1944; M. O. Manley, 1944—1946; C. A. Schutt, 1946—1949; I. D. Higgins, 1949—1955; R. E. Rice, 1955—1963; M. E. Cherian, 1963—1990; D. R. Bankhead (acting), 1990; N. O. Matthews, 1990—1994; W. Gordon Jenson, 1994— .

Spicer Memorial College Higher Secondary School

SPICER MEMORIAL COLLEGE HIGHER SECONDARY SCHOOL. See Spicer Memorial College.

Spicer, William Ambrose

SPICER, WILLIAM AMBROSE (1865—1952). Missionary, editor, administrator. Born into a Seventh Day Baptist home, he early became a Seventh-day Adventist and at 16 was employed as a callboy at the Battle Creek Sanitarium, later as a secretary to Dr. J. H. Kellogg, the medical superintendent of that institution. He went to England in 1887 as secretary to S. N. Haskell. While there, he served for a time on the editorial staff of the Present Truth. There he married Georgia Eleanora Harper, whom he had met at Battle Creek Sanitarium when she was taking nurse's training. He returned to America in 1892 as foreign mission secretary of the General Conference, and the next year helped to establish Solusi Mission in Matabeleland on 12,000 acres (4,900 hectares) of land obtained from Cecil Rhodes, then prime minister of Cape Colony.

In 1898 he went to India and the next year became editor of the newly founded Oriental Watchman. He also became leader of Seventh-day Adventist work in India. He was the only ordained SDA minister in Southern Asia at that time. In 1901 he was appointed secretary to the Mission Board at Battle Creek, Michigan, becoming in 1903 secretary of the General Conference.

When A. G. Daniells relinquished the presidency of the General Conference in 1922, Spicer succeeded him and held the office until 1930. He then served as general field secretary of the General Conference until his retirement in 1940. He continued as associate editor of the Review and Herald, and for a short time was its editor.

Spicer wrote continuously for the Review and Herald for 50 years, and produced numerous books, such as Our Day in the Light of Prophecy, Miracles of Modern Missions, The Hand That Intervenes, and The Spirit of Prophecy in the Advent Movement.

He is remembered as a man of the people, inspiring confidence by his simple habits and reports of mission experiences. Only four years (according to one record, two years), between 1900 and 1940, did not find him overseas inspecting or supervising the rapidly expanding world program of the church.

Spies, Frederick W.

SPIES, FREDERICK W. (1866—1935). Missionary, administrator. He was born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. After becoming a Seventh-day Adventist at 22 years of age, he entered the colporteur work and four years later was appointed director of the colporteur work in Germany. Shortly after being ordained to the ministry, he was sent in 1896 to Brazil as one of the first Seventh-day Adventist missionaries in that country. He served as director of the Brazil Mission and was president of the Brazil Union from its inception in 1911 until its division in 1918 into the South Brazil Union and the East Brazil Union. Spies then became president of the former for several years. In 1923 he became president of the East Brazil Union Mission and in 1927 manager of the Brazil Publishing House. He remained there until his retirement in 1933.

Spion Kop College

SPION KOP COLLEGE. See Helderberg College.

Spion Kop Missionary Institution

SPION KOP MISSIONARY INSTITUTION. See Bethel College.

Spirit

SPIRIT. The translation of the Heb. rûach, “spirit,” “wind,” “breath,” and of the Gr. pneuma, “wind.”

God is declared to be a “Spirit” (John 4:24). The Holy Spirit is the third person of the Godhead. Angels are “ministering spirits” (Heb. 1:14). With respect to human beings, “spirit” is the vital, animating force that characterizes a living person. Rûach is sometimes translated “breath” (Gen. 7:15; Job 9:18; etc.), breath being a readily observed and conclusive evidence of the presence of life.

At death the invisible life force leaves the body (Gen. 7:22; cf. Job 27:3; Ps. 104:29). The spirit returns to God who gave it (Eccl. 12:7; cf. Acts 7:59). Seventh-day Adventists have sometimes identified the spirit, which leaves the body at death, with simply the breath. For example, the expression in Luke 23:46 “he gave up the ghost” (Gr. exepneusen) is literally “he expired,” or “he breathed out.” On the other hand, the spirit that returns to God has also been identified with the character: “Our personal identity is preserved in the resurrection, though not the same particles of matter or material substance as went into the grave. The wondrous works of God are a mystery to man. The spirit, the character of man, is returned to God, there to be preserved. In the resurrection every man will have his own character” (Ellen White, in SDACom 6:1093).

However, the Scriptures nowhere indicate that a human’s “spirit” exists as an intelligent entity, apart from the physical brain and nervous system. In fact, quite the contrary is repeatedly and emphatically affirmed (Ps. 146:3, 4; Eccl. 9:5, 6, 10; etc.). The concept of the spirit’s being capable of independent, intelligent, conscious, personal existence apart from the body was derived from pagan Greek philosophy and was introduced into the Christian church in the early centuries of the Christian Era by theologians of the church in Alexandria, Egypt, who adopted Platonic philosophy and blended it with Christian doctrine. See Death; Eternal Life; Immortality; Resurrection; Soul.

Spirit of Prophecy

SPIRIT OF PROPHECY. An expression in Rev. 19:10 used by Seventh-day Adventists with several meanings. The text declares, “The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.” This means that Jesus is witnessing to the church through the medium of prophecy. James White interpreted this verse as follows in his Life Sketches: “The spirit, soul, and substance of prophecy, is the testimony of Jesus Christ. Or, the voice of the prophets relative to the plan and work of human redemption, is the voice of the Redeemer. Christ undertook the work of redemption, and who should inspire a book upon the subject but the Redeemer Himself?” (1880 ed., pp. 335, 336).

By extension of meaning, G. I. Butler, longtime president of the General Conference, defined the term spirit of prophecy as “that spirit which causes certain persons to prophesy.” “This Spirit,” he wrote, “comes upon certain ones. They speak as they are moved upon by this Spirit. Future events or things necessary for the well-being of the church to know are thus revealed” (Review and Herald 43:193, June 2, 1874; cf. 3SG 56).

By still further extension, Seventh-day Adventists apply the term spirit of prophecy to the operation of the gift of prophecy, one of the “gifts” of the Spirit (see 1 Cor. 12:4, 7—11, 28; Eph. 4:11—13), and thus to the literary productions of Ellen G. White, a cofounder of the church and one whom Seventh-day Adventists regard as having been the recipient of the gift of prophecy in the Bible sense of a duly accredited and authoritative spokesperson for God.

Definition of “the testimony of Jesus” as “the spirit of prophecy” in Rev. 19:10 characterizes possession of the gift as one of two specific marks for identifying “the remnant” church brought to view in Rev. 12:17: “And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.” The gift of prophecy, which came to Ellen Harmon (White) in 1844, confirmed the faith of Seventh-day Adventist pioneers in their movement as the one portrayed in this Bible prophecy, as the remnant of the seed of the woman in earth’s last days, a church that keeps “the Commandments of God” and in which was manifested “the testimony of Jesus Christ,” or the “spirit of prophecy” (James White, in the Review and Herald 7:172, Feb. 28, 1856). SDA pioneers similarly recognized the prophecy of Joel 2:28—32, with its reference to the last days, to “the remnant,” and to the manifestation of the gift of prophecy, as an appropriate inspired description of their own experience (R. F. Cottrell, in Review and Herald 11:126, Feb. 25, 1858).

The Spirit of Prophecy is the name of four volumes in which Mrs. White presented a sequence of Bible biographies (1870—1884). This set was the forerunner of her present five-volume Conflict of the Ages Series (see White, Ellen G., Writings of).

Relation to the Bible. In accord with the historic Protestant position, Seventh-day Adventists accept the Bible and the Bible only as the Christian’s rule of faith and practice, and believe it to be in its entirety the true, reliable, and authoritative word of God in human language (see Bible; Inspiration of Scriptures). Seventh-day Adventists acknowledge the prophetic gift apart from the Sacred Canon as having operated prior to, during, and since the composition of the Bible, but affirm that the canonical Scriptures constitute the norm by which all other prophetic messages are to be tested. They believe that this gift has never been permanently withdrawn, but has been manifested now and again throughout history, and belongs to the church today. The canon of Scripture is God's message to all people of all ages; extracanonical revelation belongs to those to whom it is originally addressed.

Seventh-day Adventists accept Ellen White's writings as representing the work of the prophetic gift, but not as taking the place of the Bible or as constituting an addition to it. That is the view that she herself maintained: "Brother J would confuse the mind by seeking to make it appear that the light God has given through the Testimonies is an addition to the word of God, but in this he presents the matter in a false light. God has seen fit in this manner to bring the minds of His people to His word to give them a clearer understanding of it" (4T 246).

"The word of God is sufficient to enlighten the most beclouded mind and may be understood by those who have any desire to understand it. . . . To leave men and women without excuse God gives plain and pointed testimonies, bringing them back to the word that they have neglected" (2T 454, 455).

"The written testimonies are not to give new light, but to impress vividly upon the heart the truths of inspiration already revealed" (ibid. 605).

Ellen White referred to her counsels as "a lesser light to lead men and women to the greater light" (Review and Herald 80:15, Jan. 20, 1903).

"The Spirit was not given—nor can it ever be bestowed—to supersede the Bible; for the Scriptures explicitly state that the word of God is the standard by which all teaching and experience must be tested" (GC vii).

In a foreword to volume 1 of Ellen White's Spiritual Gifts (1858), Roswell F. Cottrell stated the substance of what has ever since been the denominational position with respect to the gift of prophecy as manifested in Mrs. White. Cottrell recognized the unique position of the Bible as the criterion by which all claims to prophesying must be evaluated. By various texts (Mark 16:15—18; Matt. 28:19, 20; 1 Cor. 12:28; 13:8—13; Eph. 4:11—13; 1 Thess. 5:19—21; Joel 2:28—32; Rev. 12:17; cf. 19:10; 22:9; 1 Cor. 1:4—7) he demonstrated that the Bible itself points to a continuing divine-human channel of communication, and particularly to a renewal of the gifts of the Spirit preceding the promised return of Christ to this earth.

Spirit of Prophecy Committee

SPIRIT OF PROPHECY COMMITTEE. A committee that, under the guidance of the General Conference Committee, promotes the circulation of the Ellen G. White books and publications and initiates plans for new compilations when needed. It is composed of 10 members—General Conference officers (one of whom is chair), trustees of the Ellen G. White Estate, and others—and is appointed by the General Conference at the beginning of each administrative quinquennium.

The General Conference recognizes its responsibility to plan creatively and continuously so that the writings of Ellen G. White may be made available for circulation among Seventh-day Adventists, members of other communions, and persons of little or no religious profession. These works are published currently in some 124 books in English, as well as in numerous other languages and dialects of the peoples of the world. For example, Steps to Christ has been translated into about 132 languages, The Great Controversy into 53, The Ministry of Healing into 22, and Thoughts From the Mount of Blessing into 31. The counsels, instructions, and inspiration of these books have proved to be of major importance in the founding and administering of the church's educational, medical, and publishing institutions throughout the world. Understanding the Bible is also greatly aided by the comments and counsels of these writings. The pastoral value of these books has been well demonstrated in the personal Christian living and service of millions of people worldwide.

Promotion of the circulation of the Ellen G. White books and publications is carried on continuously through the ministry of the church in its pastoral and evangelistic activities and by special field visitation on the part of church leaders, including representatives of the Ellen G. White Estate. In addition, pamphlets and tracts are made available for new members and congregations to acquaint them with the relationship and contribution of the work and writings of Ellen G. White to the Seventh-day Adventist Church. From time to time articles are published in denominational periodicals on special aspects of the subject.

Each year a special program on the subject of the Spirit of Prophecy is prepared and supplied for use in a regular Sabbath-day worship service in all SDA churches and companies, usually in the month of October.

The Spirit of Prophecy Committee carries on a continuous program of survey and assessment through the regular administrative channels. This survey work envisages making the Ellen G. White works available to all people in their own language. Each year a budget provision is made by the General Conference for translating and printing Ellen G. White writings in new languages. The committee accepts applications for these funds from the world divisions, and recommends disbursement by the General Conference Executive Committee according to policy.

The committee works in close cooperation and coordination with the Ellen G. White Estate, which is directly responsible for certain parts of the program, such as preparing new compilations, deciding on abridgments, conducting research in connection with compilations and abridgments, and obtaining and maintaining copyrights.

The committee carries on its varied activities at the world headquarters of the SDA Church, in Silver Spring, Maryland, as a part of the denomination's general administrative activity.

Spiritism (Spiritualism)

SPIRITISM (Spiritualism). The belief and practice of communication with the spirits, supposedly of the dead; a modern movement that began with the Fox sisters in 1848. Early Seventh-day Adventist writings denounce the “Rochester rappings” or “spirit manifestations,” but not until the 1850s do they refer to this movement as “what is called Spiritualism, or Spirit Manifestations” (Review and Herald 4:58, Aug. 28, 1853; cf. ibid. 4:34, July 21, 1853). Seventh-day Adventists are effectively protected against spiritism by their belief in the natural mortality of humans and their insensate, unconscious state in death.

The law of Moses strictly forbade attempts to communicate with the dead through spirit mediums: “Regard not them that have familiar spirits, neither seek after wizards, to be defiled by them” (Lev. 19:31), and Jeremiah warned against the deceptions of “enchanters” and “sorcerers” (Jer. 27:9–10). Witches were to be executed (Lev. 20:27).

Communication with the dead is impossible, because “the dead know not any thing” (Eccl. 9:5). Their mental processes cease at death (v. 6). Accordingly, communications pretending to come from the dead are a fraud (Jer. 27:9, 10). Seventh-day Adventists expect a revival of interest in communication with the spirits in the last days, with special emphasis on miracle working (Rev. 13:13, 14; 16:13, 14; cf. 2 Thess. 2:9, 10).

Modern Spiritism had its beginning in the mysterious raps heard in 1848 in the home of a farmer named Fox in Hydesville, New York. As early as 1849 Seventh-day Adventists warned that the power manifested was that of Satan (EW 43, 86).

The Review and Herald [3:108] for Oct. 28, 1852, printed a letter of E. R. Seaman, of Rochester, New York, who warned of the danger of consulting with “familiar spirits” who represented themselves as the spirits of departed friends. In his opinion, this subject was of greater importance “than some may suppose.”

A few months later David Arnold, an SDA minister, declared: “Spiritualism has taken from Satan his personality, and given him an existence only in the shape of the carnal propensities of fallen man” (ibid. 4:34, July 21, 1853).

Further in his article Arnold said: “Satan with his legions of fallen angels, or spirits of Devils, is working through . . . the so-called spirit manifestations, to ‘deceive the whole world,’ and if possible the very elect” (ibid. 4:36).

In the Aug. 4, 1853, issue of the Review and Herald (4:43), James White said he believed that “the time has come that a portion of the Review should be devoted to the exposition of those prophecies that refer to these [spiritistic] manifestations.” Accordingly, a series of articles entitled “Signs of the Times,” in the Review and Herald during August and September 1853 listed “spirit manifestations” as one of the several signs of the imminence of Christ’s return (ibid. 4:58ff., Aug. 28, 1853). He pointed out that a preacher who believed in humans’ innate immortality would be in an awkward position if he opposed the spirits’ claim to be the spirits of departed loved ones.

R. F. Cottrell, a former Seventh Day Baptist minister who became an SDA in 1851, wrote in August 1853: “The ‘spirits’ give it out as one of their first objects ‘to convince skeptics of the immortality of the soul.’ . . .

“Thousands of professed Christians have been convinced, by Bible testimony, of the opposite doctrine [the unconsciousness of humans in death], within the last ten years” (ibid. 4:157, Nov. 22, 1853).

From May 6, 1852, through Oct. 30, 1855, the Review and Herald was published in Rochester, New York, and it is probable that the geographical proximity of this city, which is usually considered the birthplace of modern Spiritism, was an important factor in the strong emphasis given by Seventh-day Adventists on humans’ unconsciousness in death and SDAs’ vigorous opposition to the then-rising teachings of Spiritism. See also Death; Immortality; Storrs, George.

Spiritual Gifts

SPIRITUAL GIFTS. The gifts of the Holy Spirit mentioned in 1 Cor. 12:28 and Eph. 4:11. As summarized in the latter text they are apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers. They are said to function “for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ” (Eph. 4:12). The list in Corinthians (omitting pastors) adds the following: “miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.” These gifts were bestowed upon the church at Christ’s ascension (Eph. 4:8, 11). They were needed in the early church to confirm the testimony of the early apostles (see Heb. 2:4) and to provide guidance and leadership in the young congregations.

In discussing spiritual gifts, Seventh-day Adventists have stressed the fact that the Holy Spirit will continue operating in the church until the Second Advent, so that He might be expected to use any of the gifts at any time. On the basis of Rev. 12:17 and 19:10 Seventh-day Adventists have held that the gift of prophecy would be manifested in the remnant church (see Spirit of Prophecy). See also Miracles.

Spiritualism (method of interpretation)

SPIRITUALISM [1] (method of interpretation). A “spiritual,” or nonliteral, view, as a principle of philosophy or religion. The term was used at first by the pioneer Seventh-day Adventists in the sense of a spiritualized interpretation of Scripture, and was applied to the doctrine of a “spiritual” Second Advent instead of a literal, personal coming. This kind of “spiritualism” had nothing whatever to do with the movement that began several years later in the 1848 Rochester “rappings” of the Fox sisters, and that afterward became known as Spiritualism (see Spiritism).

The terms spiritualizers and spiritualizing had already been used by the Millerites, and by other premillennialists, to describe the postmillennialists, who held that the millennial reign of Christ is to be a spiritual reign, a glorious triumph of the church, and that the Second Advent is either figurative or deferred to the end of the millennium (see Premillennialism). After 1844 these terms came to be applied to one of the splinter groups of the Millerite movement.

“Spiritualizing” Millerites After 1844. A part of the minority who still held, in opposition to Miller, Himes, and the majority group, that the 1844 movement had been valid and that October 1844 had marked a fulfillment of prophecy, became known as “spiritualizers,” or “spiritualists.” These were the extreme ex-Millerite wing; they insisted not only that the time had been correct but also that the expected event had taken place; that is, that the Second Advent had occurred. Christ had come, they contended, not literally, personally, and visibly, but “spiritually,” in the person of His saints.

Joseph Bates, who wrote his first little book, The Opening Heavens (May 1846), “to correct, or ‘rebuke’ the spiritual views . . . in respect to the appearing and kingdom” of Christ, spoke in his preface of many “who have been looking for the personal appearing of the Lord Jesus from heaven in these last days,” but have in their disappointment “given up the only Scriptural view and are now teaching that he has come in spirit and this is all we shall ever see of him here.” These “spiritualizers” claimed that they had already entered the kingdom, spiritually, of course, and were to execute judgment. Some of them professed sinlessness; some refused to work, since they were in the millennial Sabbath, some embraced celibacy, while others claimed “spiritual wives”; numbers of them soon went over to the Shakers (including Enoch Jacobs, editor of the Day-Star, who had formerly opposed the spiritual views). The “spiritualizers” never formed a cohesive or permanent group.

Apparently it was some of the “spiritualizing” fanatics, who claimed that the Second Advent had already occurred, whom Ellen White encountered in New England and described as follows: “In the period of disappointment after the passing of the time in 1844, fanaticism in various forms arose. Some held that the resurrection of the righteous dead had already taken place. I was sent to bear a message to those believing this. . . . I went into their meetings. There was much excitement, with noise and confusion. One could not tell what was piped or what was harped. Some appeared to be in vision, and fell to the floor. Others were jumping, dancing, and shouting. They declared that as their flesh was purified, they were ready for translation. This they repeated again and again. I bore my testimony in the name of the Lord, placing His rebuke upon these manifestations” (2SM 34).

“Spiritualism” Opposed by Seventh-day Adventist Pioneers. The Adventist founders belonged to the opposite minority class of the ex-Millerites who held to the validity of 1844; like the “spiritualizers,” and unlike the main body, they said that their prophetic interpretation had been correct as to the time. But unlike the “spiritualizers,” they admitted that they had been mistaken as to the event expected; that Christ had not come to this earth in any sense. Instead, they held, He had entered another phase of His ministry in heaven, typified by the Day of Atonement, which would be followed by the Second Advent, a personal, literal, visible event. Holding the median position between both extremes, they charged the “nominal Adventists,” the majority group, with abandoning the 1844 movement and denounced the “spiritualizers” for their fanaticism and their denial that the Second Advent was to be the literal, bodily return of Christ.

Here we find the background of James White’s letter of 1846 insisting on the literal personality of the Father and Son and denouncing the “spiritualizers” and their “modern spiritualism” (Day-Star 9:25, Jan. 24, 1846), and of Joseph Bates’s protest against “all the Spiritualisms” of that day and his insistence “that the second coming and kingdom of Christ will be as literal and real, as . . . the first Advent” (The Opening Heavens, p. 22).

Note Ellen White’s statement of 1851 “relative to spiritualism”: “I have frequently been falsely charged with teaching views peculiar to Spiritualism. But before the editor of the Day-Star [Enoch Jacobs, in 1846] ran into that delusion, the Lord gave me a view of the sad and desolating effects that would be produced upon the flock by him and others in teaching the spiritual views” (Experience and Views, in EW 77).

Her accusers, apparently of the majority party, failed to distinguish between the spiritualizing and nonspiritualizing divisions of the minority and were inclined to class together all who held that the seventh-month movement was in any sense a fulfillment of the prophecies. They assumed that anyone who still held to the validity of “the time” must hold that the expected Advent had occurred; consequently they attributed to the Whites and the middle party the fanaticism of the “spiritualizers” and their “spiritual” coming of Christ (see B. C. Bancroft, letter, Day-Star 8:44, Dec. 6, 1845; cf. reply to Burlingham, Day-Star 5:8, Feb. 25, 1845). As this controversy passed and the “spiritualizers” disappeared as a party, this meaning of the term was forgotten. Simultaneously the word was becoming familiar as meaning spiritism. See also Millerite Movement.

Spiritualism (spirit communications)

SPIRITUALISM [2] (spirit communications). See Spiritism.

Spotlight

SPOTLIGHT (1986— ; quarterly). Organ of the Northeast India Union. The purpose of the Spotlight is to keep Seventh-day Adventists in northeastern India informed of church activities.

Spring Meeting

SPRING MEETING. A business meeting of the General Conference Executive Committee held in the spring of the year at a time and place chosen by the committee; often referred to as the “Spring Council.”

Late in the past century the practice developed of holding a spring session of the General Conference Committee, including joint meetings with other organizations, forerunners of the departments (see Organization). In 1898 the term Spring Council appears in the Review and Herald and the General Conference Bulletin, but apparently not until 1906 in the General Conference Committee minutes. In 1907 and 1908 spring sessions of the full Executive Committee were held in Europe.

The General Conference Working Policy provides for annual spring meetings of the General Conference Committee, at which time there is a presentation by the General Conference treasurer of the audited financial statement for the calendar year preceding.

Attendance at the Spring Meeting is generally limited to committee members resident in the North American Division, to division presidents, and to General Conference Committee members resident overseas who are on furlough or leave of absence, or who are called specifically for the consideration of general items.

Problems of administration, evangelism, and spiritual life are also discussed at the Spring Meeting. Because it is a meeting of the General Conference Executive Committee, all items within the purview of that committee’s authority not reserved to the Annual Council may be considered.

Spring Valley Academy

SPRING VALLEY ACADEMY. A coeducational K-12 day school established as a senior academy in July 1969. Located at 1461 East Spring Valley Road, Centerville, Ohio, it was formerly known as Dayton Junior Academy.

Spring Valley Academy is operated by the constituent area churches in the Greater Dayton area. It is accredited by the Board of Regents of the General Conference of SDA's Department of Education, the North Central Association of Schools and Colleges, and chartered by the state of Ohio's Department of Education.

In 1993 facilities accommodated 400 students. The academic program is basically college preparatory. There is a staff of 28 servicing the high school division: 17 teaching, eight nonteaching, and three administration.

Principals: A. P. Aastrup, 1969—1971; Lloyd Davis, 1971—1977; Wendel Tucker, 1977—1984; John Wheaton, 1984—1994; J. D. Mutchler, 1994— .

Srednja Vjerska Skila

SREDNJA VJERSKA SKILA. See Adventist Seminary \(Croatia\).

Sri Lanka (formerly Ceylon)

SRI LANKA (formerly Ceylon). An island republic situated in the Indian Ocean off the southeastern tip of the Indian Peninsula. It has an area of 25,332 square miles (65,600 square kilometers) and a population (1994) of 18 million. The major racial groups are Sinhalese (about 74 percent) and Tamil (18 percent); the remainder of the population is made up of Moors, a people of Arabic extraction, Eurasians and Burghers (who are mostly descendants of Portuguese and Dutch colonists), Malays, and aboriginal Veddas. The predominant religion is Buddhism (69 percent), but there also are significant representations of Hindus (15 percent, mostly Tamils), Christians (8 percent, four fifths of whom are Roman Catholic), and Muslims (8 percent). Sinhalese, belonging to the Indo-Aryan group, is the official language of Sri Lanka, but Tamil and English are widely used in business and education.

The Sinhalese settled on the island sometime about the sixth century B.C. and developed a civilization that was later destroyed by civil wars and by invasions from southern India. At the beginning of the sixteenth century the Portuguese colonized the island, but in the middle of the seventeenth century they were replaced by the Dutch. Near the end of the eighteenth century the island was taken by the British. In 1972 Sri Lanka became a republic.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Sri Lanka comprises the Sri Lanka Union of Churches, which in turn part of the Far Eastern Division. Statistics (1992) for the Sri Lanka Union: churches, 28; members, 2,215; elementary schools, 5; ordained ministers, 16; licensed ministers, 5. Since 1990, churches and companies have been raised in 10 new places. Seventh-day Adventist work is concentrated in the western coastal belt. Here, within a distance of 50 miles (80 kilometers), there are 15 churches and companies. Union headquarters are at 7 Alfred House Gardens, Colombo.

Institutions

Institutions. Lakeside Adventist Hospital; Lakpahana Adventist College and Seminary; Lakpahana Publishing House.

Seventh-day Adventist Work

Seventh-day Adventist Work. Begin-nings. The first Seventh-day Adventist to visit Sri Lanka appears to have been Abram La Rue, who was there sometime between 1888 and his death in 1903. Harry Armstrong, an evangelist from England, and G. K. Owen began preaching the SDA message in Colombo, capital of Sri Lanka, in 1904. Armstrong reported that his landlord had begun to keep the Sabbath. About the same time, or possibly earlier, R. W. Yeoman sold denominational books and periodicals on the island. Ten years later, in 1916, the first converts, a proctor of the Supreme Court of Sri Lanka, Storer J. Thambipillai, and his wife, were baptized. Thambipillai was won through Bible studies by an Indian SDA evangelist, T. S. Nayagampillai, who was passing through Sri Lanka on his way from the Federated Malayan States to his home in Trichinopoly (Tiruchirappalli), South India. When J. M. Comer held evangelistic meetings in Sri Lanka in 1919, he met another SDA in Colombo, Y. G. Prakasam, who had been converted by an SDA printer in Malaya and who later served as a worker.

From 1919 to 1922 literature evangelists made record sales in Sri Lanka, using large subscription books such as Bible Readings, Uriah Smith's Daniel and the Revelation, and The Great Controversy. On May 18, 1921, the South India Union recommended the printing of the first SDA publication in Sinhalese. The tracts selected were Future of the World and Enemies of Health.

The first Seventh-day Adventist church on the island was organized in 1922, shortly after the arrival of H. A. Hansen to superintend the work in Sri Lanka. The first two Sinhalese converts baptized there, E. D. Wijesinghe and his brother D. E. Wijesinghe, became pioneer workers for the Sinhalese people and were the first SDA preachers in Moratuwa, Kottawa, Enderamulla, and Diganwella, where churches were later organized.

Organization and Growth. Originally Sri Lanka was part of the South Tamil Mission. On Dec. 12, 1922, by an action of the South India Union, Ceylon Mission, under the superintendency of H. A. Hansen, was organized. In 1923 a mission school was opened at Moratuwa, which was the forerunner of the secondary boarding school now at Mailapitiya (see Lakpahana Adventist College and Seminary). In 1950, by an action of the Southern Asia Division, the Ceylon Mission was organized as the Ceylon (now Sri Lanka) Union, with three subdivisions, and with E. A. Crane as its president.

In April 1963 land was purchased in Kandy for the first SDA medical clinic to be opened in Sri Lanka.

Voice of Prophecy lessons are circulated in Sinhala, Tamil, and English.

Sri Lanka Union High School

SRI LANKA UNION HIGH SCHOOL. See Lakpahana Adventist College and Seminary.

Sri Lanka Union of Churches

SRI LANKA UNION OF CHURCHES. See Far Eastern Division; Sri Lanka.

Sri Lanka Union Messenger

SRI LANKA UNION MESSENGER (1947— ; bimonthly). The official organ of the Sri Lanka Union of Churches. The purpose of the Messenger, a printed bulletin, is to keep Seventh-day Adventists in Sri Lanka informed of church activities. A translation of the English is also published in Sinhala.

Stadin, Andreas Ragnar

STADIN, ANDREAS RAGNAR (1899—1970). Physician and missionary. He was born in Sundsvall, Sweden, and in his youth accepted the Seventh-day Adventist faith. At 18 he enrolled at the mission school at Nyhyttan, Jarnboas, Sweden, and a year later was accepted at the Skodsborg Sanitarium in Denmark for training as a physical therapist. After graduating in 1921, he fulfilled military duties in Sweden and then emigrated to America to continue medical training.

After his graduation from the Loma Linda medical school, he accepted an appointment to serve at the Taffari Mekkonen Hospital in Ethiopia, where, during the war he performed his duties under fire, bringing recognition from the Red Cross. Later he worked at the Empress Zauditu Memorial Hospital in Addis Ababa.

In 1939 he took postgraduate studies at Harvard University and then served at the Paradise Valley Hospital, where he was assistant director, then director.

After World War II he went to Sweden, and in 1949 he became the first American-educated physician to receive a license to practice in that country. Through his efforts Loma Linda University School of Medicine was recognized as an accredited medical school in Sweden.

Returning to the United States, Dr. Stadin attended Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons in the field of physical medicine and rehabilitation. After completion of his studies he became head of the rehabilitation program at the Glendale Adventist Hospital in California. He was invited to become assistant professor of physical medicine and rehabilitation at Loma Linda University, in which post he served from 1953 to 1969 when he became assistant professor of orthopedic surgery and rehabilitation.

In 1964 Dr. Stadin returned to Addis Ababa as medical director of the hospital there and also served as medical secretary for the Ethiopian Union Mission. He passed to his rest at Regensjukhuset, Sweden, where he was spending a sabbatical year.

Stahl, Ana Christina

STAHL, ANA CHRISTINA (1870—1968). Missionary to South America. Ana was born in Sweden and began training in the art of housekeeping when she was 12. At 15 years of age she was housekeeper in a wealthy Swedish home. The following year she emigrated to the United States. While working in a restaurant, she met Ferdinand Stahl, and they were married in 1892.

Several years later, after their conversion to the Seventh-day Adventist truth, friends arranged for the Stahls to go to Madison, Wisconsin, to take the nurse's course. After attending the General Conference session of 1909, they were called to South America. Ana, who became known as la hermana Ana, nursed among the wealthy Spanish women as well as the destitute Indians of both the Amazon and Andes regions. She was instrumental in starting church schools among the Indians, for both children and adults. Working tirelessly by the side of her husband, Ana Stahl came to know intimately the two wonders of South America—the mighty Andes and the powerful Amazon. After 29 years of service in their chosen mission field, the Stahls returned to the United States to an active retirement in Paradise, California.

Stahl Clinic

STAHL CLINIC. See Ana Stahl Adventist Clinic.

Stahl, Ferdinand (Fernando) Anthony

STAHL, FERDINAND (FERNANDO) ANTHONY (1874—1950). Missionary. He became a Seventh-day Adventist in 1902, and soon afterward he and his wife, née Ana Christian Carlson, took the nursing course at Battle Creek Sanitarium. After graduating, they took charge of treatment rooms in Cleveland, Ohio, and then operated a sanitarium in Akron, Ohio.

At the General Conference of 1909 the Stahls offered themselves for mission service and paid their own way to Bolivia, where they arrived in July 1909 and soon began work among the Indians in and around La Paz. Two years later Stahl was temporarily assigned to the Plateria Mission, on the Peruvian side of Lake Titicaca, with the understanding that he was to serve the Indians in both Peru and Bolivia. Later the same year (1911) this temporary assignment was extended, and he worked for about 10 years among the Aymara and the Quechua Indians. He established several mission stations in Peru, among them Broken Stone Mission (near Umuchi, Peru), well known because of a stone that Stahl suggested to use as a token, giving half of it to a chief and keeping the other half as a means of identifying the teacher who would later be sent to teach the Indians. Three years later (1917) E. P. Howard and his wife were sent as teachers and opened up the work in this region.

In 1921 the Stahls were forced for health reasons to leave the high altitude of the Andes. They began to work for the Indians at the headwaters of the Amazon, where they established Metraro Mission. In 1939 they returned to America after 29 years of courageous pioneering mission service.

Stanborough College

STANBOROUGH COLLEGE. See Stanborough School.

Stanborough (Park) Missionary College

STANBOROUGH (PARK) MISSIONARY COLLEGE. See Newbold College.

Stanborough Park Sanitarium

STANBOROUGH PARK SANITARIUM. See Stanboroughs Nursing and Maternity Home.

Stanborough Press Limited

STANBOROUGH PRESS LIMITED. The publishing house for the Seventh-day Adventist Church in the United Kingdom and Ireland. It has a modern mechanized printing plant and is owned and operated by the British Union Conference. Its name derives from the fact that for 60 years it was situated at Stanborough Park, Watford, Hertfordshire, England, in close proximity to the other denominational institutions in Britain. The old Stanborough Press building was destroyed by fire on Jan. 3, 1964, and as a consequence the new modern plant was built in Grantham, Lincolnshire, opening in 1966.

The Stanborough Press publishes and prints subscription books, trade books, hymnbooks, tracts, and the following periodicals: British Advent Messenger (the British Union newspaper); Encounter (the British Union youth paper), and Focus (a Bible-centered message paper printed in English, Swedish, Polish, Dutch, and Danish).

The publishing work in Britain began in 1882 when J. N. Loughborough, who had arrived in Southampton, England, in 1878, had a four-page supplement printed for incorporation into imported American magazines. About 1,000 copies of these weekly papers were circulated each year for two years.

The first small printing plant was set up in Ravenswood, Southampton, in 1884. That same year it was moved to Grimsby, Lincolnshire. In a double-fronted dwelling house the Folding and Dispatch Department occupied the ground floor, the typeroom was in the small back bedroom, and a little job press for handbills was installed in an outbuilding, which also served as the pressroom and kitchen. Here the first British Seventh-day Adventist periodical, Present Truth, was launched as a 16-page monthly, the first issue being dated May 1884.

M. C. Wilcox was the first editor, and his editorial office was in his own living room. There was type sufficient only to set half the paper, which was then taken to the Grimsby News press for printing. The printed sheets were folded by hand, and hand-sewn with needle and thread. The papers were trimmed with a hand-operated cutting knife and, after being wrapped, were carried in parcels or sacks three quarters of a mile to the nearest post office or railway station. About 5,000 copies of each issue were produced and distributed in this way from Oct. 1, 1884, to Sept. 1, 1885.

In 1887 the small printing plant was moved to 451 Holloway Road, London, for more effective promotion of the work in Britain, and a city depository was also opened in Paternoster Row. The organization became a limited company in 1894 under the name of The International Tract Society Limited, with J. I. Gibson as manager.

In 1899 Drs. D. H. and Lauretta Kress launched a health magazine, Life and Health, and in November 1901 M. E. Olsen and his brother Dr. A. B. Olsen became the joint editors of Good Health.

In December 1906 the estate of Stanborough Park at Watford, about 20 miles (32 kilometers) from London, was purchased. In 1907 the publishing house and food factory were built there by W. C. Sisley, with money subscribed by SDAs in Britain on a £1-per-member basis, supplemented by a gift of £2,000 from the General Conference out of a £30,000 world budget.

The press building, with an 85-foot (25-meter) frontage, comprised composing room, stereotype foundry, pressroom, and bindery. The machinery was powered by two 40-horsepower steam engines. At the time of removal to Stanborough Park, Present Truth had a weekly circulation of 20,600 copies; Good Health had a monthly circulation of 37,700. In 1908 and 1909 there were 74,499 books and 3,446,592 periodicals produced, the total sales being £29,611.

During the ensuing years the publishing work continued to advance until the outbreak of World War I in 1914, when restricted paper supplies and the conscription of literature workers to national service retarded sales, but progress was again resumed after the war. During 1919 the name of the publishing house was changed to The Stanborough Press Limited. By that year the sales of Present Truth had reached 35,000 per fortnight, while Good Health sales stood at 25,000 monthly. The books then being printed and published for sale by literature evangelists in Britain were Christ Our Saviour, The Great Controversy, Patriarchs and Prophets, by Ellen White, Bible Readings, and Uriah Smith's Daniel and the Revelation.

In 1922 a new series of inexpensive, stitched books was inaugurated with immediate success. Nearly a quarter of a million were sold during the two years 1922 and 1923.

In 1924 the first volume of Bedtime Stories, by A. S. Maxwell, was published and became an immediate success. Thereafter an annual edition was published.

During the 1930s depression years progress was slowed, and at the outbreak of World War II sales totaled around £30,000 annually. But during World War II, in spite of paper rationing, sales mounted to £45,000 in 1945. The war years also saw the beginning of a new publishing venture, the annual magazine Good News, followed later by two other annual journals, Health and Happiness and Happy Hours, resulting in a great increase in small literature sales. These periodicals continued in publication until the early 1970s.

In November 1950 Present Truth was renamed The Bible and Our Times. In March 1973 its name was changed to Signs of the Times. In March 1960 Good Health became a 68-page bimonthly. Plummeting circulations and economic pressures led to a combination of these two magazines under the title Life and Health in 1974. The same economic pressures led to the closure of Life and Health in 1976.

In 1979 the magazine program was brought back to life with the launch of two new magazines: Focus, a quarterly message magazine subsidized by the British Union Conference; and Family Life, a first approach magazine aimed at a secular public. Focus enjoyed circulations of between 65,000 and 100,000 per quarter in the first five years of its existence. The circulation of Family Life in the same period varied between 19,000 and 38,000. The deep recession in Britain between 1989 and 1993 led to the closure of Family Life.

Sales of subscription books rose rapidly in the 1950s, passing the £100,000 mark in 1954 and the £150,000 mark in 1959. These steadily increasing sales necessitated a considerable enlargement of the plant. The photographic and engraving department was inaugurated in 1955 and the first single-color lithographic press was installed in the same year. The first two-color lithographic press was installed in 1957, and in 1959 the first subscription book printed by lithography was published. This was volume 1 of the four-volume set Footprints of Jesus, by W. L. Emerson. A second two-color press was added in 1961.

At the time of the fire that gutted the office building on Jan. 3, 1964, the Stanborough Press had a total floor area of 20,000 square feet (1,900 square meters) and comprised composing, photographic and engraving, photo-litho and litho-platemaking, printing (letterpress and lithographic presses), and bindery areas. Following the move to the larger and more modern factory in Grantham, Lincolnshire, 100 miles (160 kilometers) north of London, a four-color Crabtree Sovereign printing press was installed. On Feb. 26, 1970, the Stanborough Press entered into a merger agreement with the Review and Herald Publishing Association and in July 1971 began a series of collaborative ventures.

In 1979 the merger agreement with the Review and Herald Publishing Association was renegotiated as a management agreement. Subsequently this management agreement has been renewed every five years.

Hot-metal typesetting was phased out in 1979 and computer typesetting brought in. In 1987 a Compugraphic system was installed. The year 1990 saw the replacement of the Crabtree Sovereign with a new Heidelberg Speedmaster VP102, CPC Tronic four-color press.

Since 1945 foreign language subscription books were published in the following languages: Urdu, Twi, Romanian, Afrikaans, Danish, Swedish, Dutch, Icelandic, Amharic, and Ibo. Voice of Prophecy lessons were published in Greenlandic.

In 1985 the Stanborough Press embarked upon a new venture involving marketing paperback books through conventional retail outlets, principally Christian bookshops. In 1990 the name Autumn House was adopted to cover this new range of publications. By 1993 sales through conventional retail outlets accounted for 25 percent of the output of the Stanborough Press.

Editors in Chief: M. C. Wilcox, 1884—1887; S. N. Haskell, 1887—1888; D. A. Robinson, 1889—1891; E. J. Waggoner, 1891—1902; W. T. Bartlett, 1902—1920; A. S. Maxwell, 1920—1936; W. L. Emmerson, 1936—1966; R. D. Vine, 1966—1978; D. N. Marshall, 1979— .

Managers: J. I. Gibson, 1894—1896; A. E. Bacon, 1896—1902; W. C. Sisley, 1902—1918; W. E. Read, 1918—1922; G. L. Gulbrandson, 1922—1925; A. S. Maxwell, 1925—1932; A. Warren, 1932—1945; J. C. Craven, 1946—1949; J. H. Craven, 1949—1964; W. J. Newman, 1964—1968; K. A. Elias, 1968—1971; C. E. Palmer, 1972; N. Tew (acting), 1972; E. A. Pender, 1972—1975; D. H. Archer, 1975—1984; P. Hammond, 1984— .

Stanborough School

STANBOROUGH SCHOOL. A coeducational day and boarding school under the direction of the British Union Conference, operating on a senior high school level and offering some junior college work. The school, situated on a beautiful estate, in facilities completely rebuilt in 1974 (elementary) and 1991 (secondary and boarding), is about 20 miles (32 kilometers) northwest of London.

Stanborough School, which began as an elementary department of Stanborough Missionary College, was opened in the autumn of 1918 by Miss A. V. Middleton, assisted by Miss L. Lewis (later Mrs. S. Bevan), with an enrollment of nine. Shortly before Christmas this elementary department was adopted by the Watford church as a church school, and in January 1919 a second room was required to care for the needs of its pupils. By September the enrollment had grown to 41.

In September 1922, under the leadership of Mrs. H. H. Howard, who was in charge of the college teacher training department, the school moved into a wooden army hut, which the college had used as a men's dormitory. By 1927 the enrollment had reached approximately 70. In September 1931, the hut having been condemned as unfit for educational use, the school moved to Sheepcot Villa, on the northern border of Stanborough Park.

In 1940 E. E. White came from Newbold College to head the school and to develop a strong secondary work to meet the rising educational standards. In harmony with its new objectives, the school was now named Stanborough Secondary and Preparatory School. The new program prepared pupils to take the Oxford school certificate examinations at 15 and 16 years. Previous to this, over the years, the pupils had taken various external elementary examinations. The enrollment quickly increased to 110.

Having outgrown the Villa, the school of about 160 pupils in 1946 took over the lower two floors of the former college building. In 1961, in addition to using three auxiliary structures, the school took over the whole of the original college building. In October 1974 the enrollment peaked, with 50 in the infant section (age 5—6), 116 in the junior section (age 7—11) and 205 in the secondary school, a total of 371. The 1980s saw falling enrollment because of a constituency that was moving. However, with new secondary facilities, the 1990s have witnessed an increase.

To broaden the scope of instruction in a practical direction, woodwork and domestic science departments were added in 1953—1954. A small boarding department was set up in 1958. The matron, Miss B. Williams, had cared for a small group of school children in her own home for the previous two years. By September 1962, when V. Hall and his wife became preceptor and matron, the boarding department accommodated 26 boys, with several girls living in local homes. Under J. and Marion Barnard numbers grew to 30 boys and 30 girls, further expansion being limited by facilities.

At the age of 16 the pupils take the London University General Certificate of Education Examination, and the more successful candidates remain for two further years to take the Advanced Level General Certificate of Education Examination, which qualifies them for university entrance. This work is equivalent at least to that of a junior college.

The British Ministry of Education (now Department of Education and Science) formally recognized the school as efficient in June 1962.

In March 1973 the Thirteenth Sabbath Offering overflow was given for the school development plan. Phase One was completed in 1974 with the building of a new primary facility. The sale of part of the parkland then gave further funds for the complete rebuilding of the secondary and boarding areas, completed in 1991. These modern facilities allow for further development of the curriculum in academic and practical areas and provide room for 65 boarders. Some of these are used by international students studying English as a foreign language, a new program introduced in 1992.

Headmasters: E. E. White, 1940—1946; A. J. Woodfield, 1946—1955; R. C. Syme, 1955—1961; W.G.A. Fitcher, 1961—1966; H. I. Dunton, 1966—1975; D. Mason, 1976—1984; I. Margerison, 1984—1993; A. Luxton, 1993— .

Stanboroughs Nursing and Maternity Home

STANBOROUGH'S NURSING AND MATERNITY HOME. A 79-bed institution (formerly the Stanborough Park Sanitarium) operated at Watford, Hertfordshire, England, by the British Union Conference from 1912 to 1968.

The medical work in the British Union dates from 1903, when the Good Health Association, Ltd., was organized. Two sanitariums were operated, one in Caterham and the other in Leicester, and there were some smaller units. The Stanborough Park Sanitarium was opened in May 1912, with Dr. C. H. Hayton, of the United States, as medical director, and with Mrs. Myers from Australia as matron. The first graduating class of nurses was composed of three women and two men. The nurses did all the work of the sanitarium, including the care of bedrooms, kitchen, and all the public rooms. The nurses bought their own uniforms, paid £3 entrance fee, and were paid £5 the first year, £7 the second year, and £10 the third year; they were allowed one shilling a week for laundry. The Leicester Sanitarium was sold in 1913 and the Caterham Sanitarium in 1923. With the decision to concentrate on Stanborough Park as the major medical unit, a number of extensions were made to the original building, and accommodation became available for 55 general patients and 24 maternity patients.

During the years 1932 to 1939, when additional property became available to The Stanboroughs, a determined effort was made to enlarge the institution to a 100-bed hospital, including a maternity unit, and also to obtain state recognition of the nurse's training school. Before this ambition could be realized, World War II broke out. During the war the establishment was taken over by the government as an ancillary to one of the large London hospitals with a medical school combined. The business manager and most of the old staff were continued in service during this period.

When The Stanboroughs was returned to denominational control in 1946, an effort was made to reestablish the sanitarium as before, but the National Health Service Act of 1948 made it necessary to develop a different approach to medical work. The Stanboroughs operated for a time as a nursing and maternity home, with the treatment rooms still usefully occupied in treating resident patients and outpatients. Diagnostic X-ray was available, also an operating room for visiting surgeons.

Medical directors: C. H. Hayton, 1912—1919; G.A.S. Madgwick, 1919—1920; A. E. Druitt, 1920—1921; W. A. Ruble, 1921—1929; S. McClements, 1929—1931; F. C. Shone, 1931—1932; Clarence E. Nelson, 1932—1937; J. E. Cairncross, 1937—1939; closed during war; A. H. Williams, 1946—1962; H. O. Williams, 1962—1968.

Standard of Attainment

STANDARD OF ATTAINMENT. An educational feature originated in 1907 and promoted for the young people of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, aiming to help them reach a certain level of proficiency in Bible doctrines and denominational history. Those who passed prescribed examinations were referred to as “members of Attainment.” The name has been dropped, but the study of these two fields is still promoted and is based on the book The Great Advent Movement, by Emma Howell (Cooper), and the pamphlet Senior Missionary Volunteer Studies in Bible Doctrines.

Starr, George Burt

STARR, GEORGE BURT (1854—1944). Evangelist, minister, teacher, and administrator, in the United States and Australia. Converted at the age of 21, he joined the Congregational Church and soon became a nondenominational evangelist. In 1875 he worked with Dwight L. Moody in Chicago. In 1876 he embraced the Seventh-day Adventist faith and at once began to preach it throughout Iowa and Nebraska. He was ordained in 1879. In 1883 he married Nellie Sisley, sister of William C. Sisley and Maud Sisley Boyd. In 1884 he was called to superintend the Chicago Mission and direct the Central Bible School. In 1891 he accompanied Ellen G. White to Australia to help build up the SDA work there. During his 18 years in Australia he was variously employed. He was Bible teacher and preceptor at the Australasian Bible School at Melbourne, associate of Mrs. White in New South Wales, minister in Queensland, secretary, vice president, and president of New South Wales Conference, president of Victoria Conference, evangelist in Tasmania, chaplain and member of the board of the Wahroonga Sanitarium, and director of city mission work in Sydney. Upon his return to the United States in 1909 he worked as an evangelist, as chaplain in various sanitariums, and, for a time, as a visiting minister.

He wrote short articles for the Review and Herald and both the American and the Australian Signs of the Times, and compiled a booklet first published by the Battle Creek College Press entitled Helps to Bible Studies (published in Australia as Bible Studies), which by 1907 had gone through seven or eight printings.

State Agent

STATE AGENT. See Publishing Department Director.

State of the Dead

STATE OF THE DEAD. See Death.

Station

STATION. A local administrative unit of church organization in a mission territory, which may be administered by a single evangelist who serves as director, or it may be administered by an executive committee with a staff of evangelists, teachers, and medical workers, and contain several schools, dispensaries, churches, and companies of members. Such units are also referred to as mission stations, and in the South Pacific Division are called districts and district stations.

Statistical Report

STATISTICAL REPORT. See Annual Statistical Report.

Statistical Secretary

STATISTICAL SECRETARY. A secretary of the General Conference who was charged with the responsibility of collecting and distributing statistics for the world field. This individual was elected at the General Conference session and was responsible to the General Conference Committee. The quarterly “Summary of Progress” reports for North America are compiled, printed, and distributed to administrators and others in the North American Division. Quarterly secretary’s reports of the overseas divisions are compiled quarterly for reference but are not published. The Annual Statistical Report is a compilation of the statistics from all divisions and attached unions and is printed as soon as all division statistical reports are received. It is usually distributed to world leaders about midyear. Traditionally, the General Conference statistical secretary was charged with compiling and editing the Seventh-day Adventist Yearbook annually. This contains a detailed listing of all Seventh-day Adventist organizations, institutions, and personnel.

The first statistical secretary was H. E. Rogers. He was listed as a “clerk” from 1901 until he was appointed as statistical secretary by action of the General Conference Committee on June 5, 1905. He served until 1941. He left a wealth of statistical and archival material. The statistical secretary was combined with auditing in 1962. At the 1966 General Conference session a statistical secretary was appointed who was again directly responsible to the General Conference Committee. At the 1975 General Conference session it was voted to combine statistics with archives, and the office formerly designated as statistical secretary became director of archives and statistics.

Statistical Clerk: H. E. Rogers, 1901—1905.

Statistical Secretaries: H. E. Rogers, 1905—1941; Claude Conard, 1941—1950; E. J. Johanson, 1950—1952; H. W. Klaser, 1952—1962.

Statistical and Auditing Secretaries: E. L. Becker, 1962—1964; R. J. Radcliffe, 1964—1966.

Statistical Secretary: Jesse O. Gibson, 1966—1975.

Statistics, Seventh-day Adventist

STATISTICS, SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST. See Seventh-day Adventist Church; also names of divisions, countries, and North American conferences.

Stauffer, Albert B.

STAUFFER, ALBERT B. (fl. 1900). Pioneer colporteur in Argentina, Uruguay, and Brazil. In 1892 he accompanied E. W. Snyder and C. A. Nowlen to Argentina, where he sold Seventh-day Adventist publications among the German colonists. Early in 1893 he went to Uruguay, where he worked among the German and Swiss colonists. In May of the same year he went to Brazil, being the first SDA colporteur to enter that country. In the early years of the century he held administrative positions in south Brazil.

Steele, William

STEELE, WILLIAM (1874—1951). One of the pioneer missionaries in Central and South America. After joining the Seventh-day Adventist Church in 1898, while attending Walla Walla College, he took ministerial and commercial courses, and upon graduation in 1903 taught church school for a year and then entered missionary service as treasurer of the West Coast Mission, South America (1904—1908). Later he served as superintendent of the Ecuador Mission (1908—1909), superintendent of the Puerto Rican Mission (1909—1920), superintendent of the Santo Domingo Mission (1924—1927), and president of the Venezuela Mission (1927—1931). After his return to the United States in 1931, he pastored Spanish churches in New York and Arizona until his retirement.

Stefanie Old People's Home

STEFANIE OLD PEOPLE'S HOME. See Haus Stefanie.

Steglitz Old People's Home

STEGLITZ OLD PEOPLE'S HOME. See Berlin-Steglitz Old People's Home.

Stein, Guilherme, III

STEIN, GUILHERME, III (1871—1957). First Seventh-day Adventist baptized in Brazil; editor, translator, author, and teacher. Born into a family of Swiss-German settlers in the state of São Paulo, Brazil, he attended a German school at Campinas for five years. In 1893 he married Maria Kraehenbuch and through the influence of her parents, who were devoted Methodists, began to study the Bible, from which he learned about the seventh-day Sabbath. He began to keep it without knowing of any Seventh-day Adventists. After reading Ellen White's Great Controversy, which had been left by a colporteur with his wife's grandmother some years previously, he corresponded with W. H. Thurston, an SDA book agent stationed at Rio de Janeiro. He became so interested in what he learned that he translated Mrs. White's book Steps to Christ into Portuguese. Later, when F. Westphal made his first visit to Brazil in 1895, Stein was baptized, the first Seventh-day Adventist to take this step in Brazil.

In 1896 Stein and his wife taught at Colégio Internacional, one of the early Seventh-day Adventist local church schools in Brazil, at Curitiba. In 1898 they went to Brusque, in the state of Santa Catarina, to help establish another church school there. The next year Stein was engaged in evangelism at Santos, and in 1900 he became the first editor of the first SDA magazine in Brazil, Arauto da Verdade ("Herald of Truth"), serving as a colporteur and evangelist at the same time. He served the Brazil Publishing House as editor and translator until his retirement in 1918.

Stein was a ready writer and a profound investigator of the Scriptures. His most important work was O Sabado ("The Sabbath"), which is still being read with profit. His translations into Portuguese included The Life of Jesus, The Great Controversy, and Your Home and Health, by Ellen G. White; also a home medical book by Dr. F. M. Rossiter. He also translated a number of hymns into the Portuguese language.

After his retirement from the publishing house, he made a comparative study of Indian dialects of Brazil and was almost ready to publish his findings when he died of Asian influenza.

Steiner, Paul

STEINER, PAUL (1913—1974). Administrator and educator. He was a native of Eritrea and attended the French Adventist Seminary at Collonges. In 1942 he became MV, educational, and Sabbath school director for the German Swiss Conference, extending his service in 1944 to the Swiss Union. In 1946 he was ordained to the gospel ministry and began teaching at the Collonges Seminary. In 1953 he became Bible teacher at the Bogenhofen school in Austria and one year later became president of that institution. In 1957 he was called to be MV, education, and temperance director for the Southern European Division. He held this position until 1970, when he became the first director of the European Home Study Institute. His last post of duty was as curator of the Ellen G. White Research Center in England.

Stephenson, Claiborne Bell

STEPHENSON, CLAIBORNE BELL (1868—1946). Secretary of the North American Negro Department of the General Conference (1914—1918); minister and conference administrator. Soon after joining the Seventh-day Adventist Church in the early 1890s, he entered evangelistic work in the Southern states and served as president of the Florida (1904—1906, 1919—1921), Georgia (1910—1912), Southeastern Union (1912—1913), and Alabama (1922—1927) conferences.

Stephenson, J. M.

STEPHENSON, J. M. See Messenger Party.

Sterling, George Leighton

STERLING, GEORGE LEIGHTON (1884—1979). Missionary, educator. Born in Otsego, Michigan, as a young adult he and his wife, Maybelle, served as pioneer missionaries in the South Pacific, beginning in 1908 on the Island of Raiatea. They remained there until 1938 when they gave service in the Cook Islands before commencing Seventh-day Adventist work in the Marquesas Islands of French Polynesia. From 1939 to 1943 Pastor Sterling served as Bible teacher at New Zealand Missionary College (now Longburn Adventist College), then, until his retirement in 1950, he served in pastoral ministry in New South Wales, Australia.

Stevens, James Adams

STEVENS, JAMES ADAMS (1881—1973). Evangelist, pastor, departmental secretary, administrator. He was a native of Missouri. When he was 21, he married Daisy Ella Beddoe. He attended Emmanuel Missionary College and in 1907 entered ministerial work and was ordained the following year by J. N. Loughborough. He served in various capacities in the Pacific Union Conference until 1921 when he became secretary of the General Conference Home Missionary Department. During his years of service there he enlisted lay preachers and Bible workers, instituted the church missionary council, the 10-minute missionary service, and the Minute Man goal for Ingathering. He wrote the first church officers' manual entitled The Officers of the Church and Their Work. In 1936 he became secretary of the General Conference Sabbath School Department, where he helped to launch child evangelism and Vacation Bible Schools.

Stevenson, Ernest Johnson

STEVENSON, ERNEST JOHNSON (1905—1972). Evangelist, administrator, dean, pastor. He was a native of Burghersdorp, Cape province, South Africa. He was baptized at 16 and studied at Spionkop and Helderberg colleges. After working as a colporteur, he was appointed publishing secretary. In 1934 he was called into evangelism and a year later married Thora Gwendoline Comins. From 1939 to 1941 he was dean of men at Helderberg College. In 1948 he became president of the Rhodesia Conference, where he helped in establishing Anderson Memorial School. He taught for many years at Helderberg, and in 1966 emigrated to the United States, where he pastored churches in Michigan. He lost his life in that state on June 3 as the result of an automobile accident.

Stevenson, Gordon Stanley

STEVENSON, GORDON STANLEY (1907—1968). Missionary, editor, administrator. He was born in the Eastern Cape town of Burghersdorp, South Africa, into the family of an Irish Protestant lay preacher.

At an early age, while residing in Kimberly, he attended meetings held by Evangelist C. A. Paap, of Australia, and W. H. Hurlow, a young Welsh worker. In 1918 he was received into the Seventh-day Adventist Church by baptism.

At 13 years of age he went to Spion Kop College, where he worked as a student colporteur to defray expenses. While earning tuition money after matriculation, he became acquainted with Edna George, a secretary in the employ of the South Africa Division. They were married in 1928 and soon after enrolled at Helderberg College, where he took the one-year theological normal course and graduated in 1929 with the first graduating class at Helderberg. His career for the church began at Malamulo Mission. From there he went to Tekerani Mission. At 28 years of age he served as president of the South Bantu Mission Field. Then, after serving as pastor and evangelist with his brother in Natal, he took up the editorship of the Signs of the Times in Cape Town in 1948. Two years later he took on the additional responsibility of directing the Voice of Prophecy School.

In 1954 he was called to serve as president of the Natal-Transvaal Conference. Seven months later he was called to serve as the South African Union president, in which leadership he continued for eight years.

Owing to failing health, he took the less demanding role of editing the Signs of the Times once again. He also simultaneously accepted pastoral responsibilities in a nearby church.

In his mature years, he served as national vice-chair of the South African Temperance Alliance. Here he was known as the champion of the underdog. His dying moment was spent in interceding for a Black man who was being mistreated. He died working, as he wished, after 40 years in the cause he believed in and loved.

Stevenson, Michael Herbert

STEVENSON, MICHAEL HERBERT (1939—1993). Youth leader. Born in South Africa, he graduated from Helderberg College, where he met and married Jennie May Webster. Four sons were born to them. He gave distinguished service to the Seventh-day Adventist Church, beginning in 1961 in Pietersburg, South Africa, where he served as pastor, evangelist, and youth director. In 1967 he became a pastor in Texas, and in 1970, at the age of 30, he began serving as the General Conference campus ministries director. He was the youngest person to be called to the General Conference Youth Department.

In 1975 he responded to a call to serve the Northern Europe-West Africa Division as youth and temperance director. The Stevensons returned to world headquarters in 1980, where he served as an associate director of the Youth Department, with responsibilities as world Pathfinder director for five years, director of Adventist Youth Services (Student Missionary program) for five years, and senior-youth director until 1993. After a heroic struggle with brain cancer, he died in February of 1993.

Steward, Mary Alicia

STEWARD, MARY ALICIA (1858—1947). Chief compiler and editor of the first Index to the Writings of Ellen G. White. She was a daughter of a pioneer Seventh-day Adventist minister, T. M. Steward, and was educated at Battle Creek College. In 1880 she joined the staff of the Review and Herald as a proofreader; in 1892 she went to work for Dr. J. H. Kellogg; about the year 1900 she became one of Mrs. White's office assistants, going with her to Tennessee, where she remained to teach at Graysville Academy and to work in the proofroom of the Southern Publishing Association. In 1906 she rejoined Ellen White's staff and remained there until Mrs. White died. Afterward she worked as a copy editor at the Review and Herald until 1937.

Stewardship

STEWARDSHIP. The exercise of the office of one called to have responsible care of possessions entrusted to him or her. As used of Christian stewardship in a broad sense, the word refers to the responsibility of God’s people for, and use of, everything entrusted to them by God—life, physical being, time, talents and abilities, material possessions, opportunities to be of service to others, and their knowledge of truth. Seventh-day Adventists conceive of this life as a divinely appointed opportunity to learn to be faithful stewards, thereby qualifying for the higher stewardship of eternal things in the future life.

God originally appointed Adam to be steward of this world (Gen. 1:28), but through sin Adam forfeited the full exercise of his overlordship (Luke 4:6). Three of our Lord’s parables teach the responsibilities inherent in stewardship—the nobleman and the pounds (Luke 19:11—27), the talents (Matt. 25:14—30), and the dishonest steward (Luke 16:19—31). These parables teach the diligent use of present opportunities in preparation for the future. All three stress the fact that human beings are accountable to God for stewardship, and that a strict account will be required of them. Neglect or misuse of this God-given stewardship will mean the forfeiting of their privilege of higher stewardship in the world to come.

In a more restricted sense, the word “stewardship” means one’s responsibility for a wise use of the material resources that come into his or her possession, especially one’s responsibility to God with respect to tithes and offerings. See Church Calendar; Systematic Benevolence; Tithe.

Stewardship and Development, Department of STEWARDSHIP AND DEVELOPMENT, DEPARTMENT OF. The forerunner was Church Development Service, headed by W. J. Hubert, which provided fund-raising counseling and direction to local Seventh-day Adventist churches throughout North America.

During the General Conference session of 1966 a department was organized under the name of Church Development Service. At the Annual Council session of 1967 Stewardship and Development became the official name of the department. At the Annual Council in 1971 provision was made for church stewardship secretaries, and at the Annual Council in 1972 the duties of the church stewardship secretaries were adopted.

The principles and concepts of Christian stewardship were studied and developed by the stewardship secretaries of the Columbia Union Conference, among whom were M. E. Rees, S. M. Young, Merle E. Moore, Glenn E. Smith, Gale L. Gabbert, Paul G. Smith, and Walter M. Starks. This study led to a rediscovery of the fundamental spiritual principles that relate to the giving response and the conclusion that the key to life and its resources is the full and complete conversion of the human heart, which leads to the total commitment of life, the experience of conversion being exclusively the work and the ministry of the Holy Spirit (John 6:63). Revival and reformation become the foundational principle and the keynote of the stewardship work.

Secretary (until 1974): W. M. Starks, 1966—1974. Directors: W. M. Starks, 1975—1978; Paul Smith, 1979—1980. By an action of the General Conference session in 1980, the Stewardship and Development was connected with the Ministerial Association, where it remained until it became part of the Church Ministries Department in 1985.

Stewart, Andrew Graham

STEWART, ANDREW GRAHAM (1881—1975). Pioneer missionary and administrator. Andrew Stewart's parents became Seventh-day Adventists in 1887 through the ministry of M. C. Israel. In 1894 Mr. Stewart, Sr., attended the first SDA camp meeting in Australia.

In 1903 Andrew left the family farm in Wychitella, Victoria, for the Avondale School for Christian Workers (Avondale College), where he completed a four-year missionary course. His first appointment was as an evangelist in Melbourne, Victoria. In 1907 he married Emily Jean Stephen, a teacher.

The same year he accepted an appointment as teacher and principal of the Buresala Training School in Ovalau, Fiji. The school, later to be transported to the largest of the Fiji Islands and renamed Fulton College, was the chief training center for SDA workers in the South Pacific and had an enrollment of 18 men.

During his stay at Buresala a women's dormitory was completed and 12 young women began their education. In 1911 Stewart became president of the Fiji Mission.

In 1916 he arrived in Atchin, New Hebrides, to assume leadership of that field, where as yet no baptized members existed. He built the first church in the New Hebrides and baptized the first converts. The home he occupied had recently been the site of the massacre of the wife of a French trader by native tribesmen. The Stewarts made special efforts to elevate the status of women from cruel cultural practices, adopting a New Hebridean baby girl, Naomi. In 1920, during his administration, Norman Wiles succumbed from blackwater fever on the island of Malekula. The work eventually expanded to the islands of Espiritu Santo and Ambrym.

In 1923 Stewart returned to Fiji as president. In 1926 a brief break from mission service placed him in Western Australia as conference president. Then in 1927 he resumed his connection with the South Sea Islands as vice president of the Australasian Union Conference for that particular mission field.

During his administration the church began work in Mandated Territory of New Guinea (1929). The islands of Emira and Mussau became totally Seventh-day Adventist, and the church established bases on New Britain and Manus. In 1934 he encouraged the first Seventh-day Adventist mission on the mainland of the territory, located in the highlands at Kainantu.

A period of rapid expansion followed both in this territory and in the territory of Papua. In 1940 he became field secretary of the union, but maintained his close contact with the mission field, making extensive itineraries to plan new work and rehabilitation after the close of World War II.

In 1943 he began a 12-year period as editor of the Australasian Record. He continued this responsibility five years beyond his official retirement in 1949. During his retirement he remained a focal point for mission promotion and emphasis. A. G. Stewart visited North America in 1949 accompanied by the Solomon Islander Robert Salau, creating considerable favorable publicity for the church.

He authored two books, Trophies From Cannibal Isles and the autobiographical In Letters of Gold.

Stiftung Altersheim Oertlimatt

STIFTUNG ALTERSHEIM OERTLIMATT. See Oertlimatt Old People's and Nursing Home.

Stiftung Blindendienst Der Advent-Mission

STIFTUNG BLINDENDIENST DER ADVENT-MISSION. See Adventist Foundation for the Blind.

Stockholm Publishing House

STOCKHOLM PUBLISHING HOUSE. See Swedish Publishing House.

Stockman, Levi F.

STOCKMAN, LEVI F. (1812—1844). A Methodist minister in the Maine Conference, expelled in 1843 by the conference for preaching Millerite views as “contrary to Methodism.” Already retired because of failing health, he died of pulmonary tuberculosis within a few months. He was the “Brother Stockman” of Portland referred to by Ellen G. White in Early Writings, pages 12, 17.

Stone, Charles Wesley

STONE, CHARLES WESLEY (d. 1883). Secretary of the General Conference, editor, teacher. He was a teacher (presumably of business subjects) for some 13 years in the Eastern states and also studied singing in Boston and New York. In 1876 he was a delegate from Vermont to the General Conference and at that time was elected secretary of the General Conference, auditor of the SDA Publishing Association, and local editor of the Review and Herald. However, his name was listed among the editors only to the end of that year, at which time he appears to have been visiting churches in Vermont. He was absent from the General Conference of the next year, but was elected secretary of the Vermont Conference. In 1879 he was ordained to the ministry and was called to Battle Creek College, where he served as principal of the Business Department and also taught singing. In 1882 he returned to Vermont, but the next winter he taught in the public schools in Battle Creek. In 1883, when apparently still in middle life, he lost his life in a railroad accident. In the funeral notice G. I. Butler noted that he had been an outstanding public speaker and perhaps the most musically gifted among the ministers at that time.

Storrs, George

STORRS, GEORGE (1796—1879). Millerite preacher and writer, chief proponent of conditional immortality. Born in New Hampshire, he was first a Congregationalist, then a Methodist. He withdrew from the Methodist ministry in 1840 to lecture against slavery. However, three years earlier Storrs had been led, by a small tract written by Henry Grew, of Philadelphia, to search the Scriptures carefully on the question of the final destiny of human beings and on their state in death. After several years of investigation, conversation, and correspondence with certain ministers, he reached the conclusion that human beings do not possess inherent immortality, but receive it only as a gift through Christ, and that the wicked who refuse the gift will be utterly exterminated through fire at the second death. In 1841 he issued An Enquiry: Are the Souls of the Wicked Immortal? In Three Letters, written originally to a friend and published anonymously.

By 1842 he felt impelled to speak out clearly to his small congregation on his views on the nature of humanity. He gave six sermons, which he revised and published as An Enquiry: Are the Souls of the Wicked Immortal? In Six Sermons (Albany, N.Y., 1842).

Soon afterward, convinced that the Adventist positions were correct, he left his ministry in Albany in 1842 to travel and preach the Adventist message. He did not introduce his personal views on the nature of humanity into these public services but, beset with inquiries, he revised his Six Sermons, and distributed them at his own expense. In 1843 the Six Sermons were also published in England. Charles Fitch accepted the doctrine of conditional immortality in January 1844, becoming Storrs's first ministerial convert. Other ministers followed. But there was opposition. William Miller himself took Storrs to task, Litch issued a little paper, the Anti-Annihilationist, against Storrs's position, and I. E. Jones protested in a letter to Miller.

In 1843 Storrs started the Bible Examiner in Albany, which advocated Miller's view of the coming of Christ in 1843—1844. He wrote a small book, in question-and-answer form, also called the Bible Examiner, a verse-by-verse exposition of the leading chapters of Daniel and of Revelation, together with Isa. 55, Zech. 14, and Matt. 24.

An effective writer and preacher, Storrs was one of the most vigorous advocates of the seventh-month expectation, but, immediately after the great disappointment of 1844 he was one of the first to disclaim the movement, attributing it to "mesmeric influence." In 1845 he embraced "Judaistic" millennial views, that is, the Literalist interpretation (see Premillennialism), according to which the kingdom prophecies were to be fulfilled literally to the literal Jews during the millennium. The Adventists continued to cite Storrs against Storrs on this subject.

In the next decade he accepted the view, advocated first by his associate editor on the Bible Examiner, that none of the wicked dead would be resurrected at all. He became president of the "Life and Advent Union," organized in 1863 to propagate this doctrine. He later returned to the view of the resurrection of all the dead.

Strahle, John Jacob

STRAHLE, JOHN JACOB (1886—1960). Publishing secretary. While in academy and college he earned scholarships each year by selling literature, and after graduating from Union College in 1916, was appointed publishing secretary in the South Dakota Conference. In 1917 he began a period of 18 years' mission service, first in the Philippines and from 1922 to 1930 served as publishing and home missionary secretary for the Far Eastern Division. From 1930 to 1935 he was publishing secretary for the Northern European Division. In 1935 he was appointed associate publishing secretary of the General Conference and in 1946 was assigned by the General Conference to direct Seventh-day Adventist war-relief work in Europe. From 1950 to his retirement in 1954 he was publishing secretary of the Southwestern Union Conference.

Straw, Walter E.

STRAW, WALTER E. (1880—1962). Missionary, educator. He was a graduate of Emmanuel Missionary College and held a master's degree from the University of Colorado. He began his denominational service as educational secretary of the Lake Union. Later he was principal of Fox River (1910—1912) and Bethel (1913—1914) academies. In 1915 he was appointed principal of Claremont Union College, South Africa, and educational secretary of the Southern African Division. Later he served also as superintendent of the Rhodesia-Nyasaland Mission (now the Zambesi Union).

Returning to the United States, he taught for three years at Southwestern Junior College, was dean of Madison College (1929—1933), head of the Department of Religion at Emmanuel Missionary College (1933—1947), and president of Madison College (1948—1950). Later he was head of the lay training school at Madison, and shortly before his death taught rural sociology and history. He spent 52 years in Seventh-day Adventist educational work.

Streeter, Henry Stephen

STREETER, HENRY STEPHEN (1890—1976). Pastor, educator. Born in Toowoomba, Queensland, Australia, he served in several conferences in the Australasian Division (now South Pacific Division). He was a Bible teacher at New Zealand Missionary College (now Longburn College) and at West Australian Missionary College (now Carmel Adventist College). He and his wife, Olive, were the first European missionaries to take the Seventh-day Adventist message to the island of Mangaia in the Cook Islands.

Strode Industrial Academy

STRODE INDUSTRIAL ACADEMY. See Enterprise Academy.

Stuart Academy

STUART ACADEMY. See Oak Park Academy.

Student

STUDENT. See Christian Record Services, Inc.

Student Aid

STUDENT AID. See Scholarships and Student Aid.

Student Missionary

STUDENT MISSIONARY. See Adventist Youth Service.

Stuttle, Lillian Dale (Avery)

STUTTLE, LILLIAN DALE (AVERY) (1855—1933). Author. Having studied at Battle Creek College, she wrote many poems, published in the Review and Herald and elsewhere. Among her books, the most popular was Making Home Happy. She also wrote Making Home Peaceful and Shiloh; and published a collection of her best poems, called Gleanings. She wrote the words to the hymn “O Let Me Walk With Thee.”

Subscription Books

SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS. Books sold by colporteurs from house to house. See Literature Evangelist.

Sudan

SUDAN. A republic in northeastern Africa bordered by Egypt on the north, the Red Sea, Ethiopia, and Eritrea on the east, Kenya, Uganda, and Zaïre on the south, and Libya, Chad, and the Central African Republic on the west. Its area is 966,757 square miles (2.5 million square kilometers), and its population (1994) 29.4 million. Arabic is the official language of the country, but in the south various African dialects are spoken, and English is widely used.

Ethnically the people range gradually from predominantly Arabic-speaking Egyptian types in the north to the dark-skinned African types in the south. Religious ties generally follow geographical lines: the Muslims, divided among several sects, represent 70 percent of the population and live in the north and central provinces; and animists and fertility worshipers comprise 25 percent of the population and are found in the south. There are small Christian communities of Copts, Greek Orthodox, Roman Catholics, and Protestants.

Sudan is referred to in the Bible as “Cush.” During its 4,000-year history it was a part of many empires: Egyptian, Roman, Byzantine, Arabic, Turkish, and British. In the seventh century B.C. Egypt was ruled by Sudanese (“Ethiopian”) pharaohs. In the sixth, seventh, and eighth centuries A.D. Sudan was a Christian kingdom and resisted the introduction of Islam. Early in the nineteenth century Egypt began to annex Sudan, and by the end of the century Sudan came under a joint British-Egyptian administration, which lasted until 1956, when Sudan became independent.

Seventh-day Adventist Work

Seventh-day Adventist Work. The territory of Sudan is assigned to the Sudan Field in the Middle East Union Mission, an attached field of the General Conference. Statistics (1993): churches, 21; members, 2,686; ordained ministers (1994), 4. Headquarters: P.O. Box 6443, Khartoum Central, Sudan, Africa. Services: ADRA, Home Health Education Service.

An exploratory survey was made as early as 1927, when Sudan was part of the assigned territory of the European Division (it was later under the Central European Division). Seventh-day Adventist workers, including colporteurs, visited the country. Then in 1953 an Egyptian licensed minister, Farris Basta Bishai, moved to Khartoum with his family. The first converts, Munir Andrawis and his wife, after attending Middle East College in Beirut (1954—1955), returned and began missionary work in the capital. They distributed relief clothing and promoted Bible correspondence school work. A Sabbath school of 11 members was reported.

Northern Sudan was assigned to the Middle East Division at the organization of the division in 1951, but southern Sudan remained within the territory of the Northern European Division until 1958. In 1953 the Sudan Station was established under the Nile Union, but later became a detached station under the division.

In the summer of 1960 four student colporteurs earned scholarships through sales of health literature in Sudan, and in 1961 S. Johnson, an American missionary, attempted to organize temperance and welfare activities at Khartoum, but could not continue working then because a residence permit was denied by the government. On Apr. 22, 1961, a third convert, a southern Sudanese from a pagan background, was baptized.

In the turmoil surrounding the civil strife of the 1960s, the church organization lost all track of SDA members in Sudan. In 1969 the Middle East Division declared Sudan an unentered territory. Then in early 1970 a literature evangelist was sent to Khartoum, the capital, to begin work there; however, he was not granted permission to work. That same year Ret Chol, a Sudanese student, graduated from Middle East College and returned to his homeland, where he was employed by the United Nations organization to help refugees in south Sudan.

The unification of the country brought an end to civil strife, and work was officially reopened in 1973. In 1974 headquarters were rented in Khartoum, and Chol was appointed director of the work. In 1993 no one was listed in the Yearbook as president. Phidee Tagalog was listed as secretary-treasurer.

The work in southern Sudan was opened officially in 1979. Missionaries who have served in Sudan since that time are: David Ogille and family, the first missionaries in southern Sudan (1979—1983); John and Linda Sines, the first construction director (1980—1981); and Jerald Whitehouse and family. Dr. Whitehouse served as mission director, and as medical director in the clinic. Judy Whitehouse, a nurse, also worked in the clinic (1980—1985). Leonard Walker served as construction director and his wife was headmistress of an elementary school for workers' children (1981—1983; 1985—1986). Richard Helms served as secretary-treasurer, and his wife taught and was headmistress of the school (1982—1983). Dr. Mary Anne McNeilus served as medical director, and her husband assisted in the clinic (1983—1984). Carl Rusk served as construction director, and his wife served as a nurse in the clinic (1983—1985). Charles Witter served as secretary-treasurer of the mission, and his wife as headmistress of the school (1984—1985). Manuel Alamo was the first agricultural missionary (1985—1989). Dr. Bayanni Minkai served as medical director in the mission clinic in Juba. When it was not safe to stay in that area, he moved to Khartoum in 1986 and served as medical advisor for ADRA/Sudan.

The clinic was opened in Juba in 1982 on mission property by Dr. Whitehouse, and soon he had more patients than he could possibly care for. Some came from more than 200 miles (320 kilometers) away for treatment.

Another service the mission is rendering is providing pure drinking water to the community of Muniki, where the mission property is located.

Sudan Field

SUDAN FIELD. See Middle East Union Mission; Sudan.

Sulawesi

SULAWESI. See Far Eastern Division; Indonesia.

Sultanate of Oman

SULTANATE OF OMAN. See Oman, Sultanate of.

Sumatra

SUMATRA. See Indonesia.

Sumbul Academy

SUMBUL ACADEMY. A day school operated by the Seventh-day Adventist Church under the control of the North Sumatra Mission. The school is located 105 miles (165 kilometers) from Medan to the southwest, in Dairi district. It was started in 1968 as a junior high school, and since 1979 has been operated as a senior high school. Government accreditation was granted in 1985.

Sumbul Academy serves churches in the Dairi district. Two elementary schools serve as the feeders, with 1,500 church members supporting the school. Most of the students enrolled in the academy are from the Dairi district; however, some of them come from Samosir, Asahan, Medan, and Deli Serdang.

Principals: Juster Simalango; M. F. Tampubolon, 1983—1990; O. Tampubolon, 1991— .

Summer Camps

SUMMER CAMPS. See Camping.

Summit Ridge Retirement Center

SUMMIT RIDGE RETIREMENT CENTER. A retirement facility owned and operated by the Oklahoma Conference. It is located several miles east of Oklahoma City. In March 1974 Mrs. Ernest Wolfe, of Jones, Oklahoma, donated a 34-acre (14-hectare) tract for a retirement center. An additional 80 acres (32 hectares) have since been purchased for expansion.

Summit Ridge is a community made up of 29 single-family residences, four duplexes, two fourplexes, and 20 mobile homes. The activity center includes offices, dining hall, eight efficiency apartments, and two wings for residential and intermediate care, providing for a total of 67 beds.

A fellowship hall and a 450-seat church are attached to the activity center, which is within walking distance of those living in the community.

Administrators: V. O. Schneider, 1976—1983; Paul G. Proctor, Jr., 1983—1992; Delbert Gilman, 1992— .

Sunday

SUNDAY. The first day of the week, named for the sun in a number of languages because it coincided with the day dedicated to the sun in the astrological week that was popular in the Roman Empire. This planetary week rose from the Hellenistic astrological practice of assigning each hour of the day to one of the seven planetary gods (the “planets” being the five visible to the naked eye, and the sun and moon) and of naming each day for the god who was supposed to preside over the first hour of the day.

The system came from the Greco-Babylonian astrology that developed after the conquest of the East by Alexander the Great. The hours were assigned to the planets in the following order: Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Sun, Venus, Mercury, Moon. Thus the Day of the Sun ended, according to this sequence, with its twenty-fourth hour ruled by Mercury; therefore, the first hour of the next day was assigned to the moon. By this system, the Day of the Sun was followed by the Day of the Moon, and so on—through Mars, Mercury, Jupiter, Venus, and Saturn, which, translated into the names of the equivalent northern European gods, give us Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and finally (back to Latin again) Saturday. According to Dio Cassius, it was known at least as early as 38 B.C., in the time of Herod the Great, that the Jews rested “on the day even then called the day of Saturn”; this shows the alignment of the biblical and the pagan week. Thus the biblical “first day of the week” was what the pagans called the Day of the Sun. (See SB, Nos. 1767—1772)

It is natural, as some have suggested, that the worship of the sun in various ancient pagan religions may have influenced the Christian preference for Sunday during the early centuries, as pagans were converted to Christianity.

I. The “First Day of the Week” in the New Testament

I. The “First Day of the Week” in the New Testament. Jesus never specifically mentioned the first day of the week, and neither He nor the NT writers ever alluded to it as a day Christians observed. Although the word Sunday does not occur in the Bible, the phrase “first day of the week” appears eight times in the NT (Matt. 28:1; Mark 16:2, 9; Luke 24:1; John 20:1, 19; Acts 20:7; 1 Cor. 16:2), the first six with reference to the day of the Lord’s resurrection.

1. The Resurrection. Jesus died and was buried on the sixth day of the week, which was “the preparation, that is, the day before the sabbath” (Mark 15:42). The Christians who attended His burial “beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid. And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the sabbath day according to the commandment” (Luke 23:55, 56). “And when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him. And very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun” (Mark 16:1, 2).

2. The Meeting With the Disciples. When Mary Magdalene and the other women told the apostles that Christ had risen, “their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not” (Luke 24:8—11; Mark 16:10, 11). When the two disciples who had met Jesus on the road to Emmaus returned to Jerusalem on the night of that same first day of the week, they likewise met with incredulity. “Neither believed they [the disciples at Jerusalem] them” (Mark 16:12, 13; Luke 24:33—35). “The same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst” (John 20:19). Note that “the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews,” not for a religious meeting. Nor was it a public gathering, for “the doors were shut”; that is, bolted and barred. Furthermore, it was probably after sunset, when, according to Jewish reckoning, the first day of the week had ended and the second day of the week had already begun (Luke 24:33—35; Mark 1:32). Moreover, Jesus “appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat” (Mark 16:14); that is, they were eating their evening meal. Instead of rejoicing when they saw Him, “they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit” (Luke 24:36, 37). It was only with difficulty that Jesus convinced them that it was really He, and that He had risen. This was not the religious gathering it is often perceived to be.

“After eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst” (John 20:24—26). At this meeting Thomas, who had not been with the disciples on the evening after the Resurrection and who remained skeptical for a full week, acknowledged the risen Lord.

This second appearance occurred “after eight days”; that is, by common inclusive reckoning, a week later, probably implying that it too took place on a Sunday night, after the second day of the week-by Jewish reckoning-had begun. The fact that the doors were again shut suggests that it was not a public meeting.

The fact that Pentecost and the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the believers at Jerusalem most probably fell on a Sunday (the day of the week is not mentioned) is merely coincidental. Pentecost would normally fall on a Sunday in a year when the Passover, Nisan 14, came on a Friday (the fiftieth day after the day of the wave sheaf, on Nisan 16). Had the fact that Pentecost fell on the first day of the week been significant, as indeed it would have been had the Holy Spirit thus intended to honor Sunday as a new day of rest in place of the Jewish Sabbath, we would expect to find mention of such an intended change in the Bible record. But the Scriptures are entirely silent concerning any significance being attached to the coincidence.

3. A Weekly Offering for the Needy. Writing to the church at Corinth toward the close of his third missionary journey, Paul gave instructions concerning the collection of a special fund for the relief of the needy believers in Judea (Acts 11:27—30). He asked that on each first day of the week every believer lay aside a certain sum for the fund “so that contributions need not be made when I come” (1 Cor. 16:2, RSV). No mention is made of a religious service on the first day of the week. On that day each believer was to “lay by him in store”—at home. For the KJV “lay by him in store” the RSV reads “put something aside and store it up.”

4. The Meeting at Troas. A few months later, on his voyage to Jerusalem, Paul spent seven days at Troas.

“Upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight.

And there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together” (Acts 20:7, 8).

Then about midnight a youth named Eutychus, who had fallen asleep in a third-story window “as Paul was long preaching,” fell to the ground and was taken up for dead; and Paul interrupted the meeting to restore the lad (verses 9, 10). When Paul “had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day,” he departed on his way to Jerusalem (Acts 20:3—14).

It should be remembered that in Bible times the Jews reckoned the solar day of 24 hours from sunset to sunset. By biblical reckoning, the first day of the week began at sunset Saturday night and ended at sunset Sunday night. If the meeting began after sunset, it would have been held between sunset Saturday night and sunrise Sunday morning. (The New English Bible, for example, reads “on the Saturday night.”) If Paul preached until midnight on Saturday night, then broke bread with the believers and conversed with them until daybreak Sunday morning and set out at dawn on foot for Assos, 19 miles (30 kilometers) away, he must have spent most of Sunday on the road traveling. Obviously, in that case Paul did not observe that Sunday, at least as a day of rest. The farewell meeting at Troas took place on that day for the reason that Paul intended to board ship at Assos the following day.

Some have insisted that the breaking of bread at Troas (v. 11) was a Communion service and that the celebration of the Lord’s Supper between sundown Saturday night and sunrise Sunday morning constitutes recognition of Sunday as the Christian Sabbath. In the first place, it should be noted that the Lord and the apostles never specified when or how often this rite should be celebrated. In the second place, the breaking of bread at that nightlong meeting may have been no more than a common meal. But if reference is to the Lord’s Supper, even this cannot be cited as evidence of special honor being accorded the first day of the week, for the same expression is used in Acts 2:47, where it is said that members of the apostolic church broke bread together every day. Finally, if the celebration of the Lord’s Supper should be on a particular day, and if such a celebration is to be considered as designating the day thus honored to be a holy day, it should be remembered that our Lord selected Thursday night as the time for instituting this rite.

5. The New Testament Evidence Evaluated. A candid examination of the eight instances in which the phrase “first day of the week” occurs in NT scriptures thus shows that neither Christ nor His apostles gave a commandment to keep that day holy. They never instructed Christians to observe Sunday, either as the Christian Sabbath or as the Lord’s day. Not once did they refer to that day as sacred or blessed, nor did they so much as intimate that secular work done on that day constituted sin. There is no instance on record of Sunday ever having been kept as a holy day in NT times in commemoration of Christ’s resurrection, or for any other purpose. The NT nowhere mentions a transfer of the obligations of the fourth commandment of the Decalogue from the seventh to the first day of the week by either the Lord or His apostles.

Because Sunday later came to be known as “the Lord’s day,” some have concluded that Revelation 1:10 refers to Sunday. The context does not reveal to what day John refers as “the Lord’s day,” but on the basis of the statement in the fourth command of the Decalogue that “the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord” (Ex. 20:10), and of Jesus’ statement that “the Son of man is Lord even of the sabbath day” (Mark 2:28), Seventh-day Adventists have concluded that John referred to the seventh day of the week. Inasmuch as the Bible contains no record whatever of a substitution of the first day of the week for the seventh-day Sabbath as the Lord's day, the assumption that John here refers to Sunday observance is unwarranted (see Sabbath).

II. Church Fathers Cited for Sunday

II. Church Fathers Cited for Sunday. 1. Spurious or Uncertain References. The Greek text of the most likely genuine form of the Epistle to the Magnesians (ch. 9), attributed to Ignatius, a bishop of Antioch early in the second century, contains the phrase kata kuriakēn zōēn zōntes, "living according to the Lord's life." The extant Latin text (a thirteenth-century translation) has no word here for "life" (corresponding to the Gr. zōēn). But since the reading "living according to the Lord's" does not make sense, some translators have supplied the word "day," as understood with the adjective "Lord's," so that the passage is made to read in English: "living according to [or in the observance of] the Lord's Day" (as translated in ANF, vol. 1, p. 62: see SB, Nos. 1404, 1614). However, other scholars translate the Greek "living a life according to the Lord's [day]" on the assumption that a later usage of kuriakē as a noun meaning "Lord's day" was valid already in Ignatius' time. Others hold that the whole passage is spurious. Obviously such a passage, offering so many alternatives as to make it impossible to know what Ignatius originally meant, is without value as evidence.

Another reference often cited for Sunday is a letter of Pliny, governor of Bithynia and Pontus, written in A.D. 112, mentioning that the Christians met "on a certain fixed day before it was light" for the celebration of certain religious rites (see SB, no. 1185a). But this does not identify the day; the reference could have been to the Sabbath as easily as to Sunday.

The so-called Epistle of Barnabas (ch. 15), belonging probably to the early or mid-second century, referring to the day of Christ's resurrection, says: "We also celebrate with gladness the eighth day" (The Apostolic Fathers [Loeb. ed.], vol. 1, p. 397).

In one of his letters (written to the bishop of Rome about A.D. 170), Dionysius, a bishop of Corinth, wrote: "Today we have passed the Lord's holy day, in which we have read your epistle" (quoted in Eusebius, Ecclesiastical History, bk. 4, ch. 23). The context does not reveal what day is meant by the expression "the Lord's holy day."

The Didache, a treatise supposed to belong to the same period, enjoins (ch. 14) the doing of something "according to the Lord's of the Lord" (kataV kuriakhVn deV kurivou), which does not make sense. Obviously the Greek text is defective. Translators have generally rendered this as "the Lord's day of the Lord" by supplying the word "day" in the translation on the supposition that the reference is to Sunday; that is mere guesswork.

2. Justin's Sunday Services. The first clear, authentic, uninterpolated witness to regular Sunday observance among early Christians is Justin Martyr's First Apology, ch. 67: "On the day called Sunday, all who live in cities or in the country gather together to one place, and the memoirs of the apostles or the writings of the prophets are read. . . . Sunday is the day on which we all hold our common assembly" (see SB, no. 1407a). This Apology usually is considered to have been written at Rome in A.D. 155; there is, however, some evidence from Justin's other writings and from Eusebius that Justin may have observed Sunday when living in Ephesus before he came to Rome, and if so, as early as A.D. 135 or earlier.

Thus, until about the middle of the second century, there is no certain mention of Sunday as a weekly holy day, but after Justin's Apology (perhaps A.D. 155) there are a series of references to that day by various Church Fathers. It should be noted, however, that although evidence for Sunday observance can thus be traced back almost to apostolic times (see extract quoted in Present Truth 1:82, November 1850), this early Sunday observance amounted almost entirely to participation in religious services. Sunday was not confused with "sabbath" and was not considered a day of obligatory rest until the sixth century or later.

3. "Lord's Day" Applied to Sunday. A fragment of a spurious Gospel of Peter, dated perhaps about A.D. 155(?)–180, refers twice to the day of Christ's resurrection (in secs. 9 and 12) as "the Lord's day."

In his Miscellanies (bk. 5, ch. 14), Clement of Alexandria (about the close of the second century) alleges that Plato, a pagan Greek philosopher, had prophetically spoken of "the Lord's day" in the tenth book of his work entitled The Republic. (Actually, Plato speaks of the souls of the dead setting out on "the eighth [day]" after "seven days had elapsed for each group in the meadow" in their travel through the planetary heavens to the place where they would choose the lives for their next reincarnation.) In another place (Miscellanies, bk. 7, ch. 12) Clement says that the Christian keeps "the Lord's day, when he abandons an evil disposition, and assumes that of the Gnostic glorifying the Lord's resurrection in himself."

The apocryphal Acts of Paul (A.D. 180—200) says that Paul prayed on the Sabbath as the Lord's day was coming on. The apocryphal Acts of Peter, written around A.D. 200, speaks of Peter as holding his preaching assemblies on "the Lord's day," the day after the Sabbath.

Thus the phrase "Lord's day" seems to have been in use in the closing years of the second century, even though it was probably not fully established in common parlance by that time. Scholars generally regard these references to Sunday as "the Lord's day" as authentic. If so, they are the earliest unquestionable examples from Christian writers.

4. Easter Lends Prestige to Sunday. In the early part of the second century many Christians were commemorating Christ's sufferings and death by special services, particularly the Lord's Supper, on the Passover day, the fourteenth of the first lunar month according to the current Jewish calendar, on whatever day of the week it might fall each year. This practice had not been commanded in the Bible, but neither was it expressly forbidden.

Perhaps as early as Sixtus (pastor in Rome, c., A.D. 115—c., A.D. 125), and certainly as early as Anicetus (c. A.D. 155—c., A.D. 156), the church in Rome made it a point to set the annual spring celebration of Christ's resurrection only on a Sunday, a custom that became generally accepted except in the Roman province of Asia. Victor (c. A.D. 189—c., A.D. 198), bishop of Rome at the end of the second century, excommunicated the "Quartodeciman" Christians in Asia Minor because they celebrated on the 14th of Nisan rather than always on a Sunday. (See SB, Nos. 654—657.) There is no doubt that Rome very early revealed a strong preference for Sunday.

5. The Qumran Theory. A. Jaubert and J. van Goudoever have proposed that Christian Sunday observance was derived from an ancient Jewish sectarian practice, as reflected in the ancient Qumran literature. The religious calendar given by the Book of Jubilees assigns all major religious festivals to Wednesdays, Fridays, and Sundays. Obviously, for the people of Qumran these three days were of special significance. But there is no evidence that Sunday held any preeminence above Wednesday or Friday. Nevertheless, it is possible that the favor shown Sunday by the Qumran sect may have contributed indirectly in some way to the later Christian observance of Sunday (see Earle Hilgert, “Jubilees and the Origin of Sunday,” Andrews University Seminary Studies 1:44—51, 1963).

6. Sunday in Paganism. In referring to the first day of the week, Justin used the phrase “Day of the Sun.” This was the pagan name for the biblical first day of the week. It was not yet official in the Roman calendar, but had been used for two centuries or more in astrology. For the astrological week, see the introductory paragraph of this article.

As the legions of Rome extended their conquests deep into the Middle East from the first century before Christ and onward, Persian Mithraism rapidly became popular among soldiers and traders. The worship of Mithra as the Invincible Sun (Sol Invictus), spreading westward to the Atlantic Coast, the Iberian Peninsula, and the British Isles, became popular generally throughout the Roman Empire. By the middle of the second century A.D., Mithraism had become the foremost rival of Christianity. As pagans venerated Sunday as the day of the week dedicated to the Invincible Sun, Christians tended to honor the day in commemoration of the resurrection of Christ from the dead. The writings of the Church Fathers abundantly reveal a growing intermingling of pagan philosophy and customs with the doctrines and religious practices of Christianity. Gnostic Christian philosophy and its allegorization of the Bible facilitated this fusion of paganism and Christianity. This syncretism became so pronounced that in the time of Tertullian (A.D. 180—220) cultured pagans thought of Sundaykeeping Christians as worshipers of the sun and, therefore, as “Persians,” or worshipers of Mithra (Tertullian, Apology, ch. 16; Ad Nationes, bk. 1, ch. 13).

The emperor Aurelian (A.D. 270—275) made sun worship the official imperial cult. He built a new temple in which he placed the statues of the Babylonian god Bel and of Helios (the sun) that he had captured from Palmyra. Thus the ancient Roman gods were replaced by the Chaldean-Greek solar pantheism from the East.

Sol Invictus became supreme as Sol Dominus Imperii Romani, “the Sun, the Lord of the Roman Empire” (see SB, Nos. 1344, 1565, 1572, 1573). It remained so until the Emperor Constantine I (A.D. 306—337) made Christianity the privileged religion. Reared a devotee of the Invincible Sun, Constantine remained pontifex maximus (supreme pontiff) of state paganism until his death. The image of Sol Invictus was stamped on coins issued during his reign, with inscriptions declaring the Invincible Sun to be his constant protector and companion. Even in his Sunday laws, by which he attempted to compel the observance of the first day of the week by resting from secular labor, Constantine referred to it only as “the venerable day of the Sun” and “the day of the Sun, noted for its veneration” (edicts of March and July A.D. 321; see SB, Nos. 1643, 1647). See also Robert Leo Odom, Sunday in Roman Paganism.

7. Basis Cited for Sunday Observance. The fourth commandment seems never to have been cited in the early centuries as referring to Sunday; rather, the Resurrection was the reason given. The idea of rest was not connected with it. Tertullian (third century) made an isolated reference to trying not to work on that day; otherwise, until the end of the third century Sunday generally was regarded by Christians as merely a day of joy on which fasting was out of place, worshipers prayed standing rather than kneeling, and services were held for preaching and celebrating of the Lord’s Supper.

In the fourth century a change occurred in the status of Sunday, following the supposed conversion of Constantine. The first Sunday law, Constantine's Sunday edict of March A.D. 321, the first civil Sunday law on record, forbade Sunday work in cities and towns but specifically exempted farm work. The first church enactment, at the Council of Laodicea later in the same century, urged Christians to rest on Sunday if possible. Near the end of the century the notable John Chrysostom instructed his congregation to go home after the church service to meditate on the sermon before resuming ordinary pursuits (Homilies on . . . Matthew, no. 5, sec. 1); yet there seems to have been no general obligation to refrain from work. Chrysostom's contemporary Jerome spoke casually of the women attending church and then returning to their sewing after the service (letter 108, see SB, Nos. 1640, 1641).

The Theodosian code (mid-fifth century) indicates that by that time Sunday was solidly established in the Western Roman Empire. When the empire collapsed, the barbarian invaders, mostly Arians, were observing Sunday. The first "Christian" Frankish ruler, Clovis (481—511), kept Sunday by what he considered a divine command. By 538, the climate of opinion in France, at least, had so developed in favor of Sunday that even farmers, who had been exempted from Constantine's Sunday law, were forbidden by a church council, the third synod of Orleans, to work on Sunday. Pope Gregory the Great (590—604) mentions that some insisted on overstrict Sunday observance. He considered the Sabbath commandment to be essentially spiritual, yet he said that Sunday should be observed by a cessation of earthly labor (Epistles, xiii.1).

To judge from the extant sources, Sunday observance began in the middle of the second century and spread gradually as a day for voluntary religious services and as an ecclesiastical festival commemorating Christ's resurrection on the first day of the week, but not replacing the observance of the seventh-day Sabbath; but by the sixth century it became in some places a day of enforced rest and obligatory church attendance. In the eighth century Charlemagne declared Sunday rest to be enjoined by the law of God (see SB, Nos. 1650, 1653), although this was not official Catholic doctrine.

The seventh-day Sabbath was kept by many Christians in many lands along with Sunday; it was observed for centuries in the Eastern Orthodox churches as a day for worship; also, in Ethiopia and in other places (see Sabbath).

The Catholic Church enforced Sunday, but never as the Sabbath. It taught that the observance of Sunday under the "new law" is not based on a legal precept, but on the decision of the church.

III. Sunday and Protestantism

III. Sunday and Protestantism. 1. The Reformation Period and After. The Reformers of the sixteenth century followed the Catholic practice of Sunday observance in contradiction of their claim to make the Bible their sole rule of faith and practice. Though most of them acknowledged that Sunday observance was merely an ecclesiastical institution that had no foundation in the Bible, they found it so deeply entrenched in religious custom and civil law that they preferred to leave it alone rather than attempt to return to the observance of the seventh-day Sabbath.

The Reformers held that Sunday observance was not juris divini (of divine law), but only quasi juris divini (of semidivine law); yet they objected to the Catholic claim that it had been appointed by the authority of the church (Augsburg Confession of 1536, part 2, art. 7, “Of Ecclesiastical Power”). As for Karlstadt, the sacramentarian and mystic, he was not sure (“Concerning Sunday, it is known that men have instituted it”). He did not take a positive stand on the Sabbath (see SB, no. 1374).

The Catholic dialectician, Johann Eck, taunted the Protestants with the Catholic claim that “the Church has changed the Sabbath into the Lord’s (day) by its own authority, concerning which you have no scripture” (Eck, Enchiridion [1533], fols. 4v, 5r; see SB, no. 1445). The Roman Church has often freely acknowledged making the change, and in fact, declares that the idea of Sunday sacredness is a distinctive “mark” of Catholicism that reflects on Protestants (see SB, Nos. 1436—1445, etc.).

At the Council of Trent (1545—1563) the keeping of the Lord’s day was held to be a divine commandment, but the time of observance was said to be susceptible to change. The council retained the classic argument that the first day of the week is a memorial of the resurrection of our Lord. The obligation to hear mass every Sunday is one of the “commandments of the church.”

2. “Sabbath” Applied to Sunday. The theory that Sunday is the transplanted Sabbath of the fourth commandment is of Puritan origin, dating from the late sixteenth century (see SB, Nos. 1631—1635; cf. no. 1602).

The English Puritans and the Scottish Calvinists kept the “Sabbath” (Sunday) with extreme strictness. The Puritan Westminster Confession of 1647 decreed Sunday as the “Christian Sabbath” (ch. 21; now 23; see SB, no. 1602). As a consequence, in English-speaking countries there is still confusion between the terms Sabbath and Sunday.

IV. Seventh-day Adventists and Sunday

IV. Seventh-day Adventists and Sunday. In advocating the seventh-day Sabbath, SDAs since early times have also devoted considerable attention to the history of Sunday, especially to evidence that it was not observed in NT times, and that the change from Sabbath to Sunday came gradually during the early Christian centuries, accompanying the general apostasy that reached its climax in the formation of the Roman Catholic Church. In the early publications they examined the few NT references to the first day of the week at considerable length, and found them lacking in evidence for either a specific command to observe the day, or even for its actual observance as a Christian day of rest (for example, in Present Truth 1:11, August 1849) and discussed the concept that the Papacy is primarily responsible for Sunday worship in the church (ibid. 1:4, July 1849). The Present Truth and early issues of the Review and Herald made considerable use of a series of tracts on the Sabbath published by the Seventh Day Baptists.

They also went further than the Seventh Day Baptists and connected the idea of Sunday as a false sabbath with the third angel’s message of Revelation 14:6—12 (see Three Angels’ Messages), and thus looked ahead to a future enforcement of Sunday in place of the Sabbath as a great final test of allegiance, just before the Second Advent (see Mark of the Beast; see also Sabbath; Week).

Sunday Laws

SUNDAY LAWS. Civil legal requirements to perform or to abstain from certain activities on Sunday, the first day of the week. Through the centuries Sunday laws have been used to enforce the religious observance of and respect for the Christian Sunday. Therefore, religious reasons have been given for these enactments—first, the authority of the church; later, the authority of the Decalogue, on the theory that the fourth commandment, which enjoins the observance of the seventh day, can be invoked to enforce observance of the first day of the week. Alongside this religious basis, which is still recognized in many lands, another basis has been sought on the theory that Sunday laws can be classed, not as religious legislation, but as secular welfare regulations. (This basis has been used in the United States. Most of this article deals with the United States, although the principles enunciated in it are universal.)

Seventh-day Adventists concern themselves with the problem of Sunday laws because such legislation is involved in the whole problem of church-state relations and religious liberty.

The Seventh-day Adventist Church opposes Sunday laws not only because they cause hardship, but also because they contravene the principle of separation of church and state as enunciated by Christ (Matt. 22:21). All types of Sunday laws are opposed on principle because these laws have religious implications, tending to state recognition of Sunday as a holy day, and therefore enter the area of state prescription of religious observances and open the door to religious discrimination.

The lesson of history is that even seemingly innocent Sunday laws, secular in purpose and civil in form, may become an instrument of religious persecution. The Seventh-day Adventist Church has taken the position that laws mandating one day's rest in seven are less objectionable than those designating a specific day, because the one-day-rest-in-seven provision would recognize the constitutional rights of all people, regardless of their day of worship, and would not give preference to any religious beliefs (see General Conference Committee Minutes, Apr. 15, 1959).

Development of Sunday Laws. The first Sunday law was decreed by the half-pagan, half-Christian Roman emperor Constantine I, and appears to have had no direct relation to Christianity. It reads as follows: "On the venerable Day of the Sun let the magistrates and people residing in the cities rest, and let all workshops be closed. In the country, however, persons engaged in agriculture may freely and lawfully continue their pursuits; because it often happens that another day is not so suitable for grain-sowing or for vine-planting; lest by neglecting the proper moment for such operations the bounty of heaven should be lost. (Given the 7th of March, Crispus and Constantine being consuls each of them for the second time [A.D. 321])" (Codex Justinianus, lib. 3, tit. 12, 3; trans. in Philip Schaff, History of the Christian Church [5th ed.], vol. 3, p. 380, note 1; see also SB, no. 1642).

This law enforcing the "Day of the Sun" became the parent of subsequent Sunday legislation, which under the Catholic rulers assumed a Christian character and an increasing strictness, and during the Middle Ages was enforced by civil laws under a union of church and state.

In England the earliest known Sunday law dates from the reign of Ina, king of Wessex, about A.D. 690; it consisted of a part of the enactments of a church council that were incorporated by the king into his Book of Laws (Karl J. Hefele, A History of the Councils of the Church, vol. 5, pp. 242, 243). Sunday laws have been continuous in England since that time.

In the sixteenth century, English Sunday laws began not only to forbid certain actions on that day but also to prescribe positive acts, such as church attendance. During the period of Puritan ascendancy the theocratic theory was reflected in the British religious laws and in those in Puritan New England. A Sunday law of the twenty-ninth year of Charles II, in force in England for almost 200 years, became the model for many American Colonial and later state Sunday laws (see SB, no. 1656).

The first Sunday law in the area now occupied by the United States was promulgated for Virginia in 1619 and required attendance at Sunday services, with the death penalty prescribed for the third offense. It was part of a harsh code that was imposed on the colony by the British governor but was never enforced. However, the colony passed a law in 1624 imposing fines for absence from church. Sunday laws were passed by the other American colonies, notably those that later became the New England states. These sumptuary laws, popularly called blue laws, forbade such activities on Sunday as working, engaging in games or recreation, jesting, sleeping late, drinking, or even walking and riding except to lawful assemblies. The purpose of these laws was to protect Sunday as a day of worship in fulfillment of the Sabbath commandment of the Decalogue, and those who violated them were subject to penalties ranging from economic disabilities to death. There are historical records of colonists being fined, put in the stocks, or publicly whipped because of seemingly trivial violations of Sunday laws.

The founders of the American Republic saw the wisdom of separating church and state in order to preserve religious freedom and prevent religious persecution. This they accomplished by declaring in the Constitution that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." But most of the states carried over, or adopted into their state constitutions, Sunday laws that they had inherited from the Colonial charters. A number of these laws have remained unenforced on the statute books, but from time to time they have been invoked to persecute dissenters.

As early as the 1870s a number of states had begun to enforce their Sunday laws against Sabbathkeepers. Vermont, Michigan, and California each had a case of a Seventh-day Adventist arrested for Sunday labor, but in each instance the charge was dropped or dismissed by the judge or jury.

In July 1878 Samuel Mitchel, of Quitman, Brooks County, Georgia, was arrested and sentenced to 30 days in jail. Because of the unsanitary conditions in the jail, his health was affected and he became an invalid and died seven months later, Feb. 4, 1879.

Persecution of Sabbathkeepers continued during the 1880s, culminating in the trial of R. M. King, of Obion County, Tennessee. His case was carried through successive state and federal courts, arriving at last in the Supreme Court of the United States. Because of King's death, the case was not heard. Arkansas, Maryland, Missouri, and Virginia also enforced their Sunday laws.

In 1888 Senator H. W. Blair of New Hampshire introduced a Sunday bill into the United States Congress enforcing Sunday in all federal territories as a “day of worship”; also a religious education amendment to the Constitution. Both were supported by the National Reform Association, organized in 1863 with the purpose of amending the Constitution of the United States so as to declare the country “a Christian nation” and to place “all Christian laws, institutions, and usages, on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental laws of the land” (quoted in American Sentinel 1:1, January 1886).

Seventh-day Adventist leaders recognized that this movement represented a serious threat to the principle of separation of church and state and strongly opposed it (see Public Affairs and Religious Liberty, Department of). In 1888 Ellen White wrote: “We see that efforts are now being made to restrict our religious liberties. The Sunday question is now assuming large proportions. An amendment to our Constitution is being urged in Congress, and when it is obtained, oppression must follow” (Review and Herald 65:786, Dec. 18, 1888).

Although indicating that “we do not believe that the time has fully come” when these liberties would be restricted, she called the movements leading to the religious amendment “the plain, direct fulfillment of prophecy” (5T 717, 719).

In 1884 SDAs began publishing the Sabbath Sentinel, and in 1886 the American Sentinel. The magazines were published for the purpose of alerting the citizenry to the dangers of Sunday legislation. In 1889, for the first time, SDA leaders appeared in the legislative halls of the nation as champions of church-state separation. On July 21, 1889, the church organized the Religious Liberty Association to oppose Sunday legislation and assist those who were brought into court because of violation of Sunday laws.

Prosecution under state Sunday laws continued. In 1892 three SDAs in Henry County, western Tennessee, were forced to serve in a chain gang. In Graysville, Rhea County, three years later (1895), 18 SDAs, including the principal and teachers of the school, were indicted, convicted, and sentenced to the chain gang. An attempt was made to prosecute every male member of the SDA Church in Springville, Tennessee.

SDA leaders counseled avoidance, without compromising principle, of offending sensitive neighbors who regarded Sunday as sacred. Members were urged to “obey the laws of our land, unless they conflict with the higher law which God spoke . . . from Sinai.” In 1902 Ellen White advised, in case of Sunday-law enforcement, devoting Sunday to missionary activities rather than to ordinary work (9T 232).

After the turn of the century, when most Americans adopted an increasingly liberal attitude toward Sunday activities, stringent Sunday laws gradually became outmoded, and as a consequence were no longer enforced. Sporadic arrests of Sabbathkeepers continued, but on a lessened scale. A summary of arrests as well as accounts of cases can be found in American State Papers and Related Documents on Freedom of Religion (Review and Herald, 1949).

In 1961 the Supreme Court of the United States handed down four Sunday law decisions in one day: McGowan v. Maryland, 366 US 420; Two Guys From Harrison-Allentown, Inc., v. McGinley, 366 US 582; Braunfeld v. Brown, 366 US 599; and Gallagher v. Crown Koshers Market, 366 US 617. (See SB, Nos. 1669—1674.) At that time 49 of the states and the District of Columbia had Sunday laws, 12 states had exemptions for those observing Saturday as the Sabbath, and two different federal courts had given conflicting decisions on the constitutionality of Sunday laws.

The Massachusetts Sunday law had been declared unconstitutional by Judge Magreeder, May 18, 1959, in the majority decision of a three-man federal court in Boston because it “established” the Christian religion and violated the free exercise of religion of the owners of the Crown Kosher Supermarket of Springfield, Massachusetts.

On Dec. 1, 1959, Judge Hastie, in the unanimous decision of the federal court in Philadelphia, had declared Pennsylvania’s law constitutional because the Supreme Court of the United States had refused to review the constitutionality of a New York Sunday-closing law in 1951.

As a result of these two conflicting decisions, the Supreme Court accepted jurisdiction in these cases and in a 60,000-word decision, longest in recent history, Chief Justice Earl Warren, speaking for the Court in the majority opinion, said: “There is no dispute that the original laws which dealt with Sunday labor were motivated by religious forces. But what we must decide is whether present Sunday legislation, having undergone extensive changes from the earliest forms, still retains its religious character. . . . In the light of the evolution of our Sunday closing laws through the centuries and of their more or less recent emphasis upon secular considerations, it is not difficult to discern that as presently written and administered, most of them, at least, are of a secular rather than of a religious character and presently bear no relationship to the establishment of religion as those words are used in the Constitution of the United States” (McGowan v. Maryland, 366 US 420, at pp. 431, 444; see SB, no. 1669).

In brief, the Court held for the “power of a state to establish a secular day of rest and held irrelevant the fact that the day generally appointed has a religious origin and for many people a continuing religious significance” (Harold E. Fey, editorial, Christian Century 78:867, July 19, 1961). Justice William O. Douglas dissented in all four cases, holding that Sunday laws violated the establishment clause of the First Amendment. He declared that the “question is whether a state can impose criminal sanctions on those who, unlike the Christian majority that makes up our society, worship on a different day or do not share the religious scruples of the majority” (McGowan v. Maryland, 366 US 420, at p. 561).

In the Braunfeld v. Brown and Gallagher v. Crown Kosher Market decisions, Justices Potter Stewart and William J. Brennan also dissented in separate concurring dissents. Justice Stewart held that “Pennsylvania has passed a law which compels an Orthodox Jew to choose between his religious faith and his economic survival. That is a cruel choice. It is a choice which I think no state can constitutionally demand. For me this is not something that can be swept under the rug and forgotten in the interest of enforced Sunday togetherness” (Braunfeld v. Brown, 366 US 599, at p. 616; see SB, no. 1673).

Justice Brennan, in his dissent, said: “In other words, the issue in this case . . . is whether a state may put an individual to a choice between his business and his religion. The Court today holds that it may. But I dissent, believing that such a law prohibits the free exercise of religion. . . . The Court, in my view, has exalted administrative convenience to a constitutional level high enough to justify making one religion economically disadvantageous. The Court would justify the result on the ground that the effect on religion, though substantial, is indirect. The Court forgets, I think, a warning uttered during the congressional discussion of the First Amendment itself: ‘. . . the rights of conscience are, in their nature, of peculiar delicacy, and will little bear the gentlest touch of governmental hand” (Braunfeld v. Brown, 366 US 599, at pp. 611, 616; see SB, no. 1671).

On Dec. 17, 1962, the Supreme Court left standing a state court ruling upholding the constitutionality of Kentucky’s Sunday-closing law, which had been challenged because it provided exemptions for individuals observing Saturday or any other day as their Sabbath (Evening Star, Washington, D.C., Dec. 17, 1962, p. A-2). The energy crisis of autumn 1973 triggered a precipitate rush to secure stronger Sunday-closing laws in many states. In the Indiana state legislature a bill was proposed that made the violation of the Sunday-closing law a criminal offense, with a maximum fine for the first offense of $5,000. Urgent presentations by the Indiana Conference religious liberty secretary and church members defeated this measure. In California a Sunday-closing bill was defeated by the action of the religious liberty secretaries of that state.

Some relaxation of Sunday legislation is noted. In 1973 the Ohio state legislature rescinded the state Sunday-closing law. In 1974 the Sunday-closing law of the state of Virginia was amended to allow local option. Several churches in Virginia circulated petitions to have this option placed on the ballot for the November election.

Sunday School, Seventh-day Adventist

SUNDAY SCHOOL, SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST. A branch Bible school (the equivalent of a branch Sabbath school) held on Sunday.

Sundhedsbladet

SUNDHEDSBLADET. See Danish Publishing House; Denmark; Periodicals \(Danish\).

Sung Yuk Won

SUNG YUK WON. See Seoul Adventist Hospital Orphanage.

Sunny Hill College

SUNNY HILL COLLEGE (Kolej Sunny Hill). A coeducational day school on the senior high school level, operated by the Sarawak Mission. It is situated three miles (five kilometers) from Kuching, the capital of Sarawak, Malaysia.

Sunny Hill School opened its doors in two rented shop houses in 1925, with Tsau Teck Shin as principal. The next year the school was moved to the present school compound and housed in a humble building. Successive principals, until the school was closed in 1942 because of World War II, were T. Y. Tan, L. B. Tamboenan from Indonesia, Daniel Liem and S. F. Chu from Malaya, Gloria Tan from Singapore, and W.W.R. Lake.

The enrollment of 10 boys and girls in 1927 increased to 60 by 1930. By the end of 1940 the school had 11 grades, with almost 300 students. To cope with the growing needs a new building was erected, but World War II closed the school between 1942 and 1945.

In 1964, with the completion of a 10-room building, Sunny Hill became a 12-grade school.

A multipurpose building—including an auditorium, library, science laboratory, and classrooms—was completed in 1974 and dedicated in honor of R. C. Hall, Sarawak Mission president from 1962 to 1974. A new four-story building was completed in 1991. It includes 11 classrooms, a staff room, a general office, two lecture theaters, and a library. In 1991, 10 computers were acquired to boost the computer program. Accounting courses were offered in 1991. In 1993 the secondary enrollment was 614, with a staff of 27. The medium of instruction is Malay.

Principals (after World War II): Chong Chen Lun (acting), 1945—1946; L.E.A. Fox, 1947—1956; A. R. Musgrave, 1957—1960; James Wong, 1961—1966; D. F. Aldridge, 1967—1968; W. F. Choo, 1969—1975; G. A. Pauner, 1975—1976; W. F. Choo, 1977—1980; Gordon Chong, 1981—1992; Roland Suboh, 1993— .

Sunnydale Academy

SUNNYDALE ACADEMY. A coeducational boarding school on the senior high school level, situated on 754 acres (300 hectares) of level ground five miles (eight kilometers) west of Centralia, Missouri, just off Highway 22. The school address is Route 2, Box 144, Centralia, Missouri. It is owned by the Iowa-Missouri Conference. Enrollment for the 1993—1994 school year was 132; the number of faculty 20.

When the Missouri Conference saw the need for its own boarding school, plans were laid at a 1945 business meeting in Kansas City, Missouri, to establish one. There was a strong desire to find a rural location where agriculture might furnish training and employment for students, and an invitation from the Centralia Chamber of Commerce prompted the committee of seven, under the leadership of G. E. Hughes, then president of the Missouri Conference, to investigate the Centralia area. A. Bishop Chance, founder of A. B. Chance Company of Centralia, Missouri, offered to sell his well-equipped farm for half its valuation, but for lack of funds the Missouri Conference felt it could not accept. However, when Chance proposed to sell the farm with machinery, cattle, and dairy (which was considered among the best in the state) for $70,000, the committee tentatively closed the deal on Oct. 18, 1945. General Conference action approving the transaction was taken on Nov. 1, 1945. After the erection of two fireproof, three-story, red-brick dormitories, Sunnydale Academy opened on Sept. 30, 1946, with Harvey C. Hartman as the first principal, and with an enrollment of 125. Student rooms were used for classrooms, and the hayloft of the barn was used for assembly and recreation purposes.

In 1946 Sunnydale Foods was established as an industry for students. Orley Moris served as the first manager, and the following year C. M. Babcock became manager. The industry closed in 1968. Through the years a number of industries have provided student employment: Dakota Bake-n-Serve (1969—1976), broom shop (1980—1987), and Blaze King Stoves (1981—1988). Diversified Plastics of Nixa, Missouri, started a plant on the campus in 1976 and has expanded five times since that date. It currently employs 24 students. Sunnydale Industries, a manufacturer of oxygen tent canopies and other respiratory care items, started production in 1980 and employs 21 students.

A red-brick veneer three-story administration building was erected in 1950, for which materials were obtained by dismantling government barracks buildings, and almost all labor was done by students. A gymnasium was added in 1953. On Aug. 17, 1962, the dairy and farm buildings were destroyed by fire. Other buildings were added as the need arose. A cafeteria building was completed in 1973, a church sanctuary was erected for worship in 1976, and a building for teaching auto mechanics was completed in 1976. A two-story west wing was added to the girls' dormitory in 1984, and a one-story east wing housing four guest rooms and a chapel was added to the boys' dorm in 1987. In 1985—1986 the administration building was renovated. The construction of a new music building and a renovation of the gymnasium were completed in October of 1989.

The merging of the Iowa and Missouri conferences and the closing of Iowa's Oak Park Academy occurred in 1980. A number of Iowa students chose to come to Sunnydale that year, and Sunnydale has been the academy for the Iowa-Missouri Conference since that time.

Sunnydale Academy is accredited by the Board of Regents of the General Conference Office of Education and by the University of Missouri's Committee on Accredited Schools-Non-Public. Sunnydale is also authorized to accept foreign students. Instruction includes English, mathematics, science, social studies, home economics, keyboarding/computer literacy, business education, industrial arts, a full complement of musical groups and gymnastics, plus other one- and two-year courses. The enrollment reached a peak of 175 in 1988—1989.

The school publishes an annual, Reveries, and a school paper, the Triangle (which represents training of the head, heart, and hand).

Principals: Harvey C. Hartman, 1946—1947; Lloyd S. Davis, 1947—1951; Richard J. Larson, 1951—1954; Lloyd S. Davis, 1954—1956; Roy E. Perrin, 1956—1961; Joseph M. Stone, 1961—1963; Keith M. Wiseman, 1963—1964; Don R. Cantrell, 1964—1967; E. W. Spaulding, 1967—1969; Melvin Holm, 1969—1971; Wayne E. Olson, 1971—1978; James Wyche, 1978—1979; John Ward, 1979—1983; Larry Marsh, 1983—1991; Jim Wampler, 1992—1993; Barry Warren, 1993— .

Sunnydale Foods

SUNNYDALE FOODS. See Sunnydale Academy.

Sunnyside

SUNNYSIDE. See White, Ellen G.

Sunnyside Lodge

SUNNYSIDE LODGE. A home for aged persons operated by the Cape Conference of Seventh-day Adventists in Plumstead, a suburb of Cape Town, South Africa. It opened in 1959, accommodating 16 persons. Because of rapid growth, the original residence was remodeled in 1969 and a modern wing added of 23 single rooms. Subsequently, three houses were built as annexes. This increased the capacity from 58 to 72. It is staffed by both European and non-European personnel.

Sunnyside Nursing Home

SUNNYSIDE NURSING HOME. The first conference-owned nursing home in Canada. Built by the Manitoba-Saskatchewan Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, it is a one-story building situated at 2200 St. Henry Ave., Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. It was opened in January 1965 and expanded in 1968 to a bed capacity of 106. The staff of 115 includes 15 registered nurses.

Designed and licensed to provide professional nursing care for heavy care patients, it is incorporated under provincial charter as a nonprofit institution and recognized as a community service of the SDA Church. Construction cost and operating expenses are subsidized by the government of Saskatchewan.

Sunshine Band

SUNSHINE BAND. The former name for a group of people engaged in Christian community service and local missionary work. The first such band was formed in 1894 by Luther Warren in South Dakota. Its purpose was to “do something for somebody every day.” The early Sunshine Bands preceded the Organization of MV Societies (later called AY Societies). The name later was applied to groups within the MV organization formed specifically to sing to shut-ins, to help elderly people, and to engage in other MV community service projects. In recent years it has come to be applied to church groups of all ages engaged in this kind of activity.

Superbom—Chile

SUPERBOM—CHILE. A food plant located on the campus of the Adventist University of Chile. Under the direction of Alajo Pizzaro, director of the food company for the South American Division, this plant was started in 1976. Its first line of products was canned fruit, vegetables, and school-size prepared meals. Shortly after, dried fruit (especially pears and apples) were added for export to Europe. Later lines of concentrated juices and processed milk were started. In 1993, 20 tons of dried fruit was produced monthly, with 110 people working three daily shifts. Total sales were US$378,400. In June 1992 management of this industry was turned over to the university.

Managers: Aurelio Vega Tapia, 1977—1981; Raul Perez Perez, 1989—1990; Roger Gonzalez Palma, 1991—1992.

Superior Mission

SUPERIOR MISSION. A former unit of church organization occupying the upper peninsula of Michigan, separated for a time from the Michigan Conference. (See Lake Union Conference; Michigan Conference.)

Surabaya Academy

SURABAYA ACADEMY (Perguruan Advent Surabaya). A senior high school operated by the Anjasmoro church under the supervision of the East Java Conference, located in the city of Surabaya. It also includes an elementary and junior high school. The kindergarten and elementary school operate in the morning, while the junior and senior high schools operate in the afternoon.

The enrollment of senior high students in 1993 was 85, with 69 junior high students. Sixty percent of them are Seventh-day Adventists. There is a staff of 16 teachers in the high school.

Principals: P. Souisa, 1985—1988; Amos Sardiman, 1989—1990; Basir Sucipto, 1991; Lily Alfian, 1992— .

Surat Hospital

SURAT HOSPITAL. A general 130-bed hospital in the city of Surat, Gujarat, India, about 150 miles (250 kilometers) north of Bombay, operated by the Surat Hospital Trust Association of Seventh-day Adventists (a holding trust association formed by the Western India Union to solicit and receive funds for the construction of the hospital). It provides services in medical, surgical, obstetrics and gynecology, dental, and other higher specialty care. The diagnostic facilities available are radiodiagnosis, clinical laboratory, and electrocardiography. There is also a Physiotherapy Department and a pharmacy. The School of Nursing that was started in 1988 has trained 129 nurses. In 1993, 20 students were being selected annually for the program.

In addition to the hospital activities, the institution also maintains a first-aid center staffed around the clock at the Reliance Industries Ltd. The recently initiated Bhattar Slum Project provides care for pregnant women and children under 3 years of age.

SDA medical work began in Surat in August 1936, when Dr. George A. Nelson operated a small clinic on Station Road. This was moved in 1937 to a rented bungalow in Nanpura, where accommodations were made for a few inpatients. As the small enterprise flourished, additional nurses were employed.

The public soon requested that a full hospital be opened, and large sums were contributed to the cost of the institution, which were supplemented by funds from the Southern Asia Division of Seventh-day Adventists. A 10-acre (four-hectare) plot immediately outside the Surat city limits was acquired, and in 1940 construction began. A 25-bed hospital was opened in January 1942, which took the name of Surat Hospital. At that time the front (north) wing, the east wing, and the separate surgery building were completed.

In 1967 a west block was added, with eight private rooms and one general ward. The first floor of the west wing was completed in 1967. In 1976 the second floor of the west wing was completed. In 1979, as the city extended its limits, the campus came within the urban area and the hospital had to give up some land to the government for the development of a highway. With this, the old Charity Ward had to be demolished.

In 1992 the staff consisted of six full-time doctors, of which four are Seventh-day Adventists. Fifteen honorary consultants, 47 nurses, and 100 other employees also serve.

Medical Directors: G. A. Nelson, 1936—1942; I. S. Walker, 1942; J. C. Johannes, 1942—1945; T. R. Flaiz, 1945—1946; A. E. Coyne, 1946—1947; N. A. Buxton, 1947—1951; R. H. Dunn, 1951—1953; D. W. Smith, 1953—1957; O. B. Hauser, 1957—1965; M. Das, 1965—1967; R. L. Nelson, 1967—1972; W. Borge, 1972—1973; S. Moser, 1973—1974; Mrs. Eric Moser (acting), 1974; Mohan Chandrashekar, 1974—1983; Madhu Samuel, 1984—1985; A. T. Jonahs, 1986—1991; Mathew Philip, 1991—1994; Paul Francis, 1994— .

Suriname

SURINAME. A republic situated on the northeast coast of South America, bounded by Brazil, French Guiana, and Guyana, with an area of 63,037 square miles (163,000 square kilometers). The population (1994) of about 423,000 consists of Creoles, Indians, Javanese, Chinese, Europeans, and American Indians. The main language is Dutch. The religion of the people reflects their origins; there are large groups of Muslims, Hindus, Protestants, and Roman Catholics.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Suriname constitutes the Suriname Mission, within the Caribbean Union Conference, which in turn is part of the Inter-American Division. Statistics (1993) for Suriname: churches, 9; members, 2,397; church or primary schools, 2; ordained ministers, 2; licensed ministers, 3. Suriname Mission headquarters are at Paramaribo.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. Beginnings. There was a company of SDA adherents at Nickerie (Nieuckerie) in northwestern Suriname as early as 1894, according to an account given by W. G. Kneeland, who at that time was working in the Guianas (Review and Herald 71:726, Nov. 20, 1894). The group there was strong enough so that they planned to erect a chapel. However, in 1902 D. C. Babcock, superintendent of the British Guiana Mission, reported that “the work in Dutch Guiana has been almost at a standstill during the past year;” and that there was a great need for a permanent worker to follow up the work of the colporteurs who had gone to Suriname (ibid. 79:15, Apr. 15, 1902).

In 1903 Babcock visited Paramaribo, the capital of the territory, and was invited by several leading citizens to establish SDA work there. He reported that a local layperson volunteered to go with and interpret for him on a visit to the Indians of the interior (ibid. 80:14—16, Mar. 17, 1903).

Thereafter, little was reported of the work in Suriname until 1926, when, according to one recent account, G. N. James, who had come to Suriname in 1903 as a carpenter from British Guiana, where he was a member of the church, and who appeared to be the only survivor of the earlier group of adherents, became a colporteur and lay evangelist. James laid the foundations for the present work, gaining his first converts, J.E.W. Blackman and his wife, and organizing a regular Sabbath school in 1931. A contemporary account, which appeared in the Inter-American Division Messenger (9:7, September 1932), credited the beginning of the work in Paramaribo to two laypersons. One had become an SDA while in the East Indies. Returning to Suriname with several SDA books, including Uriah Smith’s Daniel and the Revelation, he lent this book to his friends and acquaintances with the result that some of them began to observe the seventh-day Sabbath. The other layperson was a native of the area who had been to French Guiana. In the meantime two colporteurs, W. Weithers and Charles Manoram, coming to Paramaribo, found these people and prepared 13 of them for baptism. During a visit to Paramaribo in March 1932, A. A. Carscallen baptized these converts. In 1940 the company there was organized into a church.

Until 1945 the SDA work in Suriname was a part of the British Guiana Mission, but at that time the separate Suriname Mission was organized. In 1953 it was accorded official recognition by the Suriname government as a result of a large evangelistic campaign held in 1948 by C. G. Van Putten.

Since 1956 SDAs have been working among the Amerindians of the interior along the lower part of the Maroni River. In 1957 six radio programs a week were begun on three radio stations. A welfare center was opened in 1958, and in 1959 the first primary school was established.

Suriname Mission

SURINAME MISSION. See Inter-American Division; Suriname.

Sustentation Fund

SUSTENTATION FUND. See Retirement Plans.

Sutherland, Edward Alexander

SUTHERLAND, EDWARD ALEXANDER (1865—1955). Educator, physician, college founder. After graduating from Battle Creek College (1890), he briefly taught there and in 1892 became the first principal and in 1894 president of Walla Walla College. The first year (1892—1893), W. W. Prescott, education secretary for the General Conference, was the nominal president. When Sutherland was appointed president of Battle Creek College in 1897, he led in advocating the moving of the college to Berrien Springs, Michigan (see Andrews University).

In 1904 he went South with P. T. Magan to found Madison College, becoming its first president. While president he took the medical course and graduated from the University of Tennessee in 1914. He returned to Madison College and remained its president until 1946. From 1914 to 1940 he also was medical superintendent of the sanitarium and hospital at Madison. Called by the General Conference in 1946 to establish the SDA Commission on Rural Living, he was its executive secretary until his retirement in 1950.

Sutherland, M. Bessie De Graw

SUTHERLAND, M. BESSIE DE GRAW (1871—1965). Pioneer educator and editor. She was born in Binghamton, New York. From the age of 8 she was reared by the Truesdale family, who were among the first Sabbathkeeping Adventists. In 1892 she attended Battle Creek College and in 1893 went to Walla Walla College, where she taught and assisted with the administrative work for four years. She served in a similar capacity for four years at Battle Creek College and for three years at Emmanuel Missionary College. In 1904 she went to Madison, Tennessee, and was one of the founders of the institution located there.

She served for a time as educational secretary for the Lake Union Conference, and in the early days was the editor of The Advocate, an educational journal, and The Madison Survey. She also assisted S. N. Haskell with his writing.

At the age of 61 she completed requirements for the Ph.D. degree. In 1954 she was married to Dr. E. A. Sutherland.

Sviridov, Pavel A.

SVIRIDOV, PAVEL A. (c. 1886—1933). Evangelist and administrator in the Soviet Union. He was educated for the ministry at Friedensau Missionary Seminary (1907—1908). In 1910 he married Frederika Schulze, a native of Czechoslovakia. He served the church first as a licensed worker, later as a minister and a secretary in the Northern Caucasian Conference, and as a president in several conferences. For a time he was president of the South East Russian Union, in the Federation of Seventh-day Adventists in the U.S.S.R., with headquarters at Rostov-on-Don, the city where he died.

Swaziland

SWAZILAND. An independent country in southern Africa, with an area of 6,705 square miles (17,400 square kilometers), surrounded by the Republic of South Africa, except where it is bounded on the east by Mozambique. Its population (1994) of 936,000 is mainly Swazi. The Swazis are a Bantu people who speak a language akin to Zulu. There are, in addition, several hundred Europeans. The country was under British protection from 1903 and became independent in 1968. It is governed by King Mawati III (1993) and a parliament. Agriculture is the chief occupation, the principal crops being cotton, tobacco, maize, sugar cane, and bananas. The majority of the African population is animist, although 30 religious bodies are represented in Swaziland.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. Swaziland forms the Swaziland Field, which is in the Southern Africa Union, an attached field of the General Conference. Statistics (1993) for Swaziland: churches, 11; members, 1,789; ordained ministers, 4; licensed ministers, 4. Headquarters: Manzini.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. The first attempt to establish SDA work in Swaziland was made in 1920 by J. C. Rogers, a veteran American missionary in Nyasaland (Malawi), who felt that the time had come to preach the soon coming of Christ in Swaziland, also. Traveling on horseback, he visited the Queen Regent, hoping to obtain from her a grant of land on which to establish a mission station. His request was denied on the basis of a law, passed several years previous, that forbade any further alienation of land to foreign missionaries. At his urging, a lay member, Joseph N. Hlubi, a Swazi and a former organizer for the National African Congress in eastern Transvaal and Swaziland, who lived in Ermelo in the Transvaal and had become an SDA in 1918, undertook to establish the work in his native country. He returned to Swaziland in September 1920 and settled at a village called Mahamba, where he and his wife had both attended the same primary school. He began his work by teaching his neighbors. Two years later, at the suggestion of I. B. Burton, a worker in the Zulu Mission Field, his wife began to teach the children of the village in the evenings in their home. At first they had only five pupils, but soon the attendance increased.

However, their evangelistic work met with prejudice. Hlubi was accused of being an agent for Whites, and there was much opposition to his establishing a regular school in the neighborhood. Nevertheless, when he approached the local chief for a reservation of land for a school and assured him that no alienation was intended, and that the school property would remain under the chief's control, the chief, an acquaintance of his family, granted his request. However, funds were not immediately available for a schoolhouse.

Sometime later J. R. Campbell, superintendent of the neighboring Transvaal-Delagoa Mission, who had visited Swaziland, recommended that some money be allocated for a proper building. This was done, and Hlubi, making his own bricks, proceeded to erect the school. Soon after it was opened the school became so overcrowded that Hlubi and his wife requested a third teacher. They learned that the parents of the children appreciated the Bible lessons the children related at home.

The Hlubis named the school Mahamba. It continued to grow, until by 1964 it had become a standard 6-level school with seven teachers and had received government recognition. It is now called Mbukwane.

Through the years Hlubi held Bible studies and conducted evangelistic meetings in surrounding villages. The first convert was a woman whose husband bitterly opposed and persecuted her, but who himself later became an SDA.

The first SDA church was organized on the school site, which continues to be one of the largest SDA centers in Swaziland.

E. G. Dube, a Bible worker, worked tirelessly for the royal family. Her work resulted in an organized church at Lozitha Royal Residence that in 1993 had a membership of 105. Most of these members belong to the royal family, including the queen mother, who is a Seventh-day Adventist.

The school at Mbukwane developed into a high school. Phongolwana school also grew from standard 2 to standard 5. Two additional primary schools have been started at Hlushwana and Vulamelho (Timbutini).

The Makhosini, Nhlangano, and Lozitha companies were organized when J. M. Dube was field president in 1987.

A dental clinic was opened in Mbabne in 1977 by Dr. and Mrs. Young. After they left, Dr. and Mrs. R. Delding served the clinic. Dr. and Mrs. Reinhold not only spent several years serving the clinic but also operated a mobile clinic. The dental clinic was closed when they left in 1991.

In 1984 Dr. Eric Bergman, an ophthalmologist from Loma Linda University, developed the first eye clinic in the country. For five years Dr. and Mrs. Val Franklin worked in the eye clinic. When they left in 1992, a village chapel had been erected as a result of the clinic's evangelistic outreach. In April 1992 Dr. Urban Negre, Jr., a Filipino, was called to continue the work. He pioneered Revelation seminars in Swaziland.

Swaziland Field

SWAZILAND FIELD. See Southern Africa Union Conference; Swaziland.

Swedberg, August

SWEDBERG, AUGUST (1857—1926). Editor, evangelist, and teacher. He was the son of a former Baptist minister in Iowa and became a Seventh-day Adventist in his youth. He attended Battle Creek College in its earlier years. He had such a thirst for knowledge that when it became necessary for him to leave college for a year to teach public school, he kept up with his studies so that when he returned he continued the course with his classmates.

At the invitation of James White, Swedberg joined the staff of the Review and Herald. He later served as editor of Swedish language church and missionary periodicals for more than 30 years, and also edited a health journal and a newspaper for a time. During the same period he translated many denominational books and pamphlets into Swedish and did most of the compiling for a Swedish hymnal. He also taught Swedish at Battle Creek College. For about five years he was engaged in evangelistic and sanitarium work, and then taught Bible at Broadview College for about 10 years. Before his death, from a stroke, he gathered material for a history of the origin and development of the Swedish Seventh-day Adventist work, particularly in North America.

Sweden

SWEDEN. A kingdom occupying the eastern portion of the Scandinavian peninsula, containing 173,620 square miles (450,000 square kilometers), 15 percent of which lies north of the Arctic Circle, and is home to 8.8 million persons (1994). Sweden has enjoyed uninterrupted peace since 1814. The manufacturing industries rank first in importance, followed by farming. Swedish iron mines are among the richest in the world, and her wood products are of great importance. In the fields of social welfare, care of the children and the aged, educational opportunities, medical facilities, and general standard of living, Sweden holds a leading position among the nations.

Christianity was introduced into Sweden in the ninth century, but many years passed before it completely displaced the pagan beliefs and practices of the Vikings, who were worshippers of Thor and Odin. During the third decade of the sixteenth century, Lutheranism became the faith of the royal family and of the majority of the people. In 1593 the Augsburg Confession was adopted, and the Lutheran Church became the state church. Strict laws prohibited the propagation of any religious faith other than that of the state. Sweden remains 89 percent Lutheran to this day. Most Lutherans, however, retain their membership while not being active Christians.

During the decades following World War II, Sweden passed through a radical process of secularization. Polls indicate that only about 10 percent of the population now confesses belief in Christ. The fastest growing religious communities in Sweden are the Roman Catholic Church and the Muslim community—both through immigration. As a modern, secularized society, Sweden is extremely tolerant, and full freedom of religion, of the press, and of speech are guaranteed.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics:

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics: The churches in Sweden are organized into the Swedish Union Conference. The Swedish Union committee and administration also act as local conference committee and administration for the work in Sweden proper. Headquarters are in Stockholm. Statistics (1992) for Sweden: churches, 47; members, 3,260; ordained ministers, 23; licensed ministers, 12; Bible instructors, 5; credentialed missionaries, 21; licensed missionaries, 12.

The Finland Swedish Conference transferred to the Finland Union Conference in 1983, putting the Swedish field where it was in 1920—1929, when it was organized as one unit.

The Swedish Union operates, in proportion to its membership, a rather large institutional work. Out of its total membership of 3,260 members, some 271 are employed by the denomination on a full-time basis.

Institutions

Institutions. Esdakost Food Company; Hultafors Health Centre and Hospital; Nyhyttan Health and Rehabilitation Center; Swedish Junior College and Seminary; Swedish Nutana Food Company.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. Beginnings. SDA publications from America played an important part in the opening of the work in Sweden. In 1873 James Sawyer, a teacher and engineer, visited Battle Creek, Michigan, and urged that an SDA magazine be published for the thousands of Swedish immigrants in the United States. As a result of his suggestion, the Svensk Advent Härold made its appearance in 1874 as a monthly. Swedish SDAs in America sent copies of this paper to relatives in the home country. Letters were received indicating that as a result of reading these papers several had begun to keep the Sabbath, and an appeal was made for workers.

The first personal contacts with Swedish people were made in 1878 in Christiania (Oslo), Norway, by John G. Matteson, who reported that “many of those who are interested here in the town are Swedes.” He heard that in Sweden the interest was greater than in either Denmark or Norway. In the Svensk Advent HŠrold he wrote: “In a number of places in VŠrmland, VŠstmanland, Uppland, GŠstrikland, Medelpad, there are supposed to be groups of Sabbathkeepers, all of whom wish to receive more instruction and help.”

Thus made aware of the possibilities in Sweden, the General Conference voted to direct Matteson to proceed to Sweden. Meanwhile, in Norway two Swedes joined the church who were to play an important part in starting the work in Sweden. One was a cobbler, Jonas Pehrson Rosquist, from Grythyttehed, and the other was a farmer, Olof Johnson, from Amot. Matteson urged them to return to Sweden and preach. Rosquist began work in May 1880 in Grythyttehed (modern Grythyttan, a village about halfway between Oslo and Stockholm), where he found 20 persons already keeping the Sabbath. J. G. Matteson came to instruct this group several months later, and on Aug. 28, 1880, organized the first SDA church in Sweden, with a membership of 45 and with P. Saxin as church elder. (The first SDA church building in Sweden was erected at Grythyttan in 1893.) In February 1882 a second church was organized, in Amot, with nine members, followed by a third the following month in Långbanshyttan (11 members).

On the Mar. 12, 1882, eight delegates from the three churches (with a total membership of 88) met at Grythyttehed to organize the Swedish Conference. S. N. Haskell represented the General Conference. At that time J. G. Matteson was elected president, the headquarters were established at Grythyttehed, and Matteson, O. Johnson, and J. P. Rosquist were given credentials as workers in the conference.

For several years growth was slow in Sweden for various reasons. Times were hard, and it was well-nigh impossible for men to find work in industries and keep the Sabbath. Another reason lay in the fact that many who were baptized soon emigrated to America. Because of the opposition of the powerful state church, early in 1882 Rosquist was forbidden to preach in Grythyttehed. When he continued to do so, he was arrested, tried, and sentenced to pay 50 kronor. Not willing to do this, he was thrown into jail, where for a period of eight days he suffered greatly from intense cold.

In 1884 the magazine Sanningens Häreold, a semimonthly, was begun, printed by the Review and Herald in Battle Creek and the Advent Press in Christiania (Oslo), Norway.

In June 1886, at Moss, Norway, the Scandinavian Sabbath School Society was organized to begin Sabbath schools and home missionary work in every church. At a conference held in Örebro in 1886 the Scandinavian Tract and Missionary Society was organized, and in 1897 the semimonthly Missionären was published as an inspirational and promotional magazine. The first Dorcas Society was organized in Stockholm in 1894, under the name of the Society for Christian Helpwork. In 1897 the second church building in Sweden was built at Ovanmyra, Dalarna.

At a conference held at Grythytted in 1891, it was voted to suggest to the General Conference that work be begun among the Swedish-speaking people in Finland. The following year, having received a grant from the General Conference, Olof Johnson, president of the Swedish Conference, proceeded to Finland, accompanied by two colporteur-Bible instructors, Augusta Larson and Mathilda Lindgren. In 1902 Finland and Iceland were named mission fields of the Swedish Conference, and Nils Anderson went to Iceland as a missionary. The conference was to finance the work in Iceland with the first-day offerings and in Finland with the Sabbath school offerings. The year 1907 witnessed the first missionaries leaving Sweden for a distant land when Julius Persson and N. P. Lindegren sailed for Ethiopia. Many missionaries have since gone from the Swedish Union Conference to serve in various parts of the earth.

Schools. In 1887, a year before returning to America from Northern Europe, J. G. Matteson conducted the first annual "mission school" in Stockholm to train colporteurs, and Bible instructors. It was attended by 30 students for a three-month term. From these training schools many workers went out to sell books and magazines in all parts of Sweden. But a permanent school was needed. In 1894, when the Frydenstrand (Frederikshavn) school was opened in Denmark, there was a Swedish Department, directed by Blecko Jon Karlsson (also a Norwegian Department). In 1895 two church schools were opened in Sweden, one in Ovanmyra, Dalarna, with Johannes Wallenkampf as teacher, and the other in Stockholm, with Frida Danielson in charge. In 1921 another church school was opened in Vaggeryd under the direction of Ingeborg Jakobson. It was later moved to Nyhyttan and then to Stockholm. The school that is now the Swedish Junior College and Seminary (Ekebyholmsskolan) was established in 1898.

Youth Work. The first Young People's Societies were organized in 1909 in Gothenburg and Stockholm. In 1920 C. V. Anderson was chosen as the young people's secretary for the Sweden Conference. The Bible Year and the Morning Watch plans were adopted. In 1923 a youth magazine, Ungdomens Budbarare, came into existence. In 1944 a permanent youth summer camp area was acquired at Västeräng, near Lake Vättern, and in 1970 a modern union recreational center was established at Trostebacken, in Jamtland, in northwestern Sweden.

Later Reorganization. The Swedish Conference remained directly under the General Conference until the reorganization of 1901; then it became a part of the new Scandinavian Union Conference, organized at a workers' meeting held in July of that year at Friedensau Missionary Seminary in Germany. In 1906 the three northern provinces of Sweden, together with three provinces of Norway, were organized as the Northland Mission Field. In 1911 the first church in the northern area was organized at Skellefteå. In 1912 the provinces of Skåne, Småland, Halland, Blekinge, and Öland were formed into the South Swedish Mission, a mission field of the Scandinavian Union Conference, and four years later, in 1916, the work there was organized into a conference. After the regrouping of the work in Europe in 1920, the entire Swedish field became one conference and so continued until 1929. Then Sweden was divided into the South Swedish Conference, consisting of the 10 southern provinces and the islands of Gotland and Öland, with headquarters at Gothenburg; and the North Swedish Conference, consisting of the remainder of the country, with headquarters in Stockholm. In 1931 the Scandinavian Union was divided into the West and the East Nordic unions, the latter consisting of five conferences in Sweden and Finland, with 3,781 members. In 1955 the East Nordic Union was divided into the Finland Union Conference and the Swedish Union Conference. The Swedish Union Conference comprised the two conferences in Sweden, together with the Finland Swedish Conference, which embraced the Swedish-speaking population in Finland. In 1969 the Swedish Union was again reorganized. The two Swedish conferences merged with the union under one administration, while the Finland Swedish Conference retained its status within the union. In 1983 it transferred to the Finland Union.

Swedish Junior College and Seminary

SWEDISH JUNIOR COLLEGE AND SEMINARY (Ekebyholmsskolan). A co-educational boarding school operated on the junior college level by the Swedish Union Conference and supported by a constituency of about 3,300 in 1993. The school is situated near Rimbo, 40 miles (65 kilometers) north of Stockholm. The students, about 70 percent of whom are Adventists and 30 percent Lutherans or other denominations, are mainly Swedes. The buildings include a 300-year-old castle (the original main building), which contains the kitchen and dining room and some living quarters; two dormitories; a gymnasium; and a well-constructed, modern administration building (erected 1950), which contains classrooms, offices, laboratory facilities, the library, and an auditorium-chapel seating 275 people. In 1970 a new classroom building was erected containing special rooms for science and laboratories. In 1987 a new gymnasium was completed.

The school offers a complete course from grade 1 to 9, which is obligatory for all children in Sweden, and thereafter a three-year “gymnasium” course leading to university entrance, for which government recognition rights were granted in 1963. Some practical subjects are taught to young men and women. A seminary year accredited by Swedish school authorities, with credit accepted by Newbold College, is offered to students who have finished their gymnasium.

History

History. Although in 1897 Seventh-day Adventists numbered only 685 in Sweden, it was decided to establish a school. Accordingly, a large farm at Nyhyttan, not far from Grythyttan, was purchased for 22,500 crowns. In 1898 a school opened, with 15 enrolled. The following year a summer school was conducted for approximately 10 students. The school was discontinued in 1905, at which time 35 students were enrolled for a three-year course in the winter session. It was opened again in 1906 and operated as a Scandinavian training center for gospel ministers. In 1908 it was reorganized and called the Swedish Missionary School.

In 1912 a new school building was erected and a special course offered for Finnish-speaking youth, which lasted from 1913 to 1917. Beginning in 1921, a four-year course was offered, which was lengthened to five years in 1929. In an effort to find more commodious quarters, because the enrollment was steadily increasing in 1932, the old historic estate Ekebyholm, near Rimbo, was purchased and used for the school in winter and as a medical institution in the summer. A six-year course was offered, the last two years of which constituted a seminary for missionary workers, many of whom were older students. In January 1950 the three-story administration building was put into use.

Principals: K. Mattsson, 1909—1921; C. O. Carlstjerna, 1921—1929; E. R. Colson, 1929—1932; G. E. Nord, 1932—1935; E. R. Colson, 1935—1936; C. Gidlund, 1936—1951; G. Linde, 1951—1953; A. Blomstedt, 1953—1956; A. Selsö, 1956—1961;

H. Karström, 1961—1968; A. Ljung, 1968—1972; B. Ütterback, 1972—1974; O. C. Bjerkan, 1974—1979; Rune Blomdahl, 1979—1980; Bertil Wiklander, 1980—1989; Gosta Wiklander, 1989—1990; Ulf Gustavsson, 1990— .

Swedish Nutana Food Company

SWEDISH NUTANA FOOD COMPANY (AB Svenska Nutana). A distributing company for import, sales, and distribution of health foods and related products established in 1987 at Rimbo, Sweden. It is a joint stock company whose sole shareholder is the Swedish Union Conference. Office and storage are situated close to the Swedish Junior College and Seminary campus.

General Managers: Ulf Gustavsson, 1989—1990; Ilkaa Kuivisto, 1990—1993; Bertil Utterbäck, 1993— .

Swedish Publishing House

SWEDISH PUBLISHING HOUSE (Skandinaviska Bokförlaget). A publishing firm operated at Stockholm by the Swedish Union Conference. It was founded in 1886 as a Book and Bible House in Stockholm by J. G. Matteson, at a time when Sweden had 250 members and seven colporteurs. In 1882 the first colporteur institute had been held, and in 1884 the first colporteur, K. W. Norlin, made a colporteur journey through the whole of Sweden. At that time papers and books in Swedish were obtained from the Seventh-day Adventist press in Christiania (Oslo), Norway, and from Battle Creek, Michigan. The Swedish house occupied rented quarters in various places until 1923, when it moved into its own building in Stockholm. It remained there until 1970, when it was moved to Gavle.

Books. On Sept. 1, 1887, the first 328-page book, Jesu Profetior (“Prophecies of Jesus”), written by J. G. Matteson, was published. It was sold with Bible Readings for the Home Circle and Ellen White’s Desire of Ages. According to one annual report in the early 1890s, Sweden’s 40 colporteurs had during the year sold 9,798 copies of Bible Readings, 1,238 Desire of Ages, and 763 Jesu Profetior. The largest sales of any of Ellen White’s books were those of Steps to Christ. By 1993, 8—10 new titles were being published every year.

Periodicals. The first Seventh-day Adventist paper in Swedish, the Swedish Advent Herald, was published in Battle Creek in 1874. From 1884 it was published alternately in Battle Creek and Christiania, Norway, under the name Sanningens Härold (“Herald of Truth”). It was followed by Tidens Tecken (“Signs of the Times”), published in Sweden from 1894. In 1897 the Swedish church paper, Missionären (“Missionary”), was founded. In 1887 Bibellexor for Sma Barn (“Bible Lessons for Small Children”) and Missionsoch Sabbatsskolarbetaren (“Mission and Sabbath School Worker”) were published as quarterlies. The Sabbath school lessons were published for the first time in 1919. A health journal, founded in 1883 by J. G. Matteson, became in 1892 a part of Sanningens Härold. In 1927 Sundhetsbladet (Health Journal) was first published. In 1968 it was combined with the Swedish Signs of the Times into a new magazine, Liv i Nutid (Life Today). When Ingathering was introduced in 1920 by S. Rasmussen, 20,000 copies of a paper printed in America were used. In 1993 the Ingathering paper was published in Sweden in an edition of 175,000 copies.

In 1954 the publishing house acquired its own printing plant. The plant was closed in 1981. The plant employed nine and published six periodicals in the Swedish language.

In 1993 the publishing house was reorganized, and became known as the Swedish Union Publishing Service.

Managers: J. R. Lindquist, 1903—1904; Emil Lind, 1904—1917; A. J. Settergren, 1917—1933; E. H. Larsson, 1933—1962; B. Persson, 1962—1974; S. Sjolander, 1974—1978; W. Gustavsson, 1978—1986; P. Boling, 1986— .

Swedish Union Conference

SWEDISH UNION CONFERENCE. See Sweden; Trans-European Division.

Swedish Union Publishing Service

SWEDISH UNION PUBLISHING SERVICE. See Swedish Publishing House.

Swiss Publishing House

SWISS PUBLISHING HOUSE. See Advent Publishers \(Switzerland\).

Swiss Union Conference

SWISS UNION CONFERENCE. See Euro-Africa Division; Liechtenstein; Switzerland.

Switzerland

SWITZERLAND. A federal republic in West Central Europe bordered by France on the west, Germany on the north, Austria and the principality of Liechtenstein on the east, and Italy on the south. It has a territory of 15,941 square miles (41,287 square kilometers) and a population (1994) of 7 million. There are four official languages: German, which is spoken by about 70 percent of the people; French, which is spoken by 20 percent; Italian, which is spoken by 10 percent, and Romansch, used by about 1 percent. Approximately 45 percent of the people are Protestant and 50 percent are Roman Catholic. There is absolute freedom of religion and, although the churches are supported by the state, no one is required to pay taxes appropriated for the support of a church to which that individual does not belong.

The Swiss Confederation was formed late in the thirteenth century in the course of the struggle for independence, which the Swiss finally achieved by the middle of the seventeenth century. The Reformation had its strongholds in Geneva, where Calvin instituted a theocratic government for a time, and in Zurich, which was the headquarters for Zwingli. For 300 years thereafter there was intermittent religious strife between the largely urban and northern Protestant cantons and the largely rural and southern Catholic cantons, a struggle that terminated in the proclamation of complete religious freedom for all in 1848.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. Switzerland and Liechtenstein compose the Swiss Union Conference, which forms a part of the Euro-Africa Division. Statistics (1992) for the Swiss Union Conference: churches, 56; members, 4,176; church schools, 2; ordained ministers, 40; licensed ministers, 7; teachers, 7. Headquarters for the Swiss Union Conference are at Gubelstrasse 23, 8050 Zurich, Switzerland.

Two conferences make up the Swiss Union. Statistics (1992) for the conferences—French Swiss Conference: churches, 25; members, 1,953; church schools, 1; ordained ministers, 18; licensed ministers, 2; teachers, 2. Headquarters: Renens/Lausanne, Switzerland. German Swiss Conference: churches, 31; members, 2,223; church schools, 1; ordained ministers, 17; licensed ministers, 5; teachers, 5. Headquarters: Zurich, Switzerland.

Institutions

Institutions. Advent Publishers; Basel Old People's Home; Établissement Medico-Social Le Flon; Old People's Home (Oertlimatt).

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. Switzerland is the first country outside North America to which the SDAs sent a missionary, J. N. Andrews. He was sent in response to an interest in SDA doctrines already awakened by a Polish ex-Catholic priest,

Michael Belina Czechowski, who had embraced Protestantism during a stay in Switzerland about 1850. Later, in North America, he came in contact with the Seventh-day Adventist Church and joined it in 1857. He longed to proclaim his new faith to the inhabitants of Europe, but he could not persuade the SDAs to send him. In 1864 he went as a missionary of another Adventist denomination. Going first to Italy, he explained the prophecies of Daniel and Revelation wherever he had the opportunity and taught the seventh-day Sabbath also. He won a few converts at Torre Pellice, in the Waldensian country of northern Italy. In September 1865, accompanied by J. D. Geymet, one of his converts, he went to Switzerland, arriving first at Yverdon, and the following day at Grandson, where they remained for a while.

Czechowski immediately began giving lectures in schoolrooms, churches, and other places in the neighboring villages. Before long, he pushed on north to the canton of Neuchâtel and to the Bernese Jura, where, despite much opposition, he did find listeners. He conducted his first baptismal service in Switzerland on Aug. 19, 1866, when two people were baptized by lantern light in Lake Neuchâtel. They were Mrs. Louise Pigueron and J. D. Geymet. Mrs. Pigueron's daughter, Anna De Prato, was a member of the Seventh-day Adventist Church for more than 70 years.

Believing that the printed page could be a valuable asset in his work, Czechowski launched a small paper called L'Évangile éternel et l'accomplissement des prophéties sur la venue du Sauveur ("The Everlasting Gospel and the Fulfillment of the Prophecies Concerning the Coming of the Saviour"). The first number, dated June 1866, was followed by a second on Aug. 15, and after that the paper came out weekly until December 1868, with a short interruption toward the end of 1867. In all, there were more than 100 numbers. He also published a few small tracts in French and German.

In 1867 in Tramelan, Switzerland, he organized what later became known as the oldest Seventh-day Adventist church in Europe, although at the time of its organization its members knew nothing of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination in North America. However, later some of the converts learned of the SDAs through reading a copy of the Review and Herald found in Czechowski's room in Tramelan. Through a letter sent to Uriah Smith, Albert Vuilleumier, the church elder, established contact with the General Conference. Czechowski's work in Switzerland closed in 1868.

These Swiss Sabbathkeepers were invited to send a representative to the General Conference session to be held at Battle Creek in May 1869. Since Albert Vuilleumier was unable to leave home at that time, James (Jacques) Erzberger was sent. This young man, a former student at the Chrischona missionary school near Basel, had first encountered these Sabbathkeepers on a visit to Tramelan. In seeking to verify the beliefs of the group, he himself became convinced that they were true. Arriving in Battle Creek too late for the General Conference session, he remained there from June 1869 to September 1870 and returned as a minister to Switzerland. In 1870 Adémar (Adhémar) Vuilleumier, Albert Vuilleumier's cousin, went to America.

Andrews Sent to Switzerland. At the urgent request of the Swiss converts, the General Conference sent over a missionary, J. N. Andrews, who arrived in Neuchâtel on Oct. 16, 1874, accompanied by Adémar Vuilleumier.

At the first general meeting of Sabbathkeepers after Andrews' arrival in Switzerland, Nov. 1, 1874, at Neuchâtel, there were representatives from the groups at Tramelan, Le Locle, Chaux-de-Fonds, Fleurier, Bienne, and Buckten. At another meeting, held two weeks later at Le Locle, the urgent need for publications was considered. Funds were raised and a committee appointed to foster the publishing project. A more important general meeting was held in Chaux-de-Fonds in January 1875.

In January 1876 D. T. Bourdeau and his family arrived from America to assist Andrews, who had been living in La Coudre, near Neuchâtel. Now the two families moved to Le Locle. From there the two ministers visited the various churches in Switzerland. Bourdeau then held evangelistic meetings in Le Locle, as a result of which the leading teacher of the college there, Louis Aufranc, accepted the SDA faith. Giving up his position and receiving an honorable discharge from the college, he entered SDA work and rendered valuable service as a translator and editor.

In connection with another general meeting, held in Bienne in December 1875, a Tract and Missionary Society was organized, which strongly promoted the circulation of SDA publications.

In April 1876 Andrews moved to Basel (which for a time was the headquarters of the work in Europe) and in July issued the first number of Les Signes des Temps (the French Signs of the Times). It was circulated in French Switzerland, but its primary purpose was to carry the SDA message into France, in which it succeeded.

Although in failing health, Andrews vigorously directed the work until he fell seriously ill and finally died in Basel, Oct. 21, 1883.

Swiss Conference Organized. Andrews was succeeded by B. L. Whitney, who arrived from America on July 26, 1883. At the general meeting held in Bienne, May 24—27, 1884, which was attended by G. I. Butler, then president of the General Conference, the Swiss Conference was organized. Officers elected were: president, B. L. Whitney; secretary, Arthur Borle; treasurer, J. E. Dietschy; executive committee: B. L. Whitney; Albert Vuilleumier, Adémar Vuilleumier. At that time there were five organized churches, but the report of the next year's session mentions 10 churches, with 224 members, indicating encouraging progress.

In 1884 a headquarters building was erected at Basel, which housed the publishing house and printing plant. While visiting Europe, Ellen White lived in this building from 1885 to 1887.

Work in German Switzerland. Although at first the work was carried on only in the French-speaking part of Switzerland, some who heard the SDA message preached carried it to the German-speaking section. For example, in 1879 a young man who had heard lectures in Orbe and accepted the faith returned to the village of Azmoos in the eastern part of the country and won converts, some of whose descendants are still in the church.

A new impetus was given to the work in this section when in January 1886 L. R. Conradi arrived from the United States and, assisted by J. Erzberger, began to work for the German-speaking people. Among the converts was E. E. Frauchiger, a young man who worked first in the publishing house, then as a colporteur, as a successful evangelist, and finally served as an administrator in different parts of Europe. On Aug. 13, 1887, 14 converts were baptized in Zurich and in the afternoon a church of 17 members was organized. Also effective in reaching the German-speaking population was the German paper Herold der Wahrheit ("Herald of Truth"), published since January 1884. This and the German and French editions of the Life of Christ, by Ellen White, were sold by colporteurs.

Because of Sunday laws the publishing house had to close its printing plant in 1895. The building was then used for a sanitarium called "Institut Sanitaire," and a budding food factory. These institutions were transferred in 1905 to Gland, on the shores of Lake Geneva, and are still in operation today. (See Lake Geneva Sanitarium; Phag Food Factory.)

After the closing of the Basel printing plant in 1895, the German language printing for Switzerland was given to the Advent-Verlag in Hamburg, but in 1929 German publication (without printing plant) was resumed in Zurich (see Advent Publishers). French language printing was done by outside printers in Basel until a plant was established at Gland in 1914. There it continued until 1922, when it was transferred to Dammarie-les-Lys, Seine-et-Marne, France (see [Life and Health Publishing House \[France\]](#)).

Because of the problem of Sabbath attendance in the public schools, a boarding school for SDA children was opened in Perles, near Bienne. With parents reluctant to send their children away from home, the school functioned only until 1901.

Reorganization in 1901 and After. A reorganization of the work in all Europe took place in 1901. Because of language differences, Switzerland was divided into two sections: one became the German Swiss Conference, under the newly formed German Union Conference, with J. T. Boettcher as president; the other remained a part of the Central European Conference, and became the French Swiss Conference, with B. G. Wilkinson as president. The Central European Conference became the Latin Union Mission (several years later a union conference). When the European Division was divided in 1928, the union conference territories were readjusted. The two Swiss conferences were reunited, and became the Swiss Union Conference, in the Southern European Division. Headquarters were established in Lausanne, and the first president was P. P. Paulini. The French Swiss Conference included the Italian-speaking areas, and the German Swiss Conference included adjacent Liechtenstein. By Jan. 1, 1929, the Swiss Union Conference had 50 churches, with 2,062 members. The offices of the old European Division, which had moved from Germany to Bern, Switzerland, in the early twenties, became the headquarters of the Southern European Division on Jan. 1, 1929.

Through the years the Swiss Union Conference has contributed heavily to mission funds and has provided many workers for mission fields. A French workers' training school functioned at Gland from 1904 to 1921. It was later transferred to Collonges-sous-Salève, France (see Salève Adventist Institute).

At the urging of A. V. Olson, who arrived in Switzerland in 1920 as president of the Latin Union Conference, church schools began to be established. One was opened in Gland, Switzerland, and others were established through the years. In 1993 there were two church-operated schools in Switzerland. SDA children are, as a rule, granted permission to absent themselves from public schools on Saturdays. Young men in military service are permitted to observe the Sabbath, and generally serve in the medical corps.

Switzerland was one of the earliest European countries to adopt the General Conference policies on MV classes for young people, Pathfinder Club activities, and vacation training camps.

Good results are obtained from the French, German, and Italian Bible correspondence courses, those in French and German being offered in connection with radio programs. All three are now advertised through leaflets distributed by laypeople and colporteurs, and conducted respectively by the French Swiss Conference, the German Swiss Conference, and the minister in charge of the work in the Italian-speaking part of the country.

A J. N. Andrews Symposium was held in Basel on Sept. 3, 1983, in commemoration of the centenary of the death of J. N. Andrews. An official association for health promotion named Schweizer Liga Leben und Gesundheit (LLG) was organized in 1988. Branches of this organization have been established in the conferences and sections in the cantons. In September 1990 a congress of the Swiss Union celebrated “125 years of Advent hope in Switzerland.”

Sydney Adventist College

SYDNEY ADVENTIST COLLEGE. A coeducational day school on the senior high school level, operated by the Greater Sydney Conference. It is situated in Strathfield, a suburb of Sydney, New South Wales, Australia, seven miles (11 kilometers) by rail from the heart of the city. In 1993 it had an enrollment of 460, with a staff of 41 full-time teachers plus a nonteaching staff of five. The pupils are drawn from all the churches in the Greater Sydney Conference.

Seventh-day Adventist secondary education in Australia was at first offered only through its residential colleges. In 1919 a secondary school was established in Sydney on Paterson Street, Concord. When this property was later sold, the school was operated for a time on a site adjoining the North Sydney church. During this period secondary classes were added in primary church schools operating at Wahroonga, Auburn, and Marrickville, but this attempt at secondary education met with only limited success.

The Sydney Adventist High School developed as the first denominational school accepting students solely for postprimary education, which begins in the seventh year. The school opened in 1937 in a private residence purchased in Burwood. High school classes opened in September of that year with an enrollment of 11. Primary grades were added in 1942 but later were dropped because of lack of room. In 1953 the high school was transferred to modern brick school buildings on a 2.5-acre (one-hectare) tract at 159 Albert Road, Strathfield.

Since then extensions include: a staff room, library, science laboratory, and art room, in 1962; an assembly hall, new administration offices, and two new classrooms, in 1967; two new science laboratories and supply rooms, in 1969; and a new library and canteen, in 1971. As enrollments grew during the 1970s, a three-story seven-classroom block, the East Wing, was added. During that period properties adjoining the school were purchased to provide staff accommodations. In 1984 a new assembly hall seating 1,200 people and new technology classrooms, including a fully equipped computer facility, were added. In 1993 the library was expanded into a two-story complex.

The school is registered as a high school with the New South Wales Education Department and state recognition enables bursary (scholarship) holders to attend. Twenty-eight subjects are included in the curriculum, which maintains a balance between manual and academic subjects. Pupils sit for government examinations in the tenth and twelfth years of schooling and qualify to proceed to university or other tertiary institutions.

Principals: V. Pascoe, 1937—1939; G. Currow, 1940—1941; A. Hefren, 1942; E. G. McDowell, 1943—1946; A. Hefren, 1947—1949; R. H. Parr, 1950—1953; O. Ferris, 1954; L. H. Turner, 1955—1959; A. Hefren, 1960—1962; W. R. Veitch, 1963—1974; W. G. Litster, 1975—1977; A. C. Reye, 1978—1980; R. A. Ecclestone, 1981—1985; D. J. Faull, 1986— .

Sydney Adventist Hospital

SYDNEY ADVENTIST HOSPITAL. A 329-bed institution accepting medical, surgical, and obstetrical cases, owned and operated by the South Pacific Division and situated at Wahroonga, a suburb 12 miles (20 kilometers) northwest of Sydney, New South Wales, Australia. The institution stands at an elevation of 700 feet (215 meters) in a bushland setting and is housed principally in a 10-story brick building. A three-year course is offered by a school of nursing, accredited since 1927 by the state. In 1993 the staff numbered 1,400 full-time and part-time employees, approximately 70 percent Seventh-day Adventists, and 450 visiting medical practitioners. Annual inpatient admissions numbered more than 22,000.

Forerunners. Among the earliest efforts to establish medical missionary work in the Australasian territory was the work of Dr. M. G. Kellogg, who sailed on the second cruise of the mission vessel Pitcairn from San Francisco for the South Sea Islands early in 1893. According to the Union Conference Record (4:108, Aug. 1, 1901) the first health work in Australia proper was begun in Sydney in 1894 by Australian-born A. W. Semmens and his wife, who while engaged in giving Bible studies devoted much time to the care of the sick (Gleaner 1:16, August 1896). In 1896 Semmens, who had received training at the Battle Creek Sanitarium, opened a hydropathic establishment in a seven-room cottage rented for seven shillings sixpence a week in Ashfield, a suburb of Sydney.

To advertise the venture, Semmens and his wife visited from door-to-door. The work began with one patient; equipment consisted of a gas burner and a bucket. But within six months the work had grown to such an extent that it was necessary to transfer to a 16-room house, Meaford, in Gower Street, Summer Hill. During the next few years two additional houses were leased on Gower Street-Lindo, a two-story building, in 1897, and Moyne Hall, three stories, in 1899. In 1897 Mr. and Mrs. Semmens were transferred to Adelaide to open up the medical work in that city. Dr. E. R. Caro, who had arrived from America in 1897, became the medical director of the Summer Hill Health Home, which he renamed "The Sydney Medical and Surgical Sanitarium." Mrs. E. M. Shannan replaced Mrs. Semmens as matron, and G. W. Morse succeeded A. W. Semmens as business manager.

A three-year nursing course was set up in 1898, and during the first year there were 15 nurses in training at the sanitarium and 32 students taking first-year nursing at Avondale College.

During the fourth session of the Australasian Union Conference at Avondale, in a meeting of the Australasian Medical Missionary and Benevolent Association, held on July 21, 1899, it was voted that a medical and surgical sanitarium be erected in the vicinity of Sydney. While the resolution was being discussed, Ellen White addressed the meeting on the need for such an institution, where it should be located, and how funds should be raised. Mrs. White said in part, "The Sanitarium in Summer Hill, as it is now, does not properly represent the grand and ennobling work we have to do for the Master." E. W. Farnsworth stood up forthwith and proposed that funds be called for, then and there. Within a half hour £900 had been pledged.

Before further plans could be executed, a crisis arose at Summer Hill. The lease on Meaford, the building housing the treatment rooms, was about to expire in 1901. The health retreat at Avondale, built in 1899 for the benefit of the sick in the district and as a haven for returning missionaries, was made available for patients and staff. They were transferred there under the superintendency of Dr. D. H. Kress, he and Dr. Laretta Kress having arrived from America toward the end of 1900. The work was carried on in this temporary location for a little over a year, until the Sydney Sanitarium and Hospital should be sufficiently ready for occupancy in 1902.

After the committee meeting in July 1899, no time was lost in looking for a suitable site. The present hospital site of 80 acres (32 hectares) was located in August 1899 by J. J. Wessels from South Africa and F. L. Sharpe. However, the commencement of building was delayed until 1901 for lack of funds. In that year J. A. Burden, who had had 10 years' experience at St. Helena Sanitarium, arrived to take over the duties of business manager. Dr. M. G. Kellogg, who had drawn up the plans, was the building superintendent.

The sanitarium was opened on Jan. 1, 1903, with a bed capacity of 70. Dr. D. H. Kress was medical director. The first paying patient was Lewis Butler, whose stay in the sanitarium was instrumental in his becoming a Seventh-day Adventist. His six children all became workers in the cause. In 1920 a new wing was added, making a registered bed capacity of 104. In 1933 a further wing was added to care for medical patients and to house the updated treatment rooms. In 1927 the Sydney Sanitarium was registered as a training school for general nurses.

Prominent in the early days of the institution were Drs. T. A. Sherwin and M. M. Freeman and Mrs. E. M. Shannan, matron. Dr. C. W. Harrison, who arrived with his family from Loma Linda, California, in 1926, was medical superintendent for 31 years.

In 1968 Dr. H. E. Clifford was called from South Africa to become medical director. He guided the sanitarium through a major construction program. The original building was replaced by a 10-level structure, completed in 1973. The enlarged institution was renamed Sydney Adventist Hospital. Continued development of the institution and its facilities enabled it to become, in 1978, the first private hospital in New South Wales to be accredited by the Australian Council on Healthcare Standards.

In the 1990s the opening of several large extensions continued to expand the hospital's facilities and services. See Australia.

Responsibility for undergraduate nursing education has been assumed by Avondale College, but students continue to obtain the bulk of their clinical experience at SAH. Many young people have gone from the institution to serve in mission and church work. Outreach endeavors include the Christian Centre for Bioethics, a cancer support service, an active chaplaincy program, and the provision of a variety of health education and assessment programs for the community. In addition, volunteer surgical teams have brought assistance to heart disease patients in China, Fiji, Nepal, Papua New Guinea, Tonga, and Vanuatu, while also assisting with the education of local medical and nursing personnel.

Medical Directors: D. H. Kress, December 1902—March 1907; Franklin Richards, 1907—1912; T. A. Sherwin, 1912—1926; C. W. Harrison, 1926—1957; A. K. Tulloch, 1957—1968; H. E. Clifford, 1968—1990. Chief Executive Officer: W. H. Stokes, 1990— .

Symbol

SYMBOL. An object, action, word, or figure of speech used to mean something quite beyond its manifest content. It is essential that the symbolic quality be intended by the person who introduces the symbol. The unique characteristic of a symbol lies in the fact that it connotes rather than simply denotes; it suggests but does not specify. Symbols often involve subtle associations of ideas that defy logical analysis, and that may even appear to be contradictory. For example, the cross, a symbol of shame, suffering, and death, is also a symbol of triumph and life (Phil. 2:8, 9). Usually, however, there is a germane relationship between the symbol and its object.

The symbols of the sanctuary service set forth in Exodus and Leviticus are interpreted Christologically in the Epistle to the Hebrews. From the Christian point of view, the death of the Lamb was symbolic of Christ's death (Heb. 9:14), and the ministry of the priest was symbolic of Christ's ministry at the throne of God (Heb. 6:19, 20; 9:24).

Symbols are of particular importance in prophetic literature. In it are found both symbolic actions (1 Kings 11:30—32; Jer. 13:1—11; 27:1—11; Eze. 4:1—8; 12:3—11; etc.) and symbolic figures (Jer. 1:11—15; Eze. 37:1—14; Amos 8:1, 2; etc.). Sometimes the symbols are of a bizarre nature. In Daniel's first vision the various parts of the image seen by King Nebuchadnezzar represent a succession of world empires, while "a stone . . . cut out from a mountain by no human hand" represents the kingdom of God (Dan. 2:31—45, RSV). Similarly, in Dan. 7 and 8 a series of animals, some of them composite or fantastic beasts, again symbolize the sequence of world empires. In the Revelation, symbolism is even more elaborate. Here symbolic numbers also are prominent, there being a sequence of sevens representing completeness, or perfection, and a series of twelves, especially in connection with the New Jerusalem, representing much the same idea (Rev. 4:4; 7:4—8; 21). The number of the beast (666) is also a symbolic number (Rev. 13:18).

The symbolic interpretation of historical events differs from other Bible symbolism in that the symbolic import is not inherent in the events themselves, but originates, ex post eventum, in the intent of the inspired interpreter (Hosea 11:1, cf. Matt. 2:15; Jer. 31:15, cf. Matt. 2:18; Gen. 12:3, cf. Gal. 3:16; 4:22—31; etc.).

Ritual acts instituted and ordained by God are symbolic; for example, baptism and the Lord's Supper. Participation in these acts is attended by divine blessing, for by virtue of their symbolic nature these acts speak to man at a level deeper than mere words.

Figures of speech constitute still another class of symbols found in Scripture. These are frequently drawn from the contemporary literature of the ancient world. For example, in Heb. 6:19 an anchor is used as a symbol of hope.

Bible symbols were doubtless current in the environment of the writer, in the art or literature of the time, and recognized as having symbolic value.

Clues to the meaning of symbols are often to be found in their own immediate context (Dan. 2; 7; 8; etc.). When this is not the case, utmost care must be used in dealing with them. No symbol should be interpreted in such a way as to conflict with its own context.

See Bible, Interpretation of; Daniel, Interpretation of; Mark of the Beast; Number of the Beast; Revelation, Interpretation of; Sanctuary.

Sype, Minnie

SYPE, MINNIE (1869—1956). Pioneer, evangelist, pastor, administrator, missionary. She was born near Thayer, Iowa. At the age of 20 she married Loren Sype, a Seventh-day Adventist. She sold literature to neighbors and taught Sunday school in Wyoming, where she was an elementary school teacher. After her conversion to the Seventh-day Adventist faith, she often preached while her husband served as a singing evangelist. In one series 42 souls were won to Christ. The Oklahoma Conference granted her a ministerial license, but the family returned to Iowa in 1906. Minnie continued to hold efforts, and always checked the spiritual condition of the local church before beginning meetings. In 1916 she was elected Home Missionary secretary of the Iowa Conference. During her years of service, she worked in Iowa, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and Florida, besides serving as a missionary to the Bahamas. She also was employed for a time as circulation manager for Southern Publishing Association.

Syria

SYRIA. A republic in the Middle East situated on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean Sea and bounded on the north by Turkey, on the east and southeast by Iraq, on the south by Jordan, and on the west by Israel, Lebanon, and the sea. It has an area of 72,234 square miles (187,086 square kilometers) and a population (1994) of 14.9 million. Arabs constitute the predominant group and Arabic is the prevailing language. Most of the people are Muslims, but there are also significant groups of Greek Orthodox, Syrian, Armenian, and Roman Catholic Christians. Damascus, the capital, is considered to be the oldest continuously inhabited city in the world.

Old Testament Syria (Aram) extended north of Palestine and eastward into the region of the great bend of the Upper Euphrates, probably as far as the Habur River. Its territory included Haran, the home of Abraham's kin. The most important of the Aramaean city states, Damascus, was often at war with Israel. The Aramaic language spread over the Assyrian Empire and became an international language, used from Babylon to Egypt. Adopted in place of Hebrew by the Jews after the Exile, it was the spoken language of Jesus.

After Alexander's conquests, Syria came under the Greco-Oriental kingdom of the Seleucids, and was eventually its center. In NT times Syria was a Roman province, which included Palestine much of the time. Late Syrian paganism blended Babylonian idolatry and Greek philosophical ideas into a universal sun worship that absorbed many of the older deities and spread westward; it was finally made the official imperial cult at Rome in A.D. 274 (see SB, Nos. 161, 1344, 1565). Early Syrian Christianity played an important role in the formation of the Eastern churches. Muslim Syria was an early cultural center of Islam.

In later centuries the country was impoverished by various wars and invasions. World War I freed it from Turkish rule and left it under a French mandate. World War II made it an independent republic. In 1958 it was united with Egypt in the United Arab Republic, but withdrew in 1961.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. Four persons are reported to have become Seventh-day Adventists in Aleppo in 1893, during a visit there by Z. G. Baharian, the pioneer Seventh-day Adventist worker in Turkey. The next year H. P. Holser, from the Central European Conference, visited the group, but no regular work was established within the present boundaries of Syria until decades later.

Although the Syrian Mission was listed in the 1930 Yearbook, for example, as territory "entered in 1899," the early work was concentrated in Lebanon and Palestine, which were then included under the name of Syria. The Syrian Mission was part of the territory assigned to missionaries from Europe—under the European Division (1913—1928), then the Central European Division.

During World War I and shortly thereafter, SDA Armenian refugees from Turkey settled in Damascus and Aleppo. Stanley Bull preached in Aleppo in 1927, and Shukri Nowfel, Ibrahim Khalil, and W. H. Lesovsky preached in Damascus between 1926 and 1939.

A few years later, when American SDAs requested that someone visit their relatives in Tartous, Hamad Ubeid and Shukri Nowfel went there, and as a result of their work, in 1936, the first convert, Hanni Srou, was baptized. Within 10 years a church was organized at Tartous. A second church was organized after Towfic Issa, from Mazraat el-Effendi, visited the Srou family and carried the SDA beliefs back to his home. From there, SDA teachings spread to nearby Bezaq, where a third church group was formed and a chapel was built in 1950.

It was reported in 1944 that two colporteurs had worked in Damascus. After that, whenever permits were obtainable, student colporteurs circulated SDA publications, especially the health books, in the large cities of Syria. A kindergarten was operated in Damascus between 1930 and 1938, and a church school was opened at Bezaq in 1949. Efforts to establish a clinic in 1954 were frustrated. Limited AY activities have been promoted at times.

From time to time false accusations led to the repression of the Seventh-day Adventist Church by the government. For example, the chapel in Bezaq was locked by governmental decree. SDA periodicals, correspondence lessons, and Sabbath school supplies were interdicted; free assembly was often denied, and the workers imprisoned. However, lay missionary work prospered and the membership continued to increase. The restrictions have been gradually relaxed. In 1963 official Christmas greetings were extended to the church by government representatives and negotiations were initiated to secure religious freedom for the church.

Administration of the work in Syria was transferred from Beirut, Lebanon, to Damascus in 1959, when the Syria Section was organized, with Towfic Issa as its first president, followed in 1962 by Maurice Katrib.

In 1964 plans were laid to build a church and administrative center in Damascus, and this center was completed in 1966. In 1968 Gabriel Katrib became the president of the Syria Section.

During the reorganization of the Middle East Division in 1970, Syria became part of the East Mediterranean Field.

Organized work in Syria came to a halt in mid-1970 when the ministers and several laity were imprisoned and the Damascus Center was closed. It has remained closed, as the church has been officially banned because of false accusations. In 1993 Syria was administratively part of the East Mediterranean Field, with headquarters in Lebanon.

Systematic Benevolence

SYSTEMATIC BENEVOLENCE. The practice of making regular contributions to the church in accordance with a predetermined plan. In its general meaning it represents the principle of denominational financing followed from the 1850s to the present. As a specific term it applied specifically to the method of financing denominational evangelistic work until the late 1870s, when the present system of tithes and offerings was recommended and generally adopted.

Financing the Early Work. The early preachers of Seventh-day Adventist doctrines were largely self-supporting. They conducted their work on faith without any financial backing except that of their own resources or occasional gifts of well-wishers and fellow believers. Joseph Bates had used up his own savings in his work of spreading the knowledge of the Millerite doctrines. James White worked on the railroad hauling stone, in the hayfields, and elsewhere to earn money to support his family and to travel in behalf of the message.

The gifts to the work were irregular and were proportionate to the generosity rather than the income of the donor. Some who could afford to give much gave only a little, while some who had little sacrificed their all for the cause. Matilda Erickson Andross has recorded, among several other incidents, that one widow sold her cottage so that the Adventist message could be preached to others (Story of the Advent Message, p. 209). A number of adherents sold their farms in order to give money for the cause.

As the work entered new areas, especially after 1854, when tents were first used for evangelistic meetings and attracted large audiences, more and more ministers were called for, and a regular means of support for the full-time workers became necessary. Moreover, after a spurt of liberal giving about the time the work of the ministry was first definitely recognized and credentials were issued to ministers in the field, contributions noticeably decreased in 1856—1857. In 1856 such influential ministers as J. N. Loughborough and J. N. Andrews were engaged in carpentry and other kinds of secular employment to earn a living.

Systematic Benevolence Principle Introduced. The lack of means for evangelism led to the formation in April of 1858 of a Bible class conducted by J. N. Andrews in Battle Creek to study the biblical principles of support of the ministry. The group came to the conclusion that regular and proportional giving was the ordained method of the Bible. They recommended a plan of ‘Systematic Benevolence’ on the tithing principle.”

The plan received enthusiastic support, and in January 1859 it was adopted by the Battle Creek church: “The Battle Creek Church assembled Jan. 16th, in the evening, to consider the subject of a System of Benevolence which would induce all to do something to sustain the cause of the present truth, and thereby fully sustain the cause, and at the same time relieve some who have given beyond their real ability” (Review and Herald 13:84, Feb. 3, 1859).

At the same meeting the church voted to issue to the other churches an address inviting their participation in the plan. It recommended specific amounts to be pledged each week, according to the ability of the donor, by each member from 18 to 60 years of age, from 5 to 20 cents for men and from 2 to 10 cents for women; and for those who owned property, from 1 to 5 cents for every $100 of its value.

This plan was modified somewhat at the General Conference session in June of that year, which suggested different amounts for donations, between 2 and 25 cents for men and between 1 and 10 cents for women, besides the contribution in proportion to property.

A tenth was not mentioned in the 1859 plan as the suggested rate of contribution, but that came by the end of 1860. However, at that time it applied only to income from property. In the fifth issue of the Good Samaritan, a short-lived paper promoting "Systematic Benevolence, our duty to the poor, &c.," the suggestion was made: "We propose that the friends give a tithe, or tenth of their income, estimating their income at ten percent on what they possess" (quoted in an inquiry in Review and Herald 17:164, Apr. 9, 1861; 10 percent was apparently the going rate for interest on savings). This was further explained by James White thus: "We meant just what the churches are adopting in Michigan; viz., They regard the use of their property worth the same as money at ten percent. This ten percent they regard as the increase of their property. A tithe of this would be one percent, and would be nearly two cents per week on each one hundred dollars, which our brethren, for convenience sake, are unanimous in putting down" (ibid.).

In addition, White suggested that those who owned no property give "personal donations." It is not clear whether this also was mentioned in the Good Samaritan. White reported that the church at Monterey, Michigan, at a conference held Dec. 28 and 29, 1860, "came up to the figures in the illustration in Good Samaritan, No 5" (ibid. 17:72, Jan. 15, 1861). On Jan. 17, 1861, this plan was proposed to the Battle Creek church, and White hoped that "all will probably cheerfully come up to the figures" suggested at this meeting (ibid. 17:80, Jan. 22, 1861).

The plan of Systematic Benevolence was endorsed by Ellen White, who about that time repeatedly urged the members to a greater sacrifice and liberality toward the cause. She wrote in 1857: "The least that has been required of Christians in past days, is to possess a spirit of liberality, and to consecrate to the Lord a portion of all their increase. Every true Christian has considered this a privilege. . . . But Christians who are living in the last days, and who are waiting for their Lord, are required to do even more than this. God requires them to sacrifice" (1T 170).

She wrote more in 1859: "I was pointed back to the days of the apostles, and saw that God laid the plan by the descent of His Holy Spirit, and that by the gift of prophecy He counseled His people in regard to a system of benevolence. All were to share in this work of imparting of their carnal things to those who ministered unto them in spiritual things" (1T 190).

Early in 1863 one tenth as the minimum contribution was suggested through the pages of the Review and Herald. The writer, presumably James White, said: "The children of Israel were required to give a tithe, or tenth, of all their increase . . . [here are given OT references]. And it cannot be supposed that the Lord requires less of His people when time is emphatically short, and a great work is to be accomplished in the use of their means in giving the last merciful message to the world" (Review and Herald 21:45, Jan. 6, 1863).

Through the 1860s and early 1870s, the notion of one tenth of income from every source as the base of systematic giving appeared more and more frequently. Already in 1875 this principle was becoming apparent to the membership, as is seen from the following letter that appeared in the Review and Herald: “Will you please tell me what S.B. [Systematic Benevolence] really is? For instance, if I earn $1.00 a day, 10 cts. of that belongs to God. Does that 10 cts. belong to the S.B.? or can I give 5 cts. to S.B. and the rest to the cause as I may see fit?” (47:21, Jan. 20, 1876).

The explanation given by Uriah Smith did not yet affirm the one tenth of all income as the proper tithe. He rather held to the older method of systematic giving. But only a few weeks later, in February 1876, D. M. Canright wrote with certainty of the S.B. plan that “God requires that a tithe, or one-tenth, of all the income of His people shall be given to support His servants in their labors,” and that “one-tenth is the Lord’s” (ibid. 47:50, Feb. 17, 1876, and 47:65, Mar. 2, 1876). Only the indigent and those without income were free to abstain or to contribute an amount of their choice.

At the first special session of the General Conference, held in March 1876, the view that one tenth of all income was to be devoted to the work of the gospel prevailed and the following resolutions were adopted unanimously: “Resolved, That we believe it to be the duty of all our brethren and sisters, whether connected with churches or living alone, under ordinary circumstances, to devote one-tenth of all their income from whatever source, to the cause of God. And further,

“Resolved, That we call the attention of all our ministers to their duty in this important matter to set it plainly and faithfully before all their brethren and urge them to come up to the requirements of the Lord in this thing” (ibid. 47:108, Apr. 6, 1876).

The regular session of the General Conference of that year affirmed the principle of one tenth of the income (ibid. 48:106, Oct. 5, 1876). However, it was not widely adopted immediately.

Two years later, at the General Conference session of October 1878, it was recommended that the system of pledging a fixed amount weekly be replaced by a pledge of one tenth of all income, and that each conference and institution pay a tenth of its income to the General Conference (ibid. 52:188, Dec. 12, 1878). A committee was appointed to prepare a new pamphlet on “the Scriptural plan of Systematic Benevolence,” and this was announced as ready the same month, under the title Systematic Benevolence, 72 pages. It was based largely, with additions, on an article in the Review and Herald (48:169—171, Nov. 30, 1876), which was a revision of Canright’s earlier article of Feb. 17 and Mar. 2, 1876.

In December 1878 the General Conference Committee recommended that beginning with the first week in 1879, members throughout the world sign the following pledge: “We, the undersigned, believing that the Holy Scriptures require each person to give for the support of the ministry one-tenth of all that the Lord shall give him or her, do hereby solemnly pledge ourselves in the sight of God, and in the presence of each other, to faithfully set apart each week one-tenth of all that the Lord shall give us, this tenth to be paid into the systematic benevolence treasury at least once a quarter” (ibid. 52:188, Dec. 12, 1878).

In the special General Conference session in the spring of 1879, it was noted that many deferred taking out their tithe until the end of the quarter and then had difficulty in paying it. Therefore the following resolution was passed: “Resolved, That all our brethren and sisters should regard it their duty to tithe all their income at the time they receive it” (ibid. 53:133, Apr. 24, 1879).

This tenth was considered a rendering to the Lord of His own, for “the tithe is the Lord’s” (Lev. 27:30), and the phrase “tithe and offerings” as including freewill offerings over and above the tithe. To provide for local church expenses and for special projects—such additional offerings as the “one-third” (that is, of the S.B.) were suggested in 1876 for the tract and missionary society. Later came the Sabbath school offering for missions, and other offerings (see Church Calendar; Sabbath School Offerings).

Administration and Disbursement of S.B. A thorough administration of the S.B. plan was established from the very beginning. The churches elected treasurers whose duty it was to record all pledges in “S.B. books” and to collect them weekly or quarterly. Before conferences were organized, scattered individuals were encouraged to send their pledges to the General Conference to be applied to the general expenses of the work.

At first the churches had complete control over the disposition of their S.B. funds. However, in 1861 it was clearly stated in the Review and Herald (18:32, June 18, 1861) that the funds were intended for the support of the ministry.

When the newly organized General Conference prepared a model constitution for the state conferences in 1863, it appears that it was taken for granted that the proceeds of systematic benevolence would constitute the basis for conference finances, and it was so stated in Article III.

In 1864 the churches in Wisconsin and Illinois voted to send all of their S.B. funds to the conference treasury, if at all possible. In 1876 Canright wrote: “Legitimately every cent of the S.B. should be used for the support of the ministry; but all our churches have fallen into the habit of reserving a small share of their S.B. to pay their sexton, buy oil, etc.” (ibid. 47:67, Mar. 2, 1876).

For other articles dealing with church finance, see Budget; Church Calendar; Financial Policies; Sabbath School Offerings; Tithe.

Szeretet-Otthon

SZERETET-OTTHON. See Tass Old People's Home.

T

T. And M. Society

T. AND M. SOCIETY. See Tract and Missionary Society.

Tabasco Conference

TABASCO CONFERENCE. See Inter-American Division; Mexico.

Taejeon Middle School

TAEJEON MIDDLE SCHOOL (Taejeon Joong Hakkyo). A coeducational boarding institution and day school on the high school level, located at 163-11 Doma-dong, Seo-gu, Taejeon, Korea, and operated by the Middlewest Korean Conference. The school opened with 10 students under Pastor Tong Shim Chung as principal on Apr. 1, 1952. The first location was a church in Hyo-dong, Taejeon. In 1963 the school moved to a new building with three classrooms and an office, which was built on its present site.

On Feb. 24, 1965, the Government Educational Department granted the Taejeon Middle School a license to operate as a school. In 1973 the school building was enlarged by a two-story building of 6,450 square feet (600 square meters). To house the increasing number of local students, two prefabricated buildings were constructed. The smaller one, built in 1987, is a girls' dormitory and the larger, built in 1992, is a boys' dormitory and cafeteria. The enrollment in 1993 was 155, and there had been 1,355 graduates. There were 10 teachers.

Principals: Chung Tong Shim, 1952—1953; Kim Ki Bang, 1953; Kim Jung, 1953—1955; Choi Myung Hwan, 1955—1956; Kim Jung, 1956—1959; Kim Hyung Rak, 1959—1962; Lee Sang Rok, 1962—1965; Ho Su Sung, 1965—1966; Lim Choon Taik, 1966—1969; Kim Suk Kwon, 1969—1973; Min Byung Ho, 1973—1976; Kim Jae Shin, 1976—1978; Kwon Yung Sik, 1978—1987; Shin Sung Sik, 1987— .

Taffari Makonnen Hospital

TAFFARI MAKONNEN HOSPITAL. A 50-bed hospital situated in Dessye, Ethiopia, formerly operated by the Ethiopian Union Mission.

Seventh-day Adventist medical work in Ethiopia was begun by Dr. George Bergman, who arrived with his wife, Gertrude, and baby son in September 1926. After considering the offers of various chiefs he decided to accept that of the ruler of Wallo (Wollo) province, Ras (Prince) Taffari Makonnen (who later became Emperor Haile Selassie I), and to locate a hospital in Dessye (Dessie), the capital of Wallo province. Arriving in Dessye in December 1927, Dr. Bergman built the hospital (opened in 1929) and dwellings under difficult circumstances. He baked his own bricks and cut his lumber from a forest two days away by mule.

In January 1929 Marie Haseneder, the first SDA nurse to work in Ethiopia, arrived from Addis Ababa. At the close of 1930 the Bergmans were replaced by Dr. W. Purmal, from Latvia. When the Italians invaded Ethiopia in 1936, the hospital was bombed many times, necessitating the evacuation of the patients. The bravery of the missionaries, and particularly that of Dr. Ragnar Stadin, whose wife was killed by a stray bullet at Addis Ababa, was recorded by journalists from many countries.

The original hospital property was not made available to the mission after the war, but Dr. Lynn Artress succeeded in obtaining another piece of property in Dessye, which was donated to the mission by Crown Prince Asfa Wassan. Dr. Bernarr Johnson and his family and a Danish nurse, Ruth Broberg, with the help of Erik Palm and his wife, worked together to open the new hospital in 1953. The existing buildings were remodeled and two large buildings were added to the compound to provide a complete 50-bed hospital unit with an adequate power supply, water supplied from a deep well, complete X-ray and surgical facilities, and a clinic.

In 1957 a clinic was begun in Asaita, a town in a desert area where thousands of the nomadic Muslim Danakil tribe could be reached. This was the first time SDA mission work had been conducted for this tribe. In 1959 permanent buildings were purchased in this area. In 1973 Bishara Aziz, his wife, Fawzia, and two assistants treated 1,716 outpatients and 27 inpatients per month. A new house was erected, with air conditioning, leaving the old house to be used as a hospital. Two electric pumps, a well, a 20-kilowatt electric generator, and a 2,800-cubic-foot (80-cubic-meter) water reservoir were added to improve conditions in this desert mission clinic.

In 1974 the hospital was leased for one year to the Swedish Red Cross for use as an orphanage for the many children left homeless by the devastating famine that struck Wallo province in 1973. In 1975 the hospital was nationalized.

Medical Directors: G. C. Bergman, 1928—1932; W. Purmal, 1932—1933; C. E. Kahlstrom, 1933—1934; A. R. Stadin, 1935—1936; B. B. Johnson, 1952—1955; A. P. Bokovoy, 1956—1961; J. C. Johannes (acting director), 1961—1962; H. Unsell, 1963—1965; G. Johnson, 1965—1967; H. Heidinger, 1967—1970; L. Rolita, 1970—1975.

Tahiti

TAHITI. See French Polynesia; South Pacific Division.

Tai An Yi Yuen

TAI AN YI YUEN. See Taiwan Adventist Hospital.

Tai Po Sam Yuk Secondary School

TAI PO SAM YUK SECONDARY SCHOOL. A coeducational school operated in Tai Po, New Territories, Hong Kong, by the Hong Kong-Macao Conference. It is a mission school because almost all of its students come from non-Seventh-day Adventist homes, and a great number of them from Buddhist backgrounds. In 1993 the enrollment of the school was 1,100, with a faculty of 47. Less than 4 percent of the students are Seventh-day Adventist Church members. Thus evangelism is the main emphasis in the school program and to win students to Christ is the main goal of the school. Through the years many of its students were baptized and became loyal supporters of the church. Some of those who were brought into the church are now engaged in denominational work.

SDA educational work in Tai Po began as an outreach program of the local church there. When Pastor K. S. Yeung began his ministry in Tai Po in 1953, he observed that the community needed educational opportunities and started three evening tutorial classes in order to reach the people with the truth. More than a hundred young people sought admission, but only about 90 were admitted because of limited space. Because these tutorial classes were for those financially unable to attend school, they were offered free of charge.

As a result of the free school, an active Missionary Volunteer Society was formed and the church grew. In 1955, when the rented chapel became too small for the Tai Po church, a three-story building facing Tolo Bay was purchased, and the big hall in the building was used as the church. With the availability of room and space, a formal SDA elementary school was started and registered in the Education Department of Hong Kong in 1956, offering kindergarten through grade 2.

D. Curry was appointed the principal, but the actual administrative duties were performed by K. S. Yeung, the church pastor. With a grade added per year, by 1959 the school was offering a complete elementary educational program.

Need for a secondary school was felt, and the community urged that the school offer secondary education also. With funds raised from Ingathering, subsidies from the Far Eastern Division and the South China Island Union Mission, and donations from church members and people in the community, a new three-story building, providing 12 additional classrooms, was constructed by the side of the old building in 1962, and the school was upgraded to secondary level. Enrollment increased to 440. The school name was changed to Sam Yuk Middle School, Tai Po Branch. From 1963 to 1970 a part of the building was used for dormitories and some of the students were admitted as boarding students. In 1970 the school became strictly a day school. The dormitories were remodeled into classrooms, and the school name was changed to Tai Po Sam Yuk Secondary School. An English section was added, allowing the school to offer two secondary programs, one using Chinese, and the other English. This lasted until the fall of 1989, when the Chinese section was phased out. From then on, the school has functioned as an English secondary school.

Enrollment in the elementary classes dwindled. In 1987 operation of the elementary section was suspended and full concentration was given to the secondary program. Growth and expansion necessitated a relocation of the school as the enrollment outgrew the school facilities. A piece of land was leased from the Education Department of Hong Kong, and a new school building was erected, providing 26 classrooms and a multipurpose gymnasium/assembly hall with a seating capacity of 1,200. Space was made available for a typing room, a computer room, a language laboratory, a music room, a library, four science laboratories, a geography room, a home economics room, and an art/design room. The new building was officially opened and the school relocated in the fall of 1989. Since then the enrollment has been steady at about 1,000. In 1992 the advanced level secondary education program was added, and the school operates to the secondary 6 (grade 12) level. The secondary 7 (grade 13) level was scheduled to be added in 1993 to complete the entire secondary program. Since 1973 the school has received subsidies from the government. However, operation of the school remains under the supervision of the Hong Kong-Macao Conference.

Principals: D. W. Curry, 1956—1960; Leung Hung Ngok, 1960—1962; Wong Yat Chung, 1962—1964; Tang Chung Huen, 1964—1966; Lao Li Ming, 1966—1967; Lo Hing So (Leonard Lee, acting), 1967—1968; Leonard Lee, 1968—1969; Wu Siu Lun, 1969—1970; Handel Luke, 1970—1978; Hung Yan Tak (acting), 1979—1981; Handel Luke, 1981—1982; Wong Kar Keung, 1982—1987; Tam Wai Ming 1987—1992; Anna S. Lee 1992— .

Taikgyi Girls' School

TAIKGYI GIRLS' SCHOOL. See Myanmar.

Tait, Asa Oscar

TAIT, ASA OSCAR (1858—1941). Minister, editor. Influenced by James and Ellen White, at the age of 23 he entered the ministry and was ordained three years later in Illinois. He became a powerful advocate of religious liberty, and in 1891 went to Battle Creek as religious liberty secretary of the General Conference. A little later he was given supervision of the International Tract Society. He held these two positions until 1895, when he was appointed the first circulation manager of the Review and Herald.

In 1898 he joined the Editorial Department of Pacific Press, and with the exception of two years spent at the newly established Pacific Union College, assisting in the organization of the Theology Department, he remained with the publishing house for most of the next 43 years. From 1913 until shortly before his death he was editor in chief of the Signs of the Times.

Taiwan

TAIWAN. See China, Republic of.

Taiwan Adventist Academy

TAIWAN ADVENTIST ACADEMY. A coeducational boarding school on the junior and senior high school levels, operated by the South China Island Union Mission at Yu Chih, Nantou County, near Sun Moon Lake in Central Taiwan.

The school was first located in southern Taiwan, near Pingtung. That site of approximately 36 acres (15 hectares) of fertile farming land was purchased in 1963 to meet the educational needs of the aboriginal mountain people in the capacity of a worker training school. By 1971 it was felt that a higher level of education for the mountain workers was needed. In 1972 the school became a regular academy for both Chinese plains people and aboriginal students. The school maintained a fruit and vegetable farm at that time. In 1981 the academy was moved to the campus of Taiwan Adventist College in Yu Chih. Two academy dormitories, faculty housing, and a classroom/administration building were built on the campus to accommodate the academy. In 1993 the school was seeking government accreditation.

Presidents: Nathanael Yen, 1964—1969; Jerry Chi, 1969—1973; John Ash (acting), 1973—1974; Jack Liang, 1974—1976; John Ash, 1976—1979; Fred Tsai, 1979—1980; John Ash, 1980—1983; Eugene Hsu, 1981—1983; William Lin, 1983—1984; David Wong, 1984—1986; Paul Cho, 1986—1994; Wong Kar Keung, 1994— .

Taiwan Adventist College

TAIWAN ADVENTIST COLLEGE. A coeducational boarding school on the senior college level, operated by the South China Island Union Mission at Yu Chih, Nantou County, near Sun Moon Lake in Central Taiwan.

The school was first named Taiwan Shen Tao Shu Yuen (Taiwan Theological Institute) and was located on a 13-acre (five-hectare) site near Hsin Tien, a suburb of Taipei, the capital city of the Republic of China. Construction began in 1951, and the school opened on Sept. 23, 1952, with C. A. Carter as principal. Enrollment began with 70 students and gradually increased to 280 by 1963. Industries such as laundry, food factory, and print shop were developed.

In 1953—1954 the first-year of college was added, and in 1954 junior college work was authorized by the Far Eastern Division in the fields of ministry, commerce, teacher training, and prenursing. The school was renamed Taiwan Training Institute in 1954. In 1962 the English name of the college was changed to Taiwan Missionary College.

During the first 10 years of operation, 223 students were baptized. In 1964 the school was raised to senior college level. In 1970 the South China Island Union Mission decided to combine Taiwan Missionary College and South China Union College in Hong Kong to form one college under one administration, with the name South China Adventist College for both campuses. In 1973, for legal and other reasons, the name of the college was changed to Taiwan Adventist College for the Taiwan campus and South China Union College for the Hong Kong campus.

The search for a new location began when D. K. Brown was president. The present country site of 120 acres (50 hectares), surrounded by hills and valleys of superb beauty, was found in 1972. The master plan for the new campus was completed by the college development committee, of which Samuel Young was chair. Construction began in 1973, and in October 1974 the new campus was opened. During the first few years a music hall, cafeteria/classroom building, men's dormitory, library, and faculty homes were built. Since 1990 a women's dormitory, administration building, elementary church school (mainly for workers' children), and church (with additional classroom space in the basement) were added. A second floor was added to the cafeteria in 1992 to house a student center, a 42-station language lab, and a 40-station computer lab. The library was gradually developed to 30,000 volumes.

The college has had an ambitious upgrading program for its faculty, and as of 1993 the majority of the staff held master's degrees. The college offers majors in business administration, English, English secretarial, health education, music, religion, and theology. Forty to 50 students are baptized annually, and there is an organized outreach program for the community. The college is planning to add a Nursing School in 1995, for which it is seeking government accreditation. A large percentage of the ministers and other workers in the mission and institutions of Taiwan are graduates of the college.

Presidents: C. A. Carter, 1952—1959; Ming Dow Lee, 1959—1964; James Tsao, 1964; G. J. Bertochini, 1964—1966; G. B. Volsch, 1966—1968; D. K. Brown, 1968—1972; Wilbur Nelson, 1972—1973; Samuel Young, 1973—1975; Jerry Chi, 1975—1977; John Lu, 1977—1980; Eugene Hsu, 1980—1984; David Wong, 1984—1986; Paul Cho, 1986— .

Taiwan Adventist Hospital

TAIWAN ADVENTIST HOSPITAL (Tai An Yi Yuen). A 300-bed general acute nonprofit hospital located at 424 Pa Te Road, Taipei City, the capital of Taiwan, Republic of China, and operated by the South China Island Union Mission. The institution has a number of unique characteristics that make it special in the health-care field in Taiwan. Also, it is recognized and accredited by the National Health Administration as a certified regional teaching hospital. The hospital also provides training and internship programs for other specialties in the health-care professions. When Taiwan Adventist Hospital was set up, its aim was to heal the whole person—physically, mentally, and spiritually.

The hospital was formally established on Mar. 28, 1955, by Harry W. Miller, M.D., who pioneered Seventh-day Adventist medical work in China and was recalled to be the first medical director. Madame Chiang Kai-Shek and United States ambassador Karl Rankin took part in the grand-opening ceremonies of the original hospital. In order to reach the highest standards of medical care, a new, much bigger, and better building was constructed at the same location in 1987.

The expanded new hospital had a capacity for 300 beds and 1,000-plus outpatients per day, although the average in 1993 was around 600. However, with the new phone registration system as well as the advances of computerization, much improvement in these numbers is expected.

Taiwan Adventist Hospital has a well-trained professional staff and is dedicated to caring for people. The most important goal of the hospital is “to heal and to reach out with God’s love.” The staff is dedicated to filling the institution with a spiritual atmosphere. Through gospel music, Bibles, pamphlets, scriptural posts, application forms for the Bible correspondence school, hospital publications, counseling, and the chaplain’s bulletin board, the gospel message is shared.

The hospital also provides services to the public in a wide range of health programs that have been helpful in promoting good health, such as weight control, prenatal classes, healthy heart classes, free breast cancer screening, first-aid, stop-smoking plans, health cookery classes, as well as resuscitation techniques (CPR) through the Health Education Department. In addition, the hospital gives 24-hour care to the Chinese and expatriate community.

In the medical field, all physicians are certified in their specialties and subspecialties, including: anesthesiology, cardiology, cardiopulmonary, dermatology, ear/nose/throat, emergency medicine, general surgery, internal medicine, gastroenterology, neurology, neurosurgery, obstetrics/gynecology, ophthalmology, orthopedics, pediatrics, pediatric surgery, plastic surgery, radiology, rehabilitation, and urology. Qualified professionals provide all basic and highly specialized dental/oral services. The hospital is equipped with the latest sophisticated medical equipment, such as a CAT scanner and ultrasound. Other clinical services include an Audio-Speech Pathology Center, physical therapy, vegetarian nutritional services, intensive care unit, and a pathology laboratory.

Outpatient services are available from Sunday to Friday noon on either a walk-in or appointment basis. The same services are also provided through the Priority Care Center by appointment only, Monday through Friday noon and Sunday morning. Aside from well-equipped main nurseries, there are additional phototherapy facilities, isolation and treatment rooms, milk kitchen and feeding room, and complete NICU facility. A whole body multiphasic physical examination has been designed and is performed by the Physical Examination Center.

Medical Directors: H. W. Miller, 1955—1957; Roger O. Heald, 1961—1962; Edward Frank, 1962—1966; William VanArsdale, 1966—1974.

Administrators: S. J. Lee (acting), 1974—1975; Albert R. Deininger, 1975—1987; Vernon Small, 1987—1988; James D. Roberts, 1988—1991; Teru Yamanishi, 1992— .

Taiwan Mission

TAIWAN MISSION. See Far Eastern Division; Taiwan.

Taiwan San Yü Hsen Hsieh Yuen

TAIWAN SAN YÜ HSEN HSIEH YUEN. See Taiwan Adventist College.

Taiwan San Yü Jung Sawe

TAIWAN SAN YÜ JUNG SAWE. See Taiwan Adventist Academy.

Taiwan Theological Training Institute

TAIWAN THEOLOGICAL TRAINING INSTITUTE. See Taiwan Adventist College.

Tajikistan

TAJIKISTAN. An Asian country whose neighbors include China, Uzbekistan, Kyrgyzstan, and Afghanistan. It occupies an area of 54,019 square miles (140,000 square kilometers) and has a population (1994) of 6 million.

The area that is Tajikistan has been inhabited for thousands of years. Turkic tribes and the Mongols, led by Ghenghis Khan, ruled the area from the 1200s. In the 1800s Russian forces conquered the region, and it gradually became part of the former Soviet Union. Tajikistan declared independence on Sept. 9, 1991, becoming an independent state on Dec. 25, 1991, when the Soviet Union disbanded. The ruling Communist party has retained power in Tajikistan. In 1992 there were demonstrations by opposition forces, which led to civil war with anti-Communists and Islamic fundamentalists.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics:

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics: Tajikistan is part of the Central Asia Conference in the Southern Union Conference, which in turn is part of the Euro-Asia Division. The country has three churches and three companies, with a membership of 277. The first SDAs came to Tajikistan in 1929, when a special train with Caucasian immigrants moved first to Tashkent, Uzbekistan, and later on to Tajikistan. Many of the migrants were Molokans, and among them were two brothers, Ivan and Vasily Kosmjnin, who were SDAs. They settled in the village of Chanaka (now Gissar).

In 1993 the work in Tajikistan was directed by David Grents. Under his supervision a representative church has been built not far from the center of the city of Dushanbe.

The republic has been in a state of civil war for two years. Church members there have suffered much, but they do not stop preaching the gospel. There are frequent baptisms, and the church is growing.

Takoma Academy

TAKOMA ACADEMY. A coeducational day school on the senior high school level, owned and operated by the Potomac Conference and situated at 8120 Carroll Avenue, Takoma Park, Maryland. The school is accredited by the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools (1935) and the Maryland State Department of Education (1959). The 1992—1993 enrollment totaled 337; the faculty and staff numbered 32.

The school originated as the preparatory section of what is now Columbia Union College (established as a mission training institute in 1904). By 1932, after two decades of operation, the enrollment reached nearly 100. In 1933 this preparatory section was established as a separate school under separate administration, but financed by the college, and was named Takoma Academy. Classes, previously scattered, were now conducted in the basement of Columbia Hall.

In 1946 a joint college-academy board voted to erect a building on land owned by the Potomac Conference one-half mile (.8 kilometers) north of the college, at University Boulevard and Carroll Avenue. Funds totaling $225,000 were appropriated by the Columbia Union Conference and the Potomac Conference. In the fall of 1952 the school was transferred to the newly erected building, which contained 11 classrooms, a library, a gymnasium, and office facilities. A $128,000 west wing, completed in 1962, provided a science laboratory, music rooms, a home economics complex, and facilities for automobile mechanics and other industrial arts. In 1969 a $1,250,000 building project resulted in the remodeling of the chapel; the relocation of a science room, automobile mechanics laboratory, and music facilities; and the construction of a gymnasium/auditorium, cafeteria and kitchen complex, offices for student publications and Student Council, faculty lounge, 11,500-volume library, $17,000 audiovisual learning center, foreign language laboratory, and two additional science classroom/laboratories.

The student body, drawn mostly from the Seventh-day Adventist community in Takoma Park, participates actively in school affairs through the Student Council (founded 1936). The students participate in various community activities. In 1975 the 57-member Takoma Academy Chorale, under the direction of Francisco de Araujo, performed as Friendship Ambassadors during a three-week singing tour of Poland. The choir has performed in Bermuda, and the orchestra has toured England. During 1993 students logged more than 6,000 hours of community service.

Takoma Academy has a strong academic program, including honors classes for academically advanced students and advanced placement courses in which students can earn college credit. TA students rank higher than 94 percent of the nation's students in social studies.

Another strength is the academy's cultural diversity, with seven major ethnic awareness weeks celebrated during the year.

Principals since 1933: F. O. Rittenhouse, 1933—1938; Herbert E. Reddings, 1939; F. O. Rittenhouse, 1940; Conrad N. Rees, 1941—1945; W. H. Wood, 1946; Conrad N. Rees, 1947; J. P. Laurence, 1948—1980; Richard C. Osborn, 1981—1987; William A. Stebbins, 1988; Harvey Bristow, 1989—1992; Larry D. Blackmer, 1992— .

Takoma Adventist Hospital (Tennessee)

TAKOMA ADVENTIST HOSPITAL (Tennessee). A 115-bed general hospital operated by the Adventist Health System/Sunbelt Health Care Corporation and situated in Greeneville, in northeastern Tennessee, fully accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals. The present assets of the institution are worth $21.7 million (1993). The institution is the result of a request in the early 1920s by several influential citizens of Greeneville and Greene County, who as patients at the Washington Sanitarium in Takoma Park, Maryland, had become deeply impressed with the type of services received and desired a branch hospital in Greeneville.

Roy Bowen and his wife, from Takoma Park, came to Greeneville in 1924 and opened a health restaurant and treatment room. The next year they accommodated about 15 inpatients in a large dwelling. During the summer of 1925 Drs. H. W. Miller and L. E. Coolidge made several trips to Greeneville to perform surgery. In February 1926 L. E. Coolidge bought out Bowen's interest and took over the institution. In the same year a School of Nursing was begun. A modern fireproof three-story building was opened in January 1928, with 40 beds. Because of its historical connection with Washington Sanitarium in Takoma Park, Maryland, this hospital was named Takoma Hospital and Sanitarium.

Later additions included a two-story brick dormitory for nurses (1929); a separate two-story building for medical patients, including classrooms, a library, and quarters doubling the Hydrotherapy Department (1936); and a wing on the main building (1946), with a new Obstetrical Department on the third floor. In 1956 a grant of $27,500 from the Ford Foundation made possible the complete reorganization and enlargement of the Physical Therapy Department. In 1980 and 1985 two new buildings replaced all the old buildings.

In 1946 the nurses' training was changed from a professional course to a licensed practical course. The last class of professional nurses was graduated in 1947, making a total of 140 graduates since 1929. By 1965 there were 135 LPN graduates.

Financed originally by sale of stock, the hospital was changed in 1936 to a not-for-profit organization and in 1954 was turned over to the Southern Union Conference. It became part of Adventist Health System/Sunbelt Health Care Corporation in 1973.

Administrators: L. E. Coolidge, 1926—1961; W. E. Coolidge, 1961—1969; J. F. McClellan, 1970—1971; A. L. Jacobson, 1972—1973; P. B. Mitchell, 1974—1976; Douglas Carruthers, 1976—1985; Gladys Duran, 1985—1991; William Phipps, 1991—1992; Jim Thompson, 1992—1993; Donald W. Welch, 1993— .

TALRES

TALRES. The Trans-Africa Leprosy Rehabilitation and Research Service of Seventh-day Adventists was a specialty service of the Health Department of the Trans-Africa Division, instituted in 1968, with Dr. R. L. Foster as director.

Leprosy control (outpatient case finding and treatment), reconstructive surgery, and research in better methods to serve the leprosy patients were the three goals of the service. TALRES served 12 institutions—eight Seventh-day Adventist, one Salvation Army, two Africa Evangelical fellowships, and one Roman Catholic. The territory in which the service operated comprised: Zambia, Malawi, Botswana, Zaïre, Tanzania, Rwanda, and Sierra Leone.

Mwami Hospital and Leprosarium was the principal center of the TALRES service. A special leprosy hospital was built at Mwami under the direction of Dr. Ralph Harris, the medical director from 1968—1969.

The major area of research was in the prevention of deformities of hands, face, and feet in leprosy patients. A flipchart was produced by a psychologist specializing in communications with the illiterate. A series of teaching motion pictures was produced by Dr. E. S. Booth for the same purpose.

In the 1980s TALRES was replaced by the Shire Valley Leprosy Control Project, which deals with leprosy control, eye projects, and child spacing programs.

Tamil High School

TAMIL HIGH SCHOOL. See James Memorial Higher Secondary School.

Tamil Section

TAMIL SECTION. See India.

Tanganyika

TANGANYIKA. See Tanzania.

Tanjung Kasan Academy

TANJUNG KASAN ACADEMY. A nonboarding coeducational school located in a quiet rural setting about 30 minutes from Tebing Tinggi, the nearest major city, in north Sumatra. The school has been in continuous operation since its beginning as a primary school (grades 7—9) in 1967. The senior academy (grades 10—12) was added in 1988. The school is church-operated. No official recognition has been given to the academy by the union or the division, as the school has not yet met the minimum requirements for recognition.

The Tanjung Kasan Academy is a constituent school of two churches, the Kampung Subur Seventh-day Adventist Church, which is located on the same property, with a membership of 100; and the Kampung Baru Seventh-day Adventist Church, which has a membership of 175. The laypersons serving on the school board are members of these two churches.

The school offers all three levels of education, with the primary having an enrollment of 65, the junior high having 79, and the senior high having 93, making a combined enrollment in 1993 of 237 students. That year the number of non-SDAs in the academy was 53, or 30 percent of the total student body.

Principals: T. Marbun, 1985—1990; J. Sinambela, 1990— .

Tanzania

TANZANIA. An African republic, a federation created in 1964 by the union of Tanganyika (independent since 1961) and Zanzibar and Pemba (independent since 1963). It has an area of 364,900 square miles (940,000 square kilometers) and a population (1994) of 29.8 million.

Tanganyika, on the African mainland, is bounded on the north by Kenya and Uganda, on the east by the Indian Ocean, on the south by Mozambique, Malawi, and Zambia, and on the west by Burundi, Rwanda, and the two great lakes, Tanganyika and Victoria. It was explored by Livingstone and Stanley after Stanley brought relief to that missionary at the town of Ujiji, on the eastern shore of Lake Tanganyika. The country was a German colony (German East Africa) from 1891 to 1919, then a territory mandated by the League of Nations to Great Britain, then a republic. Agriculture is the principal occupation, the chief products being maize, peanuts, sisal, coffee, cotton, and cashew nuts. Diamonds and gold constitute the only minerals exported in quantity. The climate tends to be dry. The prevalence of the tsetse fly carrying the dread sleeping sickness makes large portions of the country uninhabitable. Dar es Salaam, an ancient Arab city lying on the Indian Ocean, is the capital of Tanzania.

Zanzibar and Pemba are islands in the Indian Ocean off the east coast of Africa, approximately six degrees south of the equator. They had been under the British protectorate from 1890 to 1963. Zanzibar has an area of 640 square miles (1,660 square kilometers) and a population (1992) of 165,253; Pemba's area is 380 square miles (980 square kilometers), and its population (1992) is 133,853. The people are chiefly Shirazis (Africans akin to those on the adjacent mainland), Arabs, and Indians. Most of them are Sunni Muslims. Agriculture is the chief occupation, and the principal export is cloves, of which Zanzibar furnishes 80 percent of the world's supply. There are also extensive coconut plantations on both islands.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Tanzania constitutes the Tanzania Union Mission in the Eastern Africa Division, and is organized into three conferences and three fields. Statistics (1992) for the Tanzania Union Mission: churches, 626; members, 124,270; ordained ministers, 102; licensed ministers, 63. Headquarters: Arusha. Statistics for the conferences—East Tanzania Field: churches, 40; members, 10,270; ordained ministers, 12; licensed ministers, 5. Headquarters: Morogoro. Mara Conference: churches, 176; members, 30,652; ordained ministers, 22; licensed ministers, 13. Headquarters: Musoma. North-East Tanzania Conference: churches, 111; members, 17,489; ordained ministers, 17. Headquarters: Makanya. South Nyanza Conference: churches, 163; members, 32,874; ordained ministers, 22; licensed ministers, 8. Headquarters: Mwanza. South-West Tanzania Field: churches, 72; members, 8,215; ordained ministers, 12; licensed ministers, 10. Headquarters: Mbeya. West Tanzania Field: churches, 64; members, 13,257; ordained ministers, 10; licensed ministers, 16. Headquarters: Kigoma.

Institutions

Institutions. Bupandagila Secondary School; Bwasi Secondary School; Heri Adventist Hospital; Ikizu Secondary School; Ndembela Secondary School; Nyabelive Secondary School; Nyasincha Secondary School; Parane Secondary School; Suji Secondary School; Tanzania Adventist Seminary and College; Tanzania Adventist Press.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. Beginnings. The first Seventh-day Adventist missionaries to Tanganyika (then German East Africa) were W. Ehlers and A. C. Enns, who were sent there in 1903 by the German Union, under the leadership of L. R. Conradi. Arriving in Dar es Salaam in December, they went to the Pare district in northeast Tanganyika, where they established Friedenstal Station, and studied the language while slowly gaining the confidence of the people. Other stations were opened in the Pare district: Kihurio, Suji (Vuasu), and Vunta. The first baptism was held in 1908, in which six were baptized. One of these was E. Sengoka, now a retired worker. Others arrived, some of whom—Ernst Raessler, Gustav Saunders, and Mrs. H. Drangmeister and her child—laid down their lives.

In 1909 a station was established at Busegwe, in the Lake Province, 20 miles (50 kilometers) east of Musoma. Three years later Dr. F. W. Vasenius, of Finland, the first SDA physician in Tanganyika, and V. E. Toppenberg, of Denmark, arrived. As the work advanced, organization was effected, and three districts were established: Northern, Lake Shore, and Usukuma. During 1910—1914 the following recruits came, mostly from Germany, to man the various local stations: R. T. Stein, E. Dominick, O. Wallath, J. Persson, F. Bornath, W. Seiler, Auguste Mertke, V. E. Toppenberg, F. Winter, H. Palm, F. Schurich, W. Koelling, R. Munzig, K. Kaltenhäuser, R. Lusky, L. Aberle, and Dr. F. W. Vasenius. Six of these men came with their wives, and one or two single nurses also came.

World War I and Its Effect. When the British forces advanced into Tanganyika in 1914, many of the German missionaries left. Between the departure of these missionaries and the arrival of the British, most of the SDA missions in Lake Province were looted and destroyed. By 1916 most of Tanganyika was occupied, and German civilians had either been interned or repatriated. Despite disruption, V. E. Toppenberg (a Dane) and his wife stayed on for a time at Busegwe Station. H. Palm, R. Munzig, and O. Wallath lost their lives in the war. Isaya Fue, Petro Mlungwana, Daniel Mwenda, and Phillip Sekisago, four African workers from Pare remained faithful for six years at their posts of duty, alone and unsupported, at four schools in Usukuma in a strange land and among an alien tribe.

In 1919 Tanganyika was assigned as a mission field to the British Union. When SDA missionaries were allowed to reenter the Lake province in 1921, among the first to arrive were E. B. Phillips, R. H. Matthews, and W. Cuthbert. Stations were reopened at Busegwe, Utimbaru, Majita, Ntusu, and Mwangala, and headquarters were established at Ikidzu (later spelled Ikizu).

Development of Local Stations. Busegwe Station (established by Ernst Raessler in 1909), 20 miles east of Musoma, in the Lake province, had suffered little during the early part of the war, and although evacuated it had been well cared for by the Africans, at least until V.

E. Toppenberg returned briefly in 1916. Yet in 1920 the 76 members who had been there could not be found. In 1921 E. B. Phillips was appointed to reestablish Busegwe Station. For a time it operated on the old site, but in 1938 new buildings were erected on a new site a short distance away.

Majita Station (opened 1909) had three churches by 1913, but after the war, in 1921, only 10 members could be found out of a former membership of 78. Under the care of a number of missionaries and African workers, the work has subsequently prospered. In 1960 the Majita area was organized into the Majita-Ukerewe Field under African leadership—S. D. Otieno, president, and N. Elisa, secretary-treasurer. The name of the field was changed in 1967 to Central Nyanza Field.

Pare Station. It was in northeastern Tanganyika, in the Pare area, that the first SDA stations-Friedenstal (Mamba), Kihurio, and Suji-had been established. Shortly before World War I, H. Kotz, with the help of Petro Risase, had completed the translation of the New Testament into Chasu, which was published by the Advent-Verlag in Hamburg with the approval of the British and Foreign Bible Society. The missions in the Pare Mountains suffered less than those in west Tanganyika as a result of World War I. Some of the German missionaries had remained at their stations until the British came, and before being interned they had ordained elders in all churches. Despite the fact that public meetings had been forbidden, Christians continued to gather for worship in their huts. The African workers, although bereft of their White missionaries and deprived of all financial support, were not idle. S. G. Maxwell, on arriving in 1921, found fully prepared candidates who had been waiting for baptism for six years. He also found that of the 277 members in 1914, 246 were still practicing SDAs.

In 1926 the first camp meetings in Tanganyika were held in the Pare area, and the first Seventh-day Adventist Africans of that section were ordained to the ministry (P. S. Kilonzo and E. Manongi). In 1930 a clinic was opened at Suji, and the school there conducted a strong industrial program.

A number of the Pare workers went out as pioneer missionaries throughout East Africa. For example, when S. G. Maxwell went to open work in Uganda, P. Risase and A. Mweta accompanied him; later A. Msangi also went to Uganda and died there. P. Risase later pioneered the work on Mombasa Island. Pare missionaries held responsible positions in different parts of the East African and Tanganyika unions. In 1960 the Pare area was organized into the North-East Tanzania Field, under African leadership, with Y. Lusingu as president and T. Samuel as secretary-treasurer.

Ntusu Station (opened 1912) in the Usukuma country, where R. Lusky was an early missionary, had 300 pupils and 10 baptized believers before the war came. It was here that the four Pare teachers mentioned earlier stayed on at their schools without salary. W. Cuthbert arrived at Ntusu in 1922, and H. Robson arrived in 1924 and remained until 1939. Ntusu was the site of the first girls' school established in that country. In 1960 this area was organized into the West Lake Field, with R. E. Dale as president and S. Okongo as secretary-treasurer. In 1963 S. Magembe and S. Okongo were elected president and secretary-treasurer, respectively. The name of the field was changed in 1967 to South Nyanza Field.

Utimbaru Station was opened in 1912 by V. E. Toppenberg, who was followed by Ernst Raessler, then J. Persson. During World War I its site became a battlefield. To this mission came F. H. Muderspach and his wife a short time after they went to Africa in 1925. After many missionaries came and went, Muderspach was again director of this mission at the time of his death in 1960. In that year Arthur L. Davy was elected the first president. This later became the East Nyanza Field headquarters, with M. Rutolyo, president, and A. Fue, secretary-treasurer.

Mwagala Station (opened before World War I) was a difficult station for Europeans to operate because of its isolation and its unhealthy climate. E. B. Phillips directed it from 1927 to 1931, and then W.C.S. Raitt until 1934. Later the station was put under African leadership, and with its district formed part of the South Nyanza Field, administered from Ntusu.

Mbeya Station (established in 1938 under R. Reider) is situated within 1.5 miles (four kilometers) of the town of Mbeya. It is thus not isolated from civilization, but it is removed from other Seventh-day Adventist work and workers. The climate is cool because of the high elevation. Progress has been slow because of frequent changes in missionary personnel.

Development of Organization. From 1903 to 1913 all SDA mission work in Tanganyika was under the direction of the German Union Conference. From mid-1913 to the outbreak of the war in 1914 it was under the new European Division, with headquarters in Hamburg. By 1912 the Tanganyika missions had been divided into two general sections—the South Pare Mission Field in the east, and the Victoria Nyanza Mission Field in the west, along the shores of Lake Victoria—with general headquarters of all German East African missions at Shirati, on Lake Victoria.

When the country became a British mandate after World War I, the British Union was asked to administer the territory and rebuild the mission program. Tanganyika and Kenya were formed into the British East African Mission, directly responsible to the British Union Conference executive committee. W. T. Bartlett was the first president, and his headquarters were at Gendia Mission in Kenya. In 1922 the mission was enlarged to include Belgian East Africa as well, and was named the East African Combined Mission. In 1923 the administration of these areas passed to the European Division, and in 1928, when the European Division was split into four, the East African Union Mission was assigned to the Northern European Division.

In 1933, at the request of the Central European Division, Tanganyika was reassigned to that organization and became the Tanganyika Mission.

When it became impossible for the German Union to support and administer missions immediately before and during World War II, Tanganyika became part of Section II of the Central European Division, which was fostered by the General Conference. In 1940 this mission was made part of the Southern African Division. Then from 1943 to 1960 the Tanganyika Mission Field was part of the East African Union Mission in the same division.

Work in Zanzibar and Pemba. Colporteurs from Pare, in Tanganyika, had sold SDA books on Zanzibar as early as the 1930s, and later a regular colporteur and his family had lived and worked on the island for more than five years. In 1945 W. Marais, a South African missionary in Kenya, went to solicit Ingathering funds on Zanzibar, and other workers have since made similar annual visits and have also sold many SDA books. In 1956 an African colporteur evangelist and his family were sent to Zanzibar from Tanganyika, and his work resulted in the first baptism of Shirazis, in 1958.

During the decade of the 1970s, SDAs made further attempts to enter Zanzibar. In 1974 Israel Kumbo, a layperson who had worked in Zanzibar, was sent to assess possibilities of contacting government officials with the hope of establishing SDA work there. After a promising start, the plans failed to materialize.

In 1986 Lukwaro, a literature evangelist, was sent to Zanzibar.

In 1987 permission was given to open a dispensary because of a favorable contact with an official who had been treated at an Adventist institution. Literature evangelism continued, resulting in the baptism of nine in 1989. In 1990, 12 more were baptized.

In 1991 Ibrahimu Alex Juma, a literature evangelist who had been working in Zanzibar, received permission to visit Pemba. During meetings held in a local church, the pastor and six of the members decided to become Seventh-day Adventists. Five were baptized.

In 1992 a church of 70 members was organized in Zanzibar, and in Pemba 32 people are worshipping on the Sabbath day.

Reorganization. In 1960, to facilitate the administration of the rapidly enlarging membership and to meet the changing territorial conditions, Tanganyika, together with Zanzibar and Pemba, was organized as a separate union, with C.T.J. Hyde as president; M. W. Cuthbert, secretary-treasurer; and H. K. Mashigan, R. F. Medford, and F. Muganda as departmental secretaries. With a membership of 13,237, it was organized in five fields: North-East Tanganyika (Suji), Majita-Ukerewe (Majita), West Lake (Ntusu), East Lake (Utimbaru), and Tanganyika General. The last named included all areas not allocated to the other four fields, and also Zanzibar and Pemba.

The Tanzania General Field (organized 1960) embraces mostly the unentered territory, including the centers of population, and therefore was originally administered by the union officers from the headquarters station at Busegwe. In 1967 the headquarters for this field were moved to the town of Morogoro, Tanzania, which was a more suitable location from which to administer the rapidly growing membership. Colporteurs pioneered in its towns, selling books and establishing branch Sabbath schools. These were followed by resident ministerial graduates who carried out a house-to-house visitation program in Tabora, Tanga, Iringa, Morogoro, and Dar es Salaam. City evangelistic meetings were held in Morogoro (1959), Dar es Salaam, and Tanga (1961) by two African evangelists. In Dar es Salaam, the capital, E. E. Cleveland, of the General Conference Ministerial Department, conducted an evangelistic campaign in 1963 that served the double purpose of winning converts and providing evangelistic training for a team composed of workers from several unions.

The continued rapid growth in Tanzania through the 1980s and 1990s precipitated other organizational changes.

The Tanzania Union also administers Tanzania Adventist Seminary and College and Parane Secondary School. The union headquarters moved to Arusha in 1974. The city has an international airport and desirable communication facilities. All the conferences and fields are under national leadership. This is also true of the union leadership.

Tanzania Adventist Press

TANZANIA ADVENTIST PRESS. A publishing house with printing plant located in Morogoro, Tanzania. It was begun as the Voice of Prophecy Press in 1969 and came under the present name in 1974.

The press serves Tanzania, with a population (1994) of 29.8 million, of which 150,000 are Seventh-day Adventist Church members. The plant does only church printing, with more than 13 million pages printed and sold each year, mainly in the Kiswahili and English languages.

The plant is equipped with computerized typesetting, with laser printers, darkroom, three Heidelberg offset presses, and a full bindery for stitched and perfect bound paperback books. There is also a Kiswahili Translation Department. The press has 40 employees.

The six main Adventist Book Centers (one in each conference/field) are under the direction of the press, with 80 branches serving more than 500 literature evangelists. Sabbath school lessons are translated and printed each quarter in Kiswahili for adults, juniors, and primary students. A mission quarterly is also printed.

The Voice of Prophecy Press began in the living room of R. H. Henning's home when he was president of the Tanzania General Field. The work started with a small secondhand offset press bought in Nairobi. In 1971 it was moved to the new Voice of Prophecy building.

Two longtime employees, Abraham Lukingo and Tofi Kinkoro, have given a total of nearly 50 years of service to Adventist publishing work in Tanzania.

Managers: B. Salsman, 1977—1980; Tofi Kinkoro, 1980—1981; Jack Turner, 1981; Dennis Mercill, 1981—1988; L. R. Thomas, 1988—1990; Neal T. Scott, 1990— .

Tanzania Adventist Seminary and College

TANZANIA ADVENTIST SEMINARY AND COLLEGE. A coeducational boarding institution on the junior college level, situated on an elevated site of 202 acres (80 hectares) between the snowcapped mountain of Kilimanjaro on the east and Mount Meru on the west. The location is 20 miles (30 kilometers) from the town of Arusha in northern Tanzania. The school is under the direction of the Tanzania Union Mission and extends its services to Kenya, Uganda, Ethiopia, Rwanda, Burundi, and Sudan. In 1993 the student population was 140, with 48 coming from outside Tanzania.

The college offers a two-year course in theology leading to the B.A. degree. It also offers a two-year business administration diploma, a two-year secretarial studies diploma, and a one-year education course. The school works in close relation with the University of Eastern Africa, with whom it is seeking affiliation. The faculty comprises 13 teachers, two of whom are from abroad.

The college was first established in 1975 as a seminary and in 1979 became a junior college. The two-story building purchased along with the land is still used for the administration offices and classrooms. The same building also houses two apartments, a small assembly hall, and a college shop. Later a cafeteria and four staff houses were added. The construction of a modern library and girls' dormitory was completed as the result of a Thirteenth Sabbath Overflow offering.

ADRA International has been instrumental in the development of a medical clinic that will also house a dental facility. The package includes housing for two medical staff persons. All labor costs for constructing the foundations of the buildings and making the block will be borne by the college.

ADRA also contributed a grain milling machine and a dairy building along with cattle. These projects contribute substantially to the college budget. There is a thriving farm in operation, along with a bakery, carpentry shop, and a dispensary that ministers to the public.

The college is establishing a primary school and has plans to become a senior college, offering the B.A. degree.

Principals: E. R. Mpyisi, 1975—1980; J. A. Kisaka, 1980—1983; B. Muganda (acting), 1983; D. Richert, 1983—1987; E. Mulwambo, 1988—1991; J. Maganga, 1992— .

Tanzania General Field

TANZANIA GENERAL FIELD. See Tanzania.

Tanzania Union Mission

TANZANIA UNION MISSION. See Afro-Mideast Division; Tanzania.

Taquara Academy

TAQUARA ACADEMY. See Cruzeiro do Sul Adventist Academy.

Taquary Publishing House

TAQUARY PUBLISHING HOUSE. See Brazil Publishing House.

Taquary (Training) School

TAQUARY (TRAINING) SCHOOL. See Brazil; Brazil College.

Tarr, David Fletcher

TARR, DAVID FLETCHER (1861—1948). South African evangelist. He was born in Clumber, near Bathurst, South Africa, and became a loyal Methodist as a young man. With his cousin, Albert Davies, he went into the transport business, carrying goods in ox wagons from Port Elizabeth to Kimberley and other inland cities. On one of these trips in 1887 he camped for the night on the farm of Pieter Wessels, a Dutch farmer who had been observing the Sabbath for more than a year.

On hearing Wessels' arguments for the Bible Sabbath, Tarr was profoundly disturbed. After seeking in vain for Bible evidence for keeping Sunday, he began to observe the Sabbath, being among the first English-speaking South Africans to do so. Four months later the first overseas workers, D. A. Robinson and C. L. Boyd, arrived. Tarr, Davies, and Davies' wife were baptized in the dam on the Wessels' farm.

Tarr next worked with Boyd, holding evangelistic meetings in Kimberley (where the first church in South Africa was organized). Later he worked in the Rokeby Park district with J. I. Hankins, who arrived in 1888. There his powerful witness won many of his relatives, among them his brothers James and Walter, with their children. Of these two families, including grandchildren, 17 have become workers, among whom were four ordained ministers, three nurses, and four missionaries to the north.

In 1890 Tarr went to the United States and studied at Battle Creek College for three years, where he met Olive Phillips, whom he married. For the next 35 years Tarr filled many responsible positions in South Africa and conducted many evangelistic campaigns in both European and African communities. Many hundreds of members in South Africa today are either his converts or the children of his converts. During his later years Tarr was in charge of the Durban and East London churches. His life of service covered more than 60 years.

Tarr, Walter Claude

TARR, WALTER CLAUDE (1878—1970). Missionary. Tarr was born in the Grahamstown district of South Africa, the descendant of British settlers. He was left an orphan at an early age. He attended the first Seventh-day Adventist college in South Africa, Union College. In 1902 he was asked to relieve for a time at Solusi Mission, the oldest SDA mission station in Africa. After his marriage in 1904, he and his wife worked in Cape Town and then were called to Rhodesia. They became permanent missionaries in 1910 and pioneered the work in Transkei, where they founded Bethel Training College. After his retirement in 1940, Pastor Tarr continued to give years of part-time service, mainly in connection with Bantu work in Natal.

Tasmanian Conference

TASMANIAN CONFERENCE. See Australia; South Pacific Division.

Tass Old People's Home

TASS OLD PEOPLE'S HOME (Szeretet-Otthon). A home for the aged established in 1958 in Tass, Hungary, 38 miles (60 kilometers) from Budapest. The institution has accommodations for 30 residents and has eight employees on its staff. A third of the cost of maintaining the home is covered by the retirement income and relatives of the residents. The Hungarian government supplies two thirds of the cost.

A lovely garden on the grounds helps to supply food for the home. The guests take an active part in the activities of the home and enjoy the church services conducted regularly in their worship room.

Tauran, Augusta (Poppy) R.

TAURAN, AUGUSTA (POPPY) R. (1922—1964). Nursing educator. While teaching at the Seventh-day Adventist college near Bandung, Indonesia, in the mid-1950s, she responded to the call to become a missionary nurse and enrolled in the nursing program at Bandung Adventist Hospital. Upon the completion of her course, she joined the hospital staff. In 1961 she earned a Bachelor of Science degree in nursing at Philippine Union College in Manila, and two years later earned a Master of Arts degree from the same institution.

She returned to Bandung Adventist Hospital in 1963, where she headed the School of Nursing and helped in further developing a strong nursing program. Scores of faithful successful alumni serving at home and abroad testify to the solid foundation that she and the other pioneers laid in nursing education in Indonesia.

Tavodi, Peni

TAVODI, PENI (1888—1918). Fijian member of the first Seventh-day Adventist missionary group in New Guinea. He was born on the island of Fiji and received his education first in Methodist (1894—1904) and later in SDA (1905—1907) schools. He was brought into contact with SDA teachings through reading The Great Controversy, by Ellen White, and Bible Readings in the Fijian language. He was baptized in 1905. About two years later he and his wife were appointed to accompany S. W. Carr to New Guinea. They spent one year at the Avondale school in preparation for their service, and while there he translated a physiology textbook into Fijian. From 1908 to 1918 he was a teacher at the Seventh-day Adventist New Guinea Mission and died there from the bite of a poisonous snake. His name is also spelled Beni Tavondi.

Tay, John I.

TAY, JOHN I. (1832—1892). Missionary. He accepted the Seventh-day Adventist faith in 1873. Working his passage on six ships, he arrived on Pitcairn Island in 1886 and gave Bible studies to the islanders, who had previously received SDA literature. They decided unanimously to keep the Sabbath. On his return to California, within five months his story had stirred considerable interest in South Sea Island missions, with the result that in 1890 the Pitcairn sailed from San Francisco for the South Pacific, with Tay and his wife among the missionaries aboard. In 1891 they entered Fiji, but five months later he died in Suva.

Taylor, Charles Lindsay

TAYLOR, CHARLES LINDSAY (1867—1918). Author of The Marked Bible; teacher and minister. Despite his father's being a spiritualist medium, Charles dedicated his life to Christian service at an early age, largely through the influence of his sisters, one of whom, May Taylor (later Mrs. Quantock), was among the pioneer Seventh-day Adventist missionaries in India. After his baptism in 1884 he assisted in tent evangelism, canvassed, and helped in the Tract Society office. For a time in 1885 he worked at the Battle Creek Sanitarium, then in the pressroom of the Pacific Press (1886—1888). In 1889 he served as field secretary of the California Sabbath School Association, and the next year preached at Washington, D.C. In 1891 he married Lucy E. Brown and for a while worked as a field secretary of the General Conference Sabbath School Association. Later he studied for two years at Battle Creek College. It appears that he never completed his formal education, but according to reports of those who knew him, he improved his opportunities and developed his abilities by wise reading and private study. He began his teaching career at Mount Vernon Academy in 1893. In 1894 he was ordained. Then he taught Bible at Walla Walla (1896—1899) and Healdsburg (1900—1901) colleges; served as chaplain of the St. Helena Sanitarium for about 10 years; taught at academies in California, Georgia, and Minnesota; and concluded his service at Emmanuel Missionary College in 1918. He was a gifted writer and contributed many articles to the denominational press. In the last years of his life he wrote two paperbacks, The Marked Bible and Ella Simpson, Neighborhood Transformer, and contributed to a small volume, World Problems.

Taylor, Charles O.

TAYLOR, CHARLES O. (1817—1905). Evangelist; pioneer in the South. After going through the Millerite disappointment of 1844, he accepted Adventist beliefs, and in 1854 began his public ministry, working mostly in New York State. In 1876 he drove his team south and preached in Georgia, where he settled in Brooks County. Three years later he traveled to the Carolinas, where he presented the Seventh-day Adventist truth successfully. He made evangelistic trips into Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and other states, and was the first SDA minister to work in the Southeastern states.

Taylor, Clifton Lindley

TAYLOR, CLIFTON LINDLEY (1882—1963). Author of the textbook Outline Studies From the Testimonies (1910); teacher and pastor. At the age of 18 he taught in Vermont, then worked briefly at the Pacific Press as a typesetter, and later taught church school in California. He served as principal of the following academies: Beechwood, in Indiana (1908—1911), Adelpian, in Michigan (1911—1913), Campion, in Colorado (1913—1915), and Williamsdale, in Nova Scotia (1916—1918), and was head of the Bible Department of Canadian Junior College (1918—1920) and Atlantic Union College (1924—1929). He served as assistant and later associate principal of the Fireside Correspondence School (1922—1924). From 1929 until his retirement in 1947 he was a pastor in New England. His book, enlarged and reprinted several times, is still in use.

Taylor, Daniel T.

TAYLOR, DANIEL T. (1823—1899). Advent Christian minister whose writings on the Second Advent in books and in periodicals such as the Advent Herald were occasionally quoted in Seventh-day Adventist periodicals. He appears to have been a brother of the SDA minister Charles O. Taylor.

Taylor, Gladys King

TAYLOR, GLADYS KING (1894—1992). Missionary, teacher, writer. Born in North Vernon, Indiana, into a family of nine children, she was baptized when her family responded to books left by George Rader, a literature evangelist. Gladys worked her way through school at Emmanuel Missionary College (now Andrews University) and through the nursing course at Wabash Valley Sanitarium. She married George B. Taylor, whose father she admired as her evangelism teacher and as author of The Marked Bible.

After a year at Bethel Academy in Wisconsin, the Taylors spent 20 years (1920 to 1940) as missionary educators in Brazil, Chile, and Argentina. Upon their return to the United States, they gave a year of service at Mountain View Academy in California, then were called to Pacific Union College, where he chaired the Modern Languages Department and she assisted in the library and taught English. Together they influenced the lives of many future leaders of the Seventh-day Adventist Church. Taylor's master's thesis became the book Literary Beauty of the Writings of Ellen White, a prayer meeting testimony inspired the book Heck and the Deacon, and her grandfather's experiences in the Civil War became a serial in the Youth's Instructor. She lived to see a son and grandson serve overseas and at the church's world headquarters, and reaped the gratitude of former students from all corners of the world.

Tea

TEA. Seventh-day Adventists advocate the avoidance of tea and other stimulants. (See Diet; Health Principles; see also SB, Nos. 22, 217, 232, 233—241, 640.)

Teachers

TEACHERS.

Pioneer Educators. Probably the first teacher of the first Seventh-day Adventist home school was Martha Byington, who taught in 1853 at Buck's Bridge, New York, in the home of Aaron Hilliard. Lucinda Paine taught the second school year, and John Fletcher Byington, Martha's brother, taught the third and probably the last year of the school. In 1854 Mary Baker taught a home school in the residence of Josiah Hart, a minister, in Northfield, Vermont, with four children of the household as pupils. Another little home school was in operation at Jackson, Michigan, in 1854. In Battle Creek, Michigan, Mrs. M. M. Osgood began a school in 1855. It was reopened in 1857, when Louisa M. Morton taught the school. Robert Holland and John Frederick Byington continued in 1860. Another early pioneer was Goodloe H. Bell, who taught privately and prepared instructional materials at Battle Creek. Then on June 3, 1872, he opened a church-supported school. The program of Adventist education has continued since that date. South Lancaster Academy opened Apr. 19, 1882, under the principalship of G. H. Bell. Other pioneer educators were W. W. Prescott, Sidney Brownsberger, E. A. Sutherland, P. T. Magan, and W. E. Howell.

Recruitment and Professional Preparation. In the early years of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, where available, teachers were selected and recruited from new converts who had had experience in public school systems. Others were selected on the basis of their love for the children and youth and for their aptitude to teach.

Lectures, institutes, and conventions supplemented normal schools in helping to qualify teachers. Thirty teachers attended a convention at Battle Creek, June 21—26, 1888, but the first North America-wide SDA-sponsored teachers' convention was held at Harbor Springs, near Petoskey, Michigan, in 1891. W. W. Prescott directed the meeting. Ellen White and other prominent educators assisted. The first summer school for teachers was held in California in 1899, with a total of 13 in attendance, including the instructors.

Battle Creek College (1874), Emmanuel Missionary College (1901), Nashville Agricultural and Normal Institute (1905), Western Normal Institute (Lodi Academy, 1908), and other institutions offered preprofessional and professional training for teachers. About 1901 C. C. Lewis, assisted by his wife and Mrs. Flora H. Williams, produced a church school manual. Another teachers' manual was authorized at the 1906 educational convention held at College View, Nebraska, and was issued soon after. The School Manual, in subsequent revisions, has been a unifying factor for educational personnel.

Two-year professional curricula in normal schools during the 1920s and 1930s were upgraded into four-year undergraduate professional curricula administered by college departments of education. Graduate work has been offered in some of the SDA colleges and universities.

Educational personnel are encouraged to have not only a baccalaureate degree but also graduate work. Teachers are expected to serve in the areas of their academic majors and minors.

College and University Personnel. Recommended to the respective boards of trustees by the chief school administrator, the personnel of SDA colleges and universities are recruited and selected on the requisites of their dedication, academic background, successful experience, and demonstrated competency. The college and university personnel should preferably have had successful experience in an elementary and/or secondary school.

Personnel are expected to serve in the areas of their professional concentration and related fields. Master's degrees, doctorates, and postdoctoral study may be required for the particular teaching, research, or service area.

Church Affiliation and Credentials. Teachers are members of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in good and regular standing. Limited exceptions are made in countries where special government regulations are enforced. A Minister of Teaching certificate is granted to a beginning teacher, a Commissioned Minister of Teaching license is granted to a teacher with not fewer than three years of satisfactory service, and a Commissioned Minister of Teaching credential is granted a teacher with not fewer than six years of satisfactory service.

Teacher certification is processed and administered at the union department of education level in cooperation with the respective division department of education.

Tehuantepec Training School

TEHUANTEPEC TRAINING SCHOOL. See Mexico.

Telenotes

TELENOTES. See Periodicals.

Television

TELEVISION. See Communication, Department of; Faith for Today; It Is Written; Recreations and Amusements.

Tell

TELL (1949—1991; vols. 1—6, 1949—1954, as News Beat; monthly; General Conference Department of Communication). An eight-page journal dealing with Seventh-day Adventist public relations and communication via public media published formerly by the General Conference Department of Communication. It dealt with SDA activities touching the public throughout the world; also, articles presenting public relations and evangelistic broadcasting techniques. It was sent to pastors, administrators, institutional public relations directors, conference departmental secretaries, and church communication secretaries in North America, and was mailed in bulk to overseas divisions and to all SDA colleges.

Editors: Helen F. Smith, 1949—1953; M. Carol Hetzell, 1953—1975; DeWitt S. Williams, 1975—1979; Franklin W. Hudgins, 1979—1983; Shirley Burton, 1985—1991.

Telugu Secondary School

TELUGU SECONDARY SCHOOL. See Flaiz Memorial Higher Secondary School of Seventh-day Adventists.

Temperance (principles)

TEMPERANCE (principles). From the beginning of Adventism, temperance has been an important part of its doctrinal teaching. Although generally “temperance” refers to the matter of alcoholic beverages, to Seventh-day Adventists it has a broader context.

Temperance, meaning self-control, is a spiritual foundation to the life, restored and provided by the Holy Spirit (see Gal. 5:22, 23). Temperance pictures a life of victory over every harmful and defiling practice. It causes the believer to have a distinct separation from the allurements of idolatry, lust, and pride (see 2 Cor. 6:14—18), making the body a living temple of dedication to God. Therefore, Ellen White wrote in 1874: “Temperance alone is the foundation of all the graces that come from God, the foundation of all victories to be gained” (Te 201). For contrast she wrote, “Intemperance lies at the foundation of all the evil in our world” (ibid. 165).

Alcohol, with its devastating effects on the individual and society, was early recognized by Seventh-day Adventists as opposed to the development of Christian experience and faith. Joseph Bates, one of the pioneers in modern Adventism, was the founder of a temperance society at Fairhaven, Maine, in 1827 and had given up alcohol and tobacco many years before his association with the development of the church. Other pioneers, such as James White and John Andrews, had never taken alcohol or tobacco. John Loughborough, who began smoking cigars on recommendation of his physician as a means to deaden the pain of a certain infection, discarded this habit on the eve of his conversion, throwing a partly smoked cigar into the river. Joseph Waggoner stopped smoking when he became a Seventh-day Adventist.

Writing in the Review and Herald (36:165, Nov. 8, 1870), James White recalled that “it was twenty-two years ago [1848] the present autumn, that our minds were called to the injurious effects of tobacco, tea, and coffee, through the testimony of Mrs. White.” Three years later, on Dec. 14, 1851, Ellen G. White answered the question of whether it was “wrong to use tobacco” in the following terms: “I have seen in vision that tobacco is a filthy weed, and that it must be laid aside or given up. Said my accompanying angel, ‘If it is an idol it is high time it was given up, and unless it is given up the frown of God will be upon the one that uses it, and he cannot be sealed with the seal of the living God’” (letter 5, 1851).

It appears that no special effort was made through Seventh-day Adventist publications to urge Sabbathkeeping Adventists to discontinue the use of tobacco until the latter part of 1853. In the Dec. 13, 1853, issue of the Review and Herald (4:178), James White, the editor, included a “selected” article that said in part: “Religion, for its full development, demands all our mental powers. . . . This drug [tobacco] impairs them. It accordingly must follow, that, in proportion to their derangement, will be the defect of their action; so that, in this sense, it may be said with truth, that the person that uses tobacco cannot be as good a Christian as he could be without it.”

As time went on, the objection to tobacco was stated more positively. Thus James White said: “Among those who profess faith in the Third Message are probably no less than 1,000 families who have left (or should immediately leave) the use of tobacco and tea. The average expense to each family could not be less than $10, yearly, making in all the round sum of $10,000 saved (or should be) by the friends of present truth in leaving the poisonous (to say nothing of the extremely filthy character of tobacco) weeds of tobacco and tea. This sum would be sufficient to sustain thirty Missionaries in new fields of labor. What a shameful fact, that there are those among us, professing much zeal in the cause, who are too poor to pay for their paper, or help the preacher who may visit them. Yet they contrive to raise the cash to purchase tobacco and tea!" (ibid. 8:24, May 1, 1856).

In the preface to an article by George Trask dealing with tobacco, which appeared a few months later, the editor observed that "the subject of the use of Tobacco is engaging the attention of many of our brethren, in different places" (ibid. 7:62, Oct. 16, 1855). On Oct. 15, 1855, a general meeting of SDAs was held at Morristown, Vermont, at which the delegates voted: "That the use of Tobacco by any member, is a serious and bitter grief, and greatly lamented by the Church; and after such members have been labored with, and properly admonished, as long as duty seems to require, if they do not reform, the Church will then deem it their duty to withdraw from them the hand of fellowship" (ibid. Dec. 4, 1855).

This attitude is essentially the current Seventh-day Adventist position on the use of tobacco by members. See Church Manual (1990), p. 160.

The use of alcoholic beverages by church members was never a major issue among SDAs. In fact, when the church was in its formative stages, the anti-alcohol movement had well permeated most religious groups. But SDAs went further than many of the popular temperance groups in making it clear that abstinence also included wine and hard cider.

Tea and coffee were almost universally used, but as the injuriousness of these beverages, as well as tobacco, was taught, they were listed as harmful practices of intemperance.

Repeated mention was made by Ellen White of what she called the "twin evils," referring to liquor and tobacco. She made clear that for church members the only safe course to follow is "to touch not, taste not, handle not," and that "total abstinence is the only platform on which God's people can conscientiously stand." She gave emphasis to liquor as a major factor in many problems of society, including crime, accidents, juvenile delinquency, and poverty, even describing it as the greatest cause of God's present judgments on mankind: "Because of the wickedness that follows largely as the result of the use of liquor, the judgments of God are falling upon our earth today" (CH 432).

Long before medical and research specialists found smoking to be a cause of lung cancer and other fatal diseases, SDAs were told that "tobacco is a poison of the most deceitful and malignant kind, having an exciting, then a paralyzing influence upon the nerves of the body" (4aSG 128). "Its effects are more difficult to cleanse from the system than those of liquor" (3T 569).

Because of the impact of these destructive habits on society, the church was urged to "bear a clear, decided testimony against the use of intoxicating drinks and the use of tobacco" (Ms 82, 1900).

Positive instruction from the biblical base showed "that the Bible is full of history bearing upon temperance, and that Christ was connected with the work of temperance, even from the beginning. It was by the indulgence of appetite that our first parents sinned and fell. Christ redeemed man's failure. In the wilderness of temptation He endured the test which man had failed to bear” (Te 267). This meant for SDAs that temperance, self-control, and restoration entirely depended upon the work of Christ. The declaration was that “however strong the passion or appetite, we can gain the victory, because we may have divine strength to unite with our feeble efforts. Those who flee to Christ will have a stronghold in the day of temptation” (ibid. 267, 268).

Temperance, then, depended upon the right choice of man to work in cooperation with God for the development of the physical, mental, social, and spiritual life. This included right diet, the habits of study, dressing, working, seeing, and all social conduct. “We are to be temperate in all things, because an incorruptible crown, a heavenly treasure, is before us” (ibid. 213).

The importance of early temperance instruction in the home and the right example of parents is emphasized. Of paramount importance in this regard is for the church and the home to make temperance (self-control) an attractive, positive, rewarding alternative to the false dependencies of intemperance with all their allurements. “The Word of God does not condemn or repress man’s activity but tries to give it a right direction,” wrote Ellen White (ibid. 193), who found temperance her favorite subject and stated her divine call, “I was also to speak on the subject of temperance, as the Lord’s appointed messenger” (ibid. 259).

Referring to the experience of Christ’s manner in meeting the Samaritan woman at Jacob’s well and offering her the water of life, she said, “This is an illustration of the way in which we are to work. We must offer men something better than that which they possess, even the peace of Christ, which passeth all understanding” (ibid. 132). Thus temperance means counteracting evil with good, presenting a vigorous warning against intemperance and by precept and example showing a better way. (See also: Breathe Free: the Plan to Stop Smoking; Diet; Five-Day Plan to Stop Smoking; Listen; American Health and Temperance Association.)

Temperance Association

TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION. See American Health and Temperance Association; International Health and Temperance Association.

Temperance Bulletin

TEMPERANCE BULLETIN (1935—1949; quarterly; General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists; American Temperance Society, Washington, D.C.; PPPA; no complete files on record). A four-page organ of the American Temperance Society of SDAs presenting temperance “facts for press, pulpit, and publicity.” It was launched by C. S. Longacre in 1935.

Temperance Department

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT. A former function of the General Conference that with its director, associate and assistant directors, and advisory committee, organized, directed, and promoted the temperance work of the church through divisions of the General Conference. The department was set up by action of the 1960 Autumn Council. This action did not change the organizational structure of the International Temperance Association, the American Health and Temperance Society, or the national societies affiliated with the international organization. They were recognized as subsidiary organizations of the department. The aim of the department was to establish within the church the principles of temperance, to counteract intemperance, and to convey these truths for better living to people of all races, color, and creed.

The Health and Temperance departments were merged as one department in 1980.

Secretaries: W. A. Scharffenberg, 1960—1964; E. J. Folkenberg, 1964—1968; E.H.J. Steed, 1968—1974.

Director: E. H. J. Steed, 1974—1980.

Temperance Films

TEMPERANCE FILMS. Perhaps the greatest single impact of the temperance program of the Seventh-day Adventist Church has been made by a series of films produced in recent years on smoking, drinking, and drugs.

One in 20,000, produced in 1954 in full color, was the first major film to portray the relationship of smoking to lung cancer. Featuring the world-renowned lung surgeon Dr. Alton Ochsner of New Orleans, it portrays the story of a heavy smoker who discovers he has lung cancer, and shows the surgical removal of the cancerous lung. The film has been seen by an estimated 75 million people around the world and has been issued in 14 languages. In England, Denmark, the former Soviet Union and other countries it has been a major factor in igniting nationwide educational programs against smoking.

This film is still widely used as a basic film on smoking, not only by SDAs but by other churches and health and educational organizations as well. It is shown widely in connection with temperance exhibits at fairs, conventions, and congresses, and is featured in high schools, youth organizations, and business clubs. It has served as the major part in the series of films used for the Five-Day Plan to Stop Smoking.

One in 20,000, presented to the leading medical authorities and members of Parliament in Great Britain, has been credited with starting the chain of events resulting in the famous 1962 report on Smoking and Health by the Royal College of Physicians. This report, the first inclusive, authoritative statement on the subject, stirred public interest in the United States, leading to the appointment of a panel of scientific and medical experts by Surgeon General Luther L. Terry of the Public Health Service. The report by this panel, which appeared in January 1964, has been called the greatest single event in the field of health in this century.

Popular interest in the smoking problem, fanned to a considerable extent by One in 20,000, continued to develop rapidly during the late 1950s, necessitating another film on the subject. Cancer by the Carton, released in 1958, deals with smoking and health more in depth, featuring four outstanding specialists and presenting additional medical evidence against smoking as a health menace.

For educational purposes, particularly in schools, Time Pulls the Trigger, produced in 1961, has been very popular. This story, based on a military theme, features an animated cartoon sequence. The viewer sees the air passages of the body, and is shown by means of little gnomes how the inhaling of tobacco smoke irritates the cells in the walls of the air passages.

Fourth in the series of tobacco films is Beyond Reasonable Doubt, produced in 1964, showing the relationship of smoking to coronary heart disease, in many countries the number one killer today. It also portrays, with explanation by medical authorities, what smoking does to the expectant mother and her unborn child, a phase of the tobacco question that is receiving increasing attention today. This is the first documentary film to show this aspect of the subject.

Countdown was produced in 1968 with a space-age theme. Its story parallels the plot of One in 20,000, but updates medical evidence against smoking and operation procedures in removing a cancerous lung.

I'm Sorry, Baby shows that smokers often invade the rights of nonsmokers, this unfair invasion starting even before the birth of a child, when the mother smokes during her pregnancy. This film reports medical evidence that a mother's smoking may result in prematurity and lighter birth weight for her baby, along with possible heart damage.

The Seventh-day Adventist Church, through its temperance organizations, has also produced several major films on alcohol and health. First in this series is From 5 to 7:30, released in 1960, which tells a story attractive to teenagers and shows the sinister danger of the popular cocktail hour. The cocktail is pictured in its true nature-as a menace to the home, as a misleading example to young people, and as a potential introduction to alcoholism.

Verdict at 1:32 is a documentary film produced in 1962 depicting the effects of alcohol on the brain of the social drinker. It makes clear that when alcohol is taken into the body in large or small doses, it often injures and sometimes kills.

Just One portrays graphically the new medical finding that alcohol, even in small amounts, tends to pull the red blood cells together, thus thickening the blood and reducing the blood flow to vital body organs. This research was directed by Dr. Melvin Knisely of the University of South Carolina, and was first popularly presented in this film.

Short but effective is the film Becky, made in 1963, telling the story of a 13-year-old girl killed by an alcohol-impaired driver. The film is narrated by Ron Cochran, well-known television news commentator.

A series of four 10-minute films, entitled Alcoholism in a New Dimension, has been produced primarily for use in 4 DK programs, and as a teaching aid for educational purposes.

Crutch for All Seasons shows a series of real incidents involving youth taking drugs but coming to the realization that a positive, nondrug way of life is much safer and happier. The separate incidents concern alcohol, heroin, and marijuana, and include basic reasons why youth are at times attracted to drug use.

Circle of Love is a film featuring all Black actors portraying an effective group therapy approach to drug problems. This is especially designed for inner-city work.

The Alternative is a training film for the Temperance Department showing how laypersons can utilize temperance programs in developing interests for the church.

Second Chance: 1 in 10 is the story of a pilot who confronts the frustration, helplessness, and fear suffered by every smoker diagnosed with lung cancer. Every excruciating step of the process, from diagnosis by X-ray and biopsy to surgery and recovery is documented in vivid detail. Medical science is able to help only about one in 10 diagnosed with lung cancer to survive for a second chance at life. This is a complete update of the original film 1 in 20,000.

The Search takes the viewer from Ponce de Leon's expedition in search of the fountain of youth to the modern facilities of some of today's top researchers, who delve into ancient secrets of health and examine why SDAs live longer and healthier lives by following certain life-extending guidelines.

ICPA Viewpoint is a 13-part magazine-style television program produced by Thomas R. Neslund, ICPA executive director. Included are interviews with experts on various health-related topics, historical sketches relating to temperance, and a musical selection. Offers of topical health-related materials are made at the end of each episode.

Temple Academy

TEMPLE ACADEMY. See Greater New York Academy.

Temple, Ruth Janetta

TEMPLE, RUTH JANETTA (1892—1984). Medical doctor, health educator. She was the first African-American woman to graduate from Loma Linda Medical School. She practiced medicine in Los Angeles, where she pioneered that city's public health work. In 1941 she opened the city health department's Public Health Clinic in southeast Los Angeles. In 1944 she founded Community Health Week. In 1962 she became director for health services for the Southern California Conference and also began work with the Total Health Program and Community Health Association. Dr. Temple lectured around the world for the cause of health. She was the recipient of more than 30 awards for her medical contributions spanning more than 50 years.

Temuco Adventist Academy

TEMUCO ADVENTIST ACADEMY (Liceo Adventista de Temuco). A complete secondary level school located at Temuco City, Chile. It is operated by the South Chile Conference.

The school opened at the elementary level in 1934. From 1972 it has functioned at the secondary level also. The school occupies an area of 28,000 square feet (2,600 square meters). The school building itself contains 10,800 square feet (1,000 square meters) of space. The academy operates a library with more than 3,000 volumes. In 1993, 145 area students were enrolled in the academy classes. There were 14 teachers.

Principals: Hugo Ramfrez, 1972—1973; Augusto Wandersleben, 1974—1976; Marlo Parra, 1977—1979; Fernando Ponce, 1980—1981; Luis Quezada, 1982—1983; Guillermo Acosta, 1984—1988; Dario Vejar, 1989—1991; Victor Soto, 1992— .

Ten Commandments

TEN COMMANDMENTS. See Law.

Ten Horns

TEN HORNS. See Daniel, Interpretation of; Revelation, Interpretation of.

Ten Kingdoms

TEN KINGDOMS. See Daniel, Interpretation of.

Ten Virgins

TEN VIRGINS. See “Midnight Cry”; Open and Shut Door.

Tennessee

TENNESSEE. See Georgia-Cumberland Conference; Kentucky-Tennessee Conference; South Central Conference.

Tennessee Christian Medical Center—Nashville

TENNESSEE CHRISTIAN MEDICAL CENTER—NASHVILLE. A 309-bed acute-care and skilled nursing facility in Madison, Tennessee, a suburb of Nashville, operated by the Adventist Health System/Sunbelt Health Care Corporation.

The hospital was established in 1908 under the direction of Ellen G. White. Originally called Madison Rural Sanitarium, the 12-bed self-supporting institution was part of the Nashville Agricultural Normal Institute Corporation.

The first physician was Dr. Lillian Magan, who was assisted on a part-time basis by Dr. Newton Evans. When Edward A. Sutherland and Percy T. Magan completed training at the University of Tennessee Medical College in 1914, they operated the hospital together until the Magans accepted a call to Loma Linda, California.

A training program for nurses was begun under the leadership of Nellie Druillard. By 1919 Madison College graduate nurses were sitting for Tennessee state board examinations. The college closed in 1963. For a short time Southern Missionary College offered a two-year associate degree nursing program at Madison. Paramedical courses in anesthesia, medical technology, radiologic technology, and medical records were started as hospital schools, but were gradually discontinued. Today the hospital is home of the Middle Tennessee School of Anesthesia.

In 1963 the hospital was turned over to the Southern Union Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, and in the same year ground was broken for a new facility. The name of the facility was changed to Madison Hospital in 1964. It became part of Adventist Health System/Sunbelt Health Care Corporation in 1975. The name was changed to Tennessee Christian Medical Center in 1985. The Comprehensive Therapy Center was completed in 1992. As of 1993 TCMC was licensed for 144 acute-care medical/surgical beds, 98 acute-care behavioral beds, 31 rehabilitation beds, and a 36-bed skilled nursing unit. With the name change of Highland Hospital to Tennessee Christian Medical Center—Portland in 1994, TCMC became TCMC-Nashville. See also Madison Institutions.

Administrators/Presidents: E. A. Sutherland, 1908—1946; T. W. Steen, 1946—1948; W. E. Straw, 1948—1950; W. Amundsen, 1950—1952; A. A. Jaspersen, 1952—1957; W. C. Sandborn, 1957—1961; R. M. Davidson, 1961—1963; H. R. Beckner, 1963—1964; C. N. Rees, 1964—1965; R. Morris, 1965—1973; V. Dortch, 1974—1975; H. Grove, 1975—1977; R. Trimble, 1977—1983; J. Boyle, 1983—1986; W. A. Haupt, 1986; D. L. Jernigan, 1987—1992; M. R. Siepman, 1992— .

Tennessee Christian Medical Center—Portland

TENNESSEE CHRISTIAN MEDICAL CENTER—PORTLAND. A 50-bed rural hospital in Portland, Tennessee.

Tennessee Christian Medical Center—Portland, formerly Highland Hospital, Highland Sanitarium and Hospital, and (originally) Fountain Head Sanitarium, was founded in 1907 by F. F. West, B. N. Mulford, and their wives, with other coworkers. In addition to the health institution, the founders established an educational institution, Highland Academy.

After West and Mulford purchased the site on the Highland Rim near Fountain Head, the group, through great self-sacrifice and with the financial aid received from friends, completed their sanitarium building in 1912. Since hydrotherapy treatments were popular from the beginning, the sanitarium had no trouble keeping its 12 beds filled.

When the first building was destroyed by fire in 1928, it was replaced by a well-equipped 35-bed sanitarium and hospital with a surgical unit. When in 1935 fire destroyed this building also, funds were raised with the help of friends and another building was erected. Because World War II made it increasingly difficult to get help to carry forward the work of the institution on a self-supporting basis, the leaders appealed to the Kentucky-Tennessee Conference to take it over. The transfer was effected in 1945, when both the hospital and the academy became the property of the conference. In 1948 they were placed under separate administrations.

In 1973 the hospital became a part of the Southern Adventist Health and Hospital System, now Adventist Health System/Sunbelt Health Care Corporation, with headquarters in Orlando, Florida.

New hospital facilities opened in 1983.

Administrators/Presidents: W. D. Walton, 1948—1951; A. L. Lynd, 1951—1955; C. M. Crawford, 1955—1957; R. C. Mills, 1957—1959; Teddric Mohr, 1959—1962; Brenton Lee Bullock, 1962—1967; W. C. Sager, 1967—1979; Jerry Medanich, 1979—1988; Judy Silva, 1988—1992; Howard C. Andersen, 1992— .

Tennessee River Conference

TENNESSEE RIVER CONFERENCE. See Kentucky-Tennessee Conference.

Tennessee River Watchman

TENNESSEE RIVER WATCHMAN. See These Times.

Tenney, George Cidus

TENNEY, GEORGE CIDUS (1847—1921). Minister and editor. According to his obituary in the Review and Herald (98:29, Dec. 22, 1921), he was college educated and was ordained to the ministry in the late 1870s. After this he worked in Wisconsin, his home state, and later in North Dakota and Minnesota. In 1887 he went to Australia, where he edited the Bible Echo and served as the first president of the Australian Conference (1888—1892). In 1893 he returned to the United States and joined the staff of the Battle Creek Sanitarium as teacher, chaplain, and editor of the Medical Missionary Magazine. With the exception of five years spent in evangelistic work in Australia (ending about 1903), he continued his association with the sanitarium until his death. From 1895 to 1897 he was coeditor of the Review and Herald with Uriah Smith.

Teologicky Seminar

TEOLOGICKY SEMINAR. See Adventist Bible Seminary.

Testimony

TESTIMONY. A term used by Seventh-day Adventists in two senses: (1) a statement of personal faith or experience given in a testimony meeting—a usage formerly common in churches of various denominations; (2) in Seventh-day Adventist parlance, a communication of counsel and instruction given by Ellen G. White, either orally or in writing, to an individual, to a congregation, or to SDAs in general (a collection of which has been published under the title Testimonies for the Church; see White, Ellen G., Writings of). The term in the latter sense is evidently borrowed from the phrase “testimony of Jesus Christ” (Rev. 12:17) or “testimony of Jesus” (Rev. 19:10). In this latter text the “testimony of Jesus” is said to be the “spirit of prophecy.”

Testimony Meeting

TESTIMONY MEETING. A service, generally part of a midweek prayer meeting (see Services, Church), in which members rise and speak briefly and informally on their personal faith and experience in the Lord.

Tests of Fellowship

TESTS OF FELLOWSHIP. See Church \(local organization\); Church Discipline.

Texas

TEXAS. See Arkansas-Louisiana Conference; Southwest Region Conference; Texas Conference; Texico Conference.

Texas Conference

TEXAS CONFERENCE. A unit of church organization comprising that portion of Texas (except the city of Texarkana) east and south of the counties of Callahan, Concho, Foard, Hardeman, Haskell, Jones, Knox, Runnels, Schleicher, Sutton, and Terrell, and south of the south line of Crockett County. (See also Southwest Region Conference.) Statistics (1993): churches, 193; members, 24,143; church or elementary schools, 34 (6 junior academies); ordained ministers, 75; licensed ministers, 14; Bible instructors, 1; teachers, 137. Headquarters: U.S. 67 at I-35 W., Alvarado, Texas. The conference forms part of the Southwestern Union Conference.

Institutions

Institutions. Adventist Health System/Sunbelt; Beeville Memorial Hospital Association; BIESDA; Burton Adventist Academy; Central Texas Medical Center; Chisholm Trail Academy; Hour of Prophecy; Huguley Memorial Medical Center; Jefferson Adventist Academy; Marion County Hospital Association; Seminars Unlimited; Valley Grande Academy; Valley Grande Manor Nursing Home; Willow Creek Hospital.

Local churches: Alice (English, Spanish), Alvarado (English, Spanish), Arlington (English, Spanish), Atascosa, Athens, Atlanta, Austin (First, South, Spanish), Bastrop, Baytown (LaPorte, Spanish), Beaumont, Beeville, Brazosport, Breckenridge, Brownsville (English, Spanish), Brownwood, Bryan, Burlison, Carrizo Springs (Crystal City Spanish), Cleburne (First), Cleveland, Coleman, Conroe (English, Spanish), Corpus Christi (Annaville, English, Spanish), Corrigan, Corsicana, Dallas (First, Dallas/Fort Worth Korean, Korean, Spanish Love Field, Spanish North, Spanish Oak Cliff, Spanish Pleasant Grove, Spanish West), Del Rio (Spanish), Delta, Denison-Sherman, Denton, DeSoto, Donna (Spanish), Eagle Pass (Spanish), Edinburg (English, Spanish), El Campo, Elgin, Elkhart, Elsa (Spanish), Everman, Falfurrias (Spanish), Fort Worth (First, Handley, Northwest, Spanish, Spanish South), Fredericksburg, Gainesville, Galveston, Garland (English, Spanish), Georgetown, Graham, Granbury, Grand Prairie (English, Spanish), Greenville, Groves Community, Harlingen (English, Spanish), Hemphill, Henderson, Hidalgo (Spanish), Highland Lakes, Hillsboro, Houston (Central, Chinese, Filipino, Gulfhaven, International, Korean, North, Northwest, Spring Creek, West, Spanish Alief, Spanish Bellaire, Spanish Central, Spanish Galena Park, Spanish Heights, Spanish Magnolia Park, Spanish North, Spanish Northwest, Spanish Robertson, Spanish South, Spanish Spring Branch), Huntsville, Hurst (Mid-Cities), Irving (English, Spanish), Jackson, Jefferson (Academy, Central), Joshua, Keene (English, Spanish), Kerrville, Killeen, Kingsville, LaGrange, Laredo (Spanish North, Spanish South), Lewisville (English, Spanish), Linden, Longview, Lufkin, Lyford, Mansfield, Marshall (English, Spanish), McAllen (English, Spanish Central, Spanish North, Spanish South), Marieta (New Hope), Menard, Mercedes (English, Spanish), Mesquite, Mineola, Mineral Wells, Mission (Spanish), Missouri City, Mount Pleasant, Nacogdoches, New Braunfels, Odyssey Harbor, Orange, Paris, Pasadena (Spanish), Pharr (English, Spanish), Richardson, Rio Grande City (Spanish), Robstown (Spanish), Rosenberg (English, Spanish), Rusk (English, Spanish), San Antonio (East Terrell Hills, Greater Randolph, Highland Hills, Korean, Laurel Heights, Scenic Hills, Spanish Bynum, Spanish Durango, Spanish East Gate, Spanish El Eden), San Benito (English, Spanish), San Juan (Spanish), San Marcos, Sanger, Santa Anna, Seguin, Stephenville, Sulphur Springs, Temple, Terrell, Texas City, Tyler (English, Spanish), Uvalde, Vernon, Victoria, Waco (English, Spanish), Waller, Warren, Waxahachie (English, Spanish), Weatherford, Weslaco (English, Spanish), Wichita Falls (First, Southwest), Yancey.

Companies: Bowie, Dallas Portuguese, Del Rio, Freeport Spanish, Frontier Spanish, Killeen Spanish, Laredo English, Luling Spanish, Mount Pleasant Spanish, Olney, San Antonio Spanish Northwest.

History

History. Seventh-day Adventist preaching in Texas dates back to 1875, when three Rust brothers, John E., E. G., and A. B., laypersons, came to Texas from Michigan. Following a series of meetings, which they conducted, a company was organized in Dallas, which met in various homes and buildings in the Dallas-Grand Prairie area. In May 1876 D. M. Canright came to the area to hold meetings. He organized a church of 18 members in Dallas, with E. G. Rust as deacon, and the next day conducted the first SDA baptism in Texas. He estimated that there were “about sixty Sabbathkeepers” scattered across the state. In the same year the General Conference asked R. M. Kilgore to go to Texas in response to a request from Dallas for an evangelist. He went in May 1877, conducted tent meetings, and organized churches in 1878 at Cleburne, Peoria, and Terrell (where A. G. Daniells served as his tentmaster). In the same year James and Ellen White came to Texas, took part in a camp meeting held at Plano in November, and spent several months in the area, mostly at Denison.

Texas Conference Organized. At this camp meeting, the first regular one held, the Texas Conference was organized, with R. M. Kilgore as president. The new conference had four churches and a territory embracing, theoretically, all of Texas, though in the early days the work centered in the north Texas area, where Southwestern Union College now stands. About 1880 Kilgore moved to Peoria, a village about 30 miles (50 kilometers) south of the present college, conducted evangelistic work in a number of places in north Texas (Fairview, Marystown, Plano, and Dresden), and organized a church at Sherman. Earlier John Wilson had begun German work in southwest Texas, and A. W. Jenson had started the Swedish and Danish work in Austin and Lexington. In October 1880 there were 23 Scandinavian SDAs in Texas.

By 1890, through the evangelism of R. M. Kilgore, W. S. Cruzan, and W. S. Hyatt, churches or groups had been organized in McKinney, Black Jack Grove, Clifton, Brushy Knob, Corsicana, Wilmer, Savoy, Cooper, Fairyland, and Ladonia. The conference membership then stood at 425, and there were two ordained ministers and four licentiates.

In 1893 R. W. Roberson moved to San Antonio, and six months later a group of 21 were meeting regularly on the Sabbath. Also, in 1893 the conference purchased 800 acres (325 hectares) of land in Johnson County for a Texas training school (now Southwestern Union College). Smaller tracts of this land were sold to SDA families, and many settled there.

These early settlers attended Sabbath services either at Elm Grove, a country schoolhouse 30 miles (50 kilometers) northwest, or in a dugout east of the present college campus. On Jan. 6, 1894, a church of 60 charter members was organized. The settlement, which the U.S. Post Office Department named “Keene” in 1895, is still primarily an SDA town.

Sabbath schools were begun in a suburb of Fort Worth (1895) by W. N. Hyatt; in San Antonio (1896) by John Lawrence McGee, a self-supporting missionary nurse from Battle Creek; and in Houston (1896). Also, in 1896 the evangelism of J. N. Summerville resulted in the organization of the Marietta church (now New Hope), and soon thereafter in the opening of a day school.

In 1893 a copy of Uriah Smith’s Daniel and the Revelation was sold in a German settlement near Hutto, in central Texas, by a colporteur named Hunter; several German families became SDAs and were organized in October 1895 as a small company, and then in December 1896 as a church, which increased to 34 members the next year. From this German church, 13 members moved in 1903 to Valley View, in north Texas, and with six isolated members in that area organized a church there. Their church building, constructed in 1903, was destroyed by a tornado and fire in 1909 and rebuilt again in 1948. By August 1899 the Texas Conference had 1,000 members. In the terrible Galveston hurricane of 1900, nine members perished.

West Texas Conference Organized. In 1908 the 100 western counties of Texas, with 261 members, were separated from the Texas Conference and became the West Texas Mission. The boundary followed the eastern lines of the counties of Wichita, Archer, Young, Stephens, Eastland, Comanche, Mills, San Saba, Mason, Kimble, Edwards, and Val Verde. The mission was organized in 1909 as the West Texas Conference, with T. W. Field as president. It is now part of the Texico Conference.

North Texas and South Texas Conferences Organized. The Texas Conference, which in the early 1900s covered approximately, although a little less than, the territory of the present Texas Conference, was divided again in 1910. In the division it was reduced to the northeastern part of the state (89 counties), with 21 churches, 1,336 members, 10 church buildings, five ordained ministers, and one licensed minister; and the southern portion, with 257 members, was separated as the South Texas Mission Field. In 1911 the South Texas Mission became the South Texas Conference, organized at San Antonio, with J. I. Taylor as president. The new conference boundary followed the south lines of the counties of Lampasas, Bell, Milam, Robertson, Brazos, Grimes, Montgomery, and Liberty, and the west line of Jefferson County to the Gulf. The Texas Conference in 1911 was named the Northeast Texas Conference (changed shortly to North Texas Conference); W. A. McCutchen was its president, and headquarters were at Keene. During 1912 the North Texas Conference operated seven evangelistic tents, organized seven new churches, and conducted four camp meetings (one for the African-American constituency), and Sabbath schools increased from 30 to 51. Although failure of cotton crops in 1914 forced the North Texas Conference to reduce budgets, that year saw the founding of the Berea Intermediate School (later Jefferson Academy) near Jefferson, in the northeast corner of Texas. With improved conditions, in 1917 the North Texas Conference colporteurs nearly doubled their deliveries over the previous year. Also, in that year the financial goal for foreign missions was reached for the first time, and 200 persons were baptized.

Spanish Evangelism in South Texas. Between 1909 and 1913 W. F. Mayer conducted colporteur work among the Mexicans along the Lower Rio Grande valley. He was hindered on the one hand by Catholic opposition and on the other by the difficulties of travel in a desert country with shifting sand dunes sometimes reaching heights of 50 feet (15 meters). He gave tracts to those unable to pay even a penny or a nickel for a book. By 1916 two Mexican churches had been organized, with a membership of 43. The La Reforma Mexican church in the Lower Rio Grande valley was dedicated in 1923. Fifty-six new Mexican converts that year gave the South Texas Conference the largest number of Mexican members of any conference in the United States. In 1925 nearly half the total number attending the South Texas camp meeting were Mexicans, and by 1930 the Mexican membership reached 200. In 1993 the Texas Conference had 6,716 Spanish-speaking members of various Hispanic backgrounds in 66 congregations, served by 30 pastors.

Subsequent History. During the 1920—1930 decade large-scale citywide evangelistic campaigns were conducted in both the North and the South Texas conferences. In 1921 J. H. Tindall conducted an evangelistic campaign in the city auditorium in Dallas, in which medical work was combined with gospel preaching. Dr. Mary McReynolds gave numerous treatments, and vegetarian meals were served in the auditorium. A three-month training school for 50 evangelistic workers was also operated in connection with the campaign. The combination of medical work with gospel preaching was also used in 1923 by G. R. West, with Toral Seat and two nurses conducting the medical evangelism, in Fort Worth and in Waco; also, by W. E. Barr in Houston and in San Antonio.

The South Texas Conference membership rose from 416 in 1920 to 1,155, with 20 churches, in 1928. In 1922 one out of every 15 members in the conference was actively engaged in colporteur work. By 1928 the North Texas Conference (whose office had been moved from Keene to Dallas in 1924) had a membership of 1,323, with 29 churches.

Texas Conference Reorganized. In 1932 the South Texas and North Texas conferences were recombined to form the Texas Conference, with a total of 2,950 members. G. F. Eichman was elected president, and the conference office was moved to Fort Worth. From 1932 to 1942, 21 new churches were organized and more than 2,600 members were baptized. At the end of the period there were 63 churches and 25 church schools. School enrollment in Texas in all grades rose from 543 in 1932 to 804 in 1935. In 1941 four evangelists were on the air weekly or daily.

Between 1943 and 1951 there were evangelistic campaigns in Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, and Fort Worth, each adding between 100 and 175 members; in addition, 17 new churches and eight new church schools were organized. In 1944 sales of publications totaled $137,000—more than in the whole decade of 1932—1942.

On Jan. 1, 1947, the Southwestern Mission of Seventh-day Adventists was organized, composed of 12 churches and 533 members transferred from the Texas Conference to this newly formed conference for the Black constituency (see Southwest Region Conference). From 1950 to 1957 the Texas Conference had a net gain of nearly 2,000 members.

Welfare and Medical Work. Between 1952 and 1962 activities in the areas of welfare work and civil defense included large civil defense rallies, mass feeding demonstrations, field hospital emergency drills, the establishment of two large clothing, food, and emergency relief depots, usable as emergency hospitals, and the purchase of a large welfare van. In 1963 the conference operated 57 welfare units and 15 welfare centers. The conference has worked in cooperation with the Red Cross and Salvation Army in disasters; for example, during hurricane Carla in 1961 SDA relief vans set up clothing distribution centers in 13 cities, distributed 160 tons (554,000 pieces) of clothing to 100,000 persons, and set up and operated one emergency hospital for 60 patients.

The Texas Conference began to operate its first hospital in 1956 in Santa Anna, and later assumed the operation of several others. These became part of Adventist Health Systems-Sunbelt. In 1963, 60 Adventist physicians and dentists were practicing in the conference.

Recent Developments. In July 1959, under the name Operation Lone Star, conference president B. E. Leach launched an intensive program to advance in every phase of the work. Under this program, by 1963, 450 evangelistic meetings had been held and 2,066 people had joined the church, bringing the conference membership to 8,000. In six years 27 new churches were organized (through 1965), and active evangelism was carried on in 37 unentered regions. Each pastor was appointed an evangelist, and the conference department heads also conducted evangelistic meetings.

Properties and Institutions. A 400-acre (160-hectare) youth campsite of rolling wooded land was purchased in 1953, on which cabins, an assembly hall, and a kitchen were erected, and a lake was provided. Five to six camps are conducted yearly, with attendance in 1962 totaling approximately 375. From 1959 to 1965 the conference had erected 57 buildings of various kinds, worth about $3.5 million, 38 of which were churches, such as those at Keene, Fort Worth, Houston, and Austin. Some of the smaller churches were erected in formerly unentered areas. Two large city junior academy plants were also built. In the same period four new church schools were opened and nine new school plants built. Total school enrollment as of December 1962 stood at 1,311.

In 1961 a $150,000 camp meeting pavilion seating 5,000 was erected, along with other buildings, on a new 13-acre (five-hectare) camp meeting site donated by Southwestern Union College. Gifts and commitments to the Operation Lone Star program totaled $1,323,000, including cash and property, in the first six and a half years after it was inaugurated.

The Texas Conference grew substantially during the tenure of Cyril Miller as president (1974—1985). Membership nearly doubled as a result of an aggressive program of church planting, evangelism, and institutional development. A builder, Harold Bradbury, was employed to help construct 42 church homes for new congregations.

In 1980 Border Institutes of English, SDA (BIESDA) opened on the Mexican Border. During the years up to 1993 more than 110 student missionaries taught English conversation and Bible to more than 18,000 students, baptizing 120 of them.

The Revelation Seminar approach to evangelism has led to many baptisms. Through Seminars Unlimited, established in the late 1970s, the world field is served with Revelation Seminar material produced in many languages.

A 100-acre (40-hectare) youth camp and retreat facility was developed at Nameless Valley Ranch, near Austin, in the 1970s. A new conference headquarters was erected at Alvarado in the 1980s. During this same period Valley Grande Manor, a 500 plus-bed nursing home, was developed.

In 1986 the conference sponsored the first of its many mission teams to Mexico and Belize. This has resulted in more than 1,200 youth and adults volunteering to build churches and conduct cross-culture evangelism.

The late 1980s and early 1990s were marked with continued growth.

Presidents-Texas Conference: R. M. Kilgore, 1878—1885; W. S. Greer, 1885—1887; James W. Gage, 1887—1888?; W. S. Hyatt, 1888—1892; W. S. Greer, 1892—1895; H. W. Decker, 1895—1896; C. McReynolds, 1896—1899; E. T. Russell, 1899—1901; W. A. McCutchen, 1901—1903; N. P. Nelson, 1903—1905; Clarence Santee, 1905—1908; L. W. Terry, 1908—1910; W. A. McCutchen, 1910—1911; North[east]Texas Conference: W. A. McCutchen, 1911—1913; J. I. Taylor, 1913—1916; David Voth, 1916—1921; J. F. Wright, 1921—1925; F. L. Perry, 1925—1926; Roy L. Benton, 1926—1930; F. L. Perry, 1930—1932; South Texas Conference: J. I. Taylor, 1911—1913; J. A. Leland, 1913—1915; E. L. Neff, 1915—1920; R. P. Montgomery, 1920—1926; W. R. Elliott, 1926—1929; F. L. Perry, 1929—1930; G. F. Eichman, 1930—1932; Texas Conference: G. F. Eichman 1932—1936; J. D. Smith, 1936—1938; F. D. Wells, 1938—1943; L. L. McKinley, 1943—1950; N. R. Dower, 1950—1957; R. H. Pierson, 1957—1958; B. E. Leach, 1958—1966; G. C. Dart, 1968—1974; Cyril Miller, 1974—1985; W. R. May, 1985—1988, Don Aalborg, 1988—1989; Robert H. Wood, 1989—1994; L. Stephen Gifford, 1994— .

Texico Conference

TEXICO CONFERENCE. A unit of church organization comprising the territory of New Mexico (except San Juan County) and that portion of Texas north and west of the eastern line of Callahan, Hardeman, Foard, Knox, Haskell, Jones, Taylor, Runnels, Concho, Schleicher, Sutton, and Terrell counties, and north of the south line of Crockett County. (See also Southwest Region Conference.) Statistics (1993): churches, 64; members, 5,009; church or elementary schools, 10; ordained ministers, 23; licensed ministers, 7; teachers, 15. Headquarters: 4909 Canyon Drive, Amarillo, Texas. The conference forms part of the Southwestern Union Conference.

Institutions

Institutions. Sandia View Academy; Sierra Vista Hospital.

Local churches: New Mexico: Alamogordo, Albuquerque (Bilingual, Central Heights, North Valley Spanish, Rio Grande Spanish), Belen, Canon Plaza (Spanish), Carlsbad, Clayton, Clovis, Corrales, Deming (English, Spanish), Dixon (Spanish), Espanola (Airport Bilingual), Gallup, Grants, Hobbs (English, Spanish), Las Cruces (Central, Spanish), Las Vegas (Bilingual), Los Lunas, Lovington, Portales, Raton, Reserve, Roswell (English, Spanish), Ruidoso, Santa Fe (English, Marcy Park), Silver City, Socorro, Taos, Tres Piedras, Truth or Consequences (Fincher Memorial), Tucumcari, Valencia; Texas: Abilene, Amarillo (Olsen Park, Spanish), Big Spring, Borger, Clint (Spanish), Dalhart, El Paso (Central English, Central Meraz Spanish, Five Points Spanish, Montana Spanish, Northeast), Hereford, Littlefield, Lubbock (English, Spanish), Midland (English, Spanish), Odessa (English, Spanish), Pampa, Pecos, Plainview, San Angelo (English, Spanish), Saragosa, Sweetwater, Van Horn.

Companies: New Mexico: Deming; Texas: Brownfield, Marfa, Plainview Spanish, Segundo Barrio Spanish, Sunset Spanish, Tulia.

Sabbath schools (where there are no churches): New Mexico: Magdalena; Texas: Alpine, Kermit, Big Spring Spanish.

Organization

Organization. New Mexico Area. Prior to local area organization, the promotion of Seventh-day Adventist evangelism in the New Mexico area was fostered and officially directed by the Kansas and Colorado conferences, then by the General Conference, and again by the Colorado Conference. At the end of 1907 it was assigned to the Southwestern Union Conference, which organized the area (plus El Paso County in Texas) as the New Mexico Mission, with H. L. Hoover as superintendent, beginning Feb. 1, 1908. The final steps in raising this mission to conference status were taken at the camp meeting in Alamogordo, New Mexico, Aug. 19—29, 1909. The New Mexico Conference continued until December 1916, when it and the West Texas Conference combined to form the Texico Conference.

Texas Area. Beginning as early as 1896, the Panhandle area of Texas (that portion north of the south line of the counties of Deaf Smith, Randall, Armstrong, Donley, and Collingsworth) was worked by ministers of the Oklahoma Conference, and so continued to be worked until 1908, at which time it was made part of the West Texas Mission, which included that part of Texas lying west of the eastern lines of the counties of Wichita, Archer, Young, Stephens, Eastland, Comanche, Mills, San Saba, Mason, Kimble, Edwards, and Val Verde, except the county of El Paso. This combined area became the West Texas Conference, organized at Abilene in September 1909 by 21 delegates representing five organized churches and about 200 members. This status continued until December 1916.

Texico Conference Formed. On Dec. 19, 1916, the New Mexico and West Texas conferences combined to form the Texico Conference, with R. B. Coberly as president. By the end of 1926, five additional Texas counties—Jack, Palo Pinto, Erath, Hamilton, and Lampasas—had been added. By the end of 1926 the Texico Conference area included, according to the 1927 Yearbook, the territory “west of the eastern line [except Lipscomb County] of Hardeman, Foard, Knox, Haskell, Jones, Taylor, Runnels, Concho, and north of the south line of Concho, Green, Irion, Reagan, Upton, Crane, Ward, Reeves, Culbertson, Hudspeth, and El Paso.”

History

History. Beginnings in New Mexico. As the result of an action by the General Conference asking the Kansas Conference to open up the work in New Mexico (later transferred to the Colorado Conference), Smith Sharp, a minister from Kansas, held an evangelistic series in east Las Vegas, New Mexico, during the summer of 1889, assisted part of the time by E. H. Gates, then president of the Colorado Conference. A number of the new converts from these meetings attended the Colorado camp meeting that fall. In 1891 evangelistic meetings and the organization of a Sabbath school were reported at Albuquerque. “The first church organization of Seventh-day Adventists in New Mexico,” early in 1896, was reported by Volney H. Lucas at Catskill (Review and Herald 3:156, Mar. 10, 1896). There followed the Hagerman church (organized May 16, 1896); Farmington (about 1899; it became part of the Colorado Conference in the Central Union Conference when San Juan County was transferred to that organization in 1912); Albuquerque (1903); Roswell and Alamogordo (by 1905). A statistical report for 1908 listed eight churches, with a territory membership of 285; five companies, with 102 members; and 25 isolated members; a total of 412. Elida had 24 members in 1908, and Clovis had a Sabbath school. Clovis had a church in 1911 and was the site of the conference office from 1915 until 1947, when the office was moved to Amarillo, Texas. (Prior to 1915 the conference headquarters had been at Albuquerque.) Churches were established at Lake Arthur (1910), Mesilla Park (1910), Raton (1911), Las Vegas (1911), and Plateau (1909), while New Mexico had its own conference. H. L. Hoover was its first president.

Beginnings in West Texas. Seventh-day Adventist publications were brought into this area (Eastland and Brown counties) by a colporteur as early as 1885 and 1886. N. J. Etheredge, who became one of the early ministers there, learned the SDA teachings from reading the book Daniel and the Revelation, by Uriah Smith. It had been given to him in Mills County by a man who did not care for it. In 1896 G. G. Rupert came as an evangelist to the Panhandle. Henry Woodruff was assigned to this area in 1902. The Roby church was organized in 1898; Madge, 1902; Hamby, 1907; Comanche, 1908; Amarillo, 1909; Plainview, 1909. When the West Texas Mission was set up in 1908, there were three churches in the area, and when it was organized into a conference in 1909, there were five churches, with about 200 members. T. W. Field was chosen its first president. The conference office, located at Hamby at the time the conference was organized, was moved to Amarillo in 1915, and from there to Clovis in 1916, when the West Texas and New Mexico conferences united to become the Texico Conference.

Statistical reports reveal that church schools were conducted regularly in both states from 1908 on an elementary level and intermittently on the secondary level at such places as Hamby and Lubbock.

Spanish Evangelism. Marcial Serna, chosen in 1901 to work among the people of his own tongue, assisted in 1903 in organizing the Albuquerque church, which was then made up of both English-speaking and Spanish-speaking members. In 1908 H. L. Hoover, superintendent of the New Mexico Mission, reported one Spanish church and 30 to 35 Spanish members. J. A. Leland reported that he visited the San Marcial, New Mexico, Spanish church Dec. 10—13, 1908, and worked in El Paso, Texas, at which place a Spanish church was organized in 1915. Among the early evangelists to the Spanish people were A. G. Nelson, G. W. Casebeer, Burt Bray, and F. E. Wilson. At the 1941 camp meeting the Spanish report listed “8 churches, 300 members (20 percent of the constituency), 17 Sabbath schools, 10 churches, 2 church schools, 1 junior academy.” The Spanish-American Seminary at Sandoval, near Albuquerque, was operated by the General Conference from 1942 to 1952. Then it was transferred to the Texico Conference and renamed and operated as Sandia View Academy. Two Spanish camp meetings in 1944 at Reserve and Sandoval had, as reported by R. L. Odom, an attendance of 150 and 200, respectively.

Evangelism Among Blacks and Indians. Work for the Black people of the Texico area was under the direction of the General Conference until 1908, when it was given over “to the several states.” Two Black churches were reported in 1932. Since 1950 this work has been carried on by the Southwest Region Conference.

A mission for the Navajo Indians was conducted at Thoreau, New Mexico, for some years, beginning about 1916, with Orno Follett as director, under supervision of the Southwestern Union Conference. Many Navajos, Isletas, and Zunis live in this area. A special camp meeting for the Navajos in 1935 had an attendance of 75.

Drought conditions, sometimes local and at times somewhat general, caused many church members in the Texico Conference to move to more prosperous areas, thus retarding numerical and financial gains through long years of effort by leaders and members of churches and conferences. However, there was general overall growth in membership as reflected in the following statistics: 1917—22 churches, 504 members; 1925—15 churches, 557 members; 1935—29 churches, 1,104 members; 1960—44 churches, 2,526 members.

Special Projects. During World War II more than 3,000 Seventh-day Adventist service personnel passed through Camp Barkeley, near Abilene, Texas, in their training for the medical corps between 1942 and 1945, reportedly the largest concentration of SDA soldiers in the world. In order to serve these individuals, a service center was conducted in Abilene by camp pastors appointed by the General Conference. Sabbath services were conducted at the center and also at the camp.

For earlier Seventh-day Adventist history of this area, see Texas Conference; Colorado Conference.

Presidents—New Mexico Conference: H. L. Hoover, 1909—1912; V. B. Watts, 1912—1914; R. B. Coberly, 1914—1916; West Texas Conference: T. W. Field, 1909—1913; W. A. McCutchen, 1913; C. J. Buhalts, 1913—1916; Texico Conference: R. B. Coberly, 1916—1917; Halbert M. J. Richards, 1917—1921; L. B. Schick, 1922; W. A. Gosmer, 1922—1923; R. L. Benton, 1923—1926; E. T. Wilson, 1926—1932; R. P. Montgomery, 1932—1938; W. Amundsen, 1938—1940; V. A. LaGrone, 1940—1943; R. R. Bietz, 1943—1946; N. R. Dower, 1946—1950; C. G. Gordon, 1950—1952; M. D. Howard, 1952—1959; G. H. Rustad, 1959—1973; Don Christman, 1973—1977; Don K. Sullivan, 1977—1988; Don Sandstrom, 1988—1991; Ralph Orduno, 1991— .

Textbooks

TEXTBOOKS. During the years they have operated schools, Seventh-day Adventists have produced various textbooks. Between 1854 and 1945, textbooks were prepared by various authors for elementary grades on the following subjects: Bible, geography, grammar, language, English, nature, physiology, and reading. The Bible textbooks and reading textbooks were revised and rewritten several times during this period of time.

Since 1947 the Department of Education of the General Conference has directed the production of textbooks, naming committee members and editors to do the work. By 1965 more than 70 books had been prepared in the following areas of the elementary curriculum: Bible, health science, music, reading, and art. In 1965 plans were laid to restructure and rewrite the Bible series and to write health and science textbooks. Ten years later the projects were completed for grades 1—12. A total of 121 titles were produced during this same decade.

In addition to the several textbooks published in the United States, many have been translated or written and published in other divisions of the world.

Since 1975 the preparation of Seventh-day Adventist textbooks and curriculum materials has been the responsibility of the various divisions. On occasion the General Conference Department of Education has given support to specific significant curriculum projects in addition to coordinating specific international editions of religious studies textbooks.

Thailand

THAILAND. A constitutional monarchy in Southeast Asia, situated at the northern end of the Malay Peninsula. It is bordered on the west by Myanmar, on the northeast and east by Laos and Cambodia, and on the south by the Gulf of Siam and Malaysia. Its area is 198,115 square miles (513,115 square kilometers), and its population (1994) is 59.5 million.

Thailand, known as Siam until 1939, has been independent for many centuries, as its name, signifying “free nation,” testifies. Thais are ethnically related to the Chinese and profess Buddhism, which is the religion of the state. There is a strong Indian influence in their culture, and there are Hindu, Muslim, and Christian minorities. Thai, distantly related to Chinese, is the official language, but English is widely used.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Thailand is a part of the Thailand Mission (which also includes Laos), in the Southeast Asia Union, which in turn is part of the Far Eastern Division. Statistics (1993) for the Thailand Mission: churches, 35; companies, 522; members, 9,335; ordained ministers, 26; licensed ministers, 27; Bible instructors, 13. Thailand Mission headquarters are at Bangkok.

Institutions

Institutions. Adventist Ekamai School and Ekamai International School; Bangkok Adventist Hospital; Chiang Mai Adventist Educational Center; Mission College; Mission Health Food Company; Phuket Adventist Hospital; Thailand Publishing House.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. Beginnings. Seventh-day Adventist teachings were introduced into Thailand late in 1906 or early in 1907, when R. A. Caldwell canvassed in Bangkok for a few weeks (Review and Herald 84:16, Feb. 21, 1907). More than 10 years later colporteurs from the Singapore mission school, working in Bangkok with Chinese books, reported discovering a group of Sabbathkeepers there. This report led to the establishment in 1919 of a permanent mission, with E. L. Longway and Forrest A. Pratt settling with their families at Bangkok. Also, in 1919 Tan Thiam Tsua, who had accepted SDA teachings in China, settled in Thailand.

The early work in Thailand was conducted mostly among the Chinese. By 1921 five converts had been baptized. By 1926 church membership had grown to 88. The first Thai convert was a young man who later became the assistant business manager of the Bangkok Sanitarium and Hospital and who, according to the Outline of Mission Fields (1927), was baptized by Pratt in 1925 (p. 215). Canvassing in the interior of the country was begun in 1924 by national young men. In 1925 two mission schools were opened, one at Bangkok and the other at Ban Pong. Soon after the mission was opened the translation and publication of tracts and magazines was begun. In 1927 a temperance periodical, Chu Chart magazine, was issued. The second mission station was established at Ubol, in east Thailand, in 1930 under the superintendency of R. P. Abel, who traveled there on the first passenger train to reach the city. By 1935 he had opened a mission school staffed by five teachers, whose students, numbering about 150, came from six nationalities. The Ubol station operated the first SDA clinic in Thailand, supervised by a national worker who had received his training in the Thai Army medical corps.

The first mission-owned buildings were a chapel and a school building, constructed at Bangkok in 1932. By the end of 1936 the membership of the mission numbered about 150, including nine Thai workers, two of whom superintended the mission schools. Professional medical work began in 1937 when Ralph F. Waddell, M.D., and his wife opened a small clinic in Bangkok. From this beginning grew the Bangkok Adventist Hospital, the largest SDA medical institution in the Far Eastern Division. It later became the parent institution for smaller clinics in Phuket and Haad Yai. By 1963 these smaller clinics had become self-sustaining hospitals. A dental clinic in Chiangmai was opened in October 1963. M. C. Lamberton, D.D.S., carried on a general dentistry and orthodontic practice. He was assisted part-time by a Thai dentist, Pongsri Mihakit, D.D.S.

Later Developments. The school building at Bangkok was destroyed by fire during World War II and was rebuilt in 1947. The new building housed also the mission office and a small publishing house (which opened in 1949, but was completely destroyed by fire on Mar. 17, 1952). The school continued to operate in the same compound until 1959, when it was joined with an English language school (opened in 1946) on a new suburban campus at Ekamai Road, with Mrs. R. M. Milne as administrator. Funds for purchasing land and building schools were mostly solicited by R. M. Milne and V. L. Kon.

In 1948 a Voice of Prophecy correspondence school was opened in Thailand, with W. A. Martin as director. On Mar. 17, 1960, a ministerial training school was started in Ubon, with Sunti Sorajjakool as principal, and in 1962 it was moved to Bangkok. The first Thai language radio program was broadcast on Jan. 7, 1962, with Sapon Jaiguar as speaker. Helped by a Thirteenth Sabbath Offering overflow, a new office building was completed in March 1963, housing the mission office, a printing plant, Voice of Prophecy office, and a recording studio. In August 1972 the broadcast was back on the air on three stations in Bangkok, Haad Yai, and Phuket, with Sunti Sorajjakool as speaker. Evangelistic work has since been carried on in a strong way among the Thais, Meos, and Karens.

Since 1969 several new schools have been opened in Thailand. A church school was established on the compound of the Phuket Mission Hospital on May 17, 1969, with Mrs. Puangpet Sittichinda as principal. On Jan. 18, 1971, the mission bought land at Maetaeng, Chiangmai, for the Hilltribe Training Center, adult education, and farming, with Jon Dybdahl as director. In 1970 a piece of land was purchased near the Haad Yai Mission Hospital for a church school site. The Haad Yai church school was opened on May 17, 1971, and that same year an English language school was started in Haad Yai. Both schools were initiated by Dr. and Mrs. Roger Van Arsdell. Dr. Van Arsdell was then the medical director of the Haad Yai Mission Hospital. On May 17, 1974, one of the great needs in Thailand was fulfilled, as the Thailand Adventist Academy was opened, with an enrollment of 31 students for grades 8—10. Chalaw Artamapadung was appointed principal and manager. The school was built next to the campus of the Hilltribe Training Center, and has land for farming and gardening. The two institutions merged in 1980 to become Thailand Adventist Educational Center. In 1986 the name was changed to Chiang Mai Adventist Educational Center.

Thailand Mission

THAILAND MISSION. See Far Eastern Division; Thailand.

Thailand Publishing House

THAILAND PUBLISHING HOUSE. A publishing house in operation at Bangkok since 1963, providing religious, health, and character development books and magazines for the literature ministry work in Thailand. In 1993 the house was in its thirtieth year of operation and employed 16 workers.

Managers: E. A. Pender, 1963—1967; R. A. Sheldon, 1967—1970; A. B. Timple, 1970—1977; E. M. Timple, 1977—1983; Johnny Rueh, 1983—1989; S. S. Agdon, 1989— .

Thailand Training School

THAILAND TRAINING SCHOOL. A coeducational boarding school on the secondary level operated in Bangkok, Thailand, by the Thailand Mission, offering a two-year course to train ministerial workers. The school opened at Ubol on May 17, 1960, in part of the Ubol Mission School building, with 14 students and a faculty of three. Sunti Sorajjakool was appointed principal, and P. G. Wick and his wife assisted him on the faculty. Classes were taught in religion, evangelism, music, and related subjects.

On Mar. 18, 1962, from the two-year course offered, 12 students were graduated, 10 of whom (nine young men and one young woman Bible instructor) were employed by the mission. In 1962 the school was moved to Klongtan, Bangkok, to its own building on newly purchased mission property. However, it was planned to move it later when suitable land could be found in a rural area.

Closed temporarily because of financial reasons, the school reopened in 1968 with an enrollment of seven. Three Meo young men who were in the graduating class of March 1970 were sent to work for their own tribe. As a result, scores of Meos were baptized and many young Meos have been inspired to take ministerial training.

In 1971 the school was closed again because of a shortage of students. It reopened in 1973, with seven students. In 1977 the school moved to the campus of Thailand Adventist Academy in Chiang Mai, north Thailand, and finally in 1989 found a permanent home as the Theology Department of the new Muak Lek campus of Mission College.

Principals: Sunti Sorajjakool, 1960—1964, 1968—1971; Rangsit Itsaringkarn, 1973—1976; W. S. Bassham, 1977—1983; Siroj Sorajjakool, 1988—1992.

Thayer, Jennie

THAYER, JENNIE (1853—1940). Editor and departmental secretary. She was born into a family of pioneer Seventh-day Adventists in Massachusetts and taught school in her native area for several years. After studying at Battle Creek College for two years, she began her service for the church as secretary-treasurer of the Michigan Tract and Missionary Society and secretary of the state Health and Temperance Association (1879—1882).

Later she went to England to help J. N. Loughborough pioneer the work there, which involved learning to set type and reading proofs of the British supplement to the American Signs of the Times. In 1888 she returned to her homeland and stayed in South Lancaster for two years, then joined the International Tract Society as corresponding secretary. Illness caused her retirement temporarily, but in 1902 she returned to service for another eight years and served as editor of the newly founded Atlantic Union Gleaner. During the latter part of this period she served also as secretary-treasurer and auditor of the Atlantic Union Conference and was treasurer of the South Lancaster church. In 1936 she suffered a stroke that in time rendered her almost helpless.

Theater

THEATER. See Recreation and Amusements.

The Dell Residential Care Home

THE DELL RESIDENTIAL CARE HOME. See Dell.

Theological Academy

THEOLOGICAL ACADEMY. A coeducational institution established in 1990 and located in Budapest, Hungary. In 1993 the total enrollment was 18.

Principals: Jeno Szigeti, 1990— .

Theological Seminary, Seventh-day Adventist

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST. See Andrews University.

Theologisch Seminarie Oudzandbergen

THEOLOGISCH SEMINARIE OUDZANDBERGEN. See Netherlands Junior College and Seminary.

Theologische Hochschule Friedensau

THEOLOGISCHE HOCHSCHULE FRIEDENSAU. See Friedensau Theological Graduate School.

These Times

THESE TIMES (1891—1984). A former evangelistic journal circulated chiefly in the eastern half of North America. It contained 36 pages each issue and was printed at the Southern Publishing Association in Nashville, Tennessee, but originated as the Southern Agent 10 years before the publishing house itself was founded. The first number, a four-page mimeographed colporteur newsletter, was issued on Dec. 1, 1891, at the Atlanta, Georgia, branch of the Seventh-day Adventist Publishing Association (the Review and Herald) of Battle Creek, Michigan. Publication was continuous, under several titles, except for two temporary gaps in the 1890s (caused by the burning of the Atlanta branch in 1895 and by lack of money in 1897—1898). While the paper was being published as the Southern Review in Atlanta, two other journals were being printed in Nashville: in 1900 the Tennessee River Conference began publishing the Tennessee River Watchman, often called simply The Watchman; then in January 1901 James Edson White's new Gospel Herald Publishing Company began to issue volume 3 of the Gospel Herald (transferred from Battle Creek, Michigan; published earlier in Mississippi).

After the General Conference session of April 1901, at which the Southern Union Conference was organized, the Atlanta branch and J. E. White's Herald Publishing Company at Nashville were combined to form the Southern Publishing Association, which was incorporated on June 4, 1901, at Nashville.

The Southern Review, formerly issued by the Atlanta branch, was brought into the SPA on July 23, 1901, as "the church organ of the Southern Union Conference." On Oct. 2, 1901, the Tennessee River Watchman was combined with the Southern Review to form the Southern Watchman, with the purpose "to unify and strengthen the work in the whole Southern Field." For a time the SPA continued the Gospel Herald—originally the organ of the Southern Missionary Society, promoting the mission work among Blacks, but since 1901 issued with contents of a more general evangelistic character, with mission news confined to a supplement. Then in 1903 the Gospel Herald was absorbed by the Southern Watchman. Ellen White wrote in 1904: "The Watchman is to have a place in the field at large. It bears the message of truth as verily as do the Review and the Signs of the Times. . . . Its field is wherever subscribers can be found for it" (CW 136).

Another time she wrote: "The Southern Watchman is an excellent paper, and one way in which you can help is by getting subscriptions for it. I urge our church members to take this paper, and to ask others to take it. . . . Are there not children who will try to get subscribers for the Watchman?" (ibid. 114).

The Watchman (the title was officially shortened in 1905) devoted less space to church news, and when the Southern Union Conference established Report of Progress as its church organ in July 1907, the place of The Watchman as an evangelistic journal was established.

The Watchman, which had been a weekly, changed to monthly publication, announcing that in January 1909 it would graduate "into a higher class of journalism—that of the monthly magazine." The word "magazine" was added officially in January 1917. Through World War I, the Great Depression, and World War II, The Watchman Magazine continued as a prophetic voice of the Seventh-day Adventist Church.

In 1917 began the printing of a special number of The Watchman Magazine as the Ingathering magazine. Later, as These Times, the magazine published two extra issues a year: the regular Ingathering magazine and the Ingathering caroling leaflet.

January 1946 saw a new name for The Watchman. To avoid confusion with a publication by the Jehovah's Witnesses bearing a somewhat similar name, the Adventist journal took the name Our Times. However, when it was discovered that this was the name of another periodical, it became in May 1951 These Times.

In 1952 These Times was given the Award of Merit in Washington, D.C., at the convention of the Associated Church Press.

In January 1961 a new feature was introduced simultaneously in These Times and the Message magazine—a series of four-page center inserts covering the basic truths of the last gospel message. The first series, called Messages for These Times, consisted of 24 articles written by SDA leaders. By 1963 more than 7 million of these had been sold. A second series of 12, entitled A Faith for Today, was written by TV pastor W. A. Fagal. This was followed by a third series of 24, called Hope for These Times, written by 24 different church leaders.

Three more series followed—Truth for These Times, Messages of Faith, and Emphasis Eternity—making a total center-spread printing of 20 million by 1975.

In 1952, 1969, and 1971—1974, These Times received awards for excellence from the Associated Church Press. In 1975 the magazine received three gold awards and six silver awards for excellence in design at the Nashville Art Directors' Show.

In 1970 These Times began a series of special issues, each devoted to one topic: "God's Preview of the Future" (Daniel), 1970; "The Revelation of Jesus Christ" (Revelation), 1971; "How Life Began" (Creation), 1971; "Good Health," 1971; "Seventh-day Adventists," 1972; "The Invitation" (Sabbath), 1973; "The Bible," 1974; "Jesus and the Land He Lived In," 1974; and "Jesus Is Coming," 1975.

These Times produced four 24-page supplements in four colors: "Enlist in the War Against Drugs," 1971; "How to Stop Smoking Without Gaining Weight," 1972; "Enlist in the War Against Alcohol," 1974; and "Enlist in the War Against VD," 1974.

In 1975 These Times produced Special Series Tracts—pocket-sized tracts for varied situations, not only doctrinal, but oriented to special calendar events.

In many ways the 1970s were an "Indian summer" for These Times. Leadership, format, and circulation all remained stable. Awards from organizations such as the Associated Church Press as well as numerous articles reprinted in Reader's Digest all testified to the great respect and affection in which the magazine was held.

But the 1980s brought change. With the merger of the Southern Publishing Association with the Review and Herald Publishing Association, These Times had to leave Nashville, moving first to Washington, D.C., in 1981, and then to Hagerstown, Maryland, in 1983.

While its editorial offices were moving north, however, the circulation of the magazine was heading south, with circulation dropping from 218,000 in 1980 to 125,000 in 1984. Economic recession and changing demographics played a part in this. There also was the problem of price: a 12-month subscription that had cost $6 in 1970 cost $12 in 1980 and $18.95 in 1984.

As a result, the General Conference decided to merge These Times with Signs of the Times. While the Review and Herald Publishing Association retained the name for use in Ingathering brochures, These Times ended publication as an independent monthly with its March 1984 issue.

Editors: A. F. Harrison; C. F. Curtis; C. N. Woodward; N. W. Allee (Southern Review, 1890s); C. P. Bollman, 1901—1902; G. I. Butler, 1902—1906; L. A. Smith, 1906—1918; A. W. Spalding, 1918—1922; L. E. Froom, 1922—1925; R. B. Thurber, 1925—1935; J. E. Shultz, 1935—1942; Frank A. Coffin (acting), 1942—1943; R. L. Odom, 1943—1946; Stanley C. Harris, 1946—1950; R. E. Finney, Jr., 1950—1957; Kenneth J. Holland, 1957—1984.

These Times (Braille)

THESE TIMES (Braille). See Christian Record Services, Inc.

Theunissen, Daniel C.

THEUNISSEN, DANIEL C. (1873—1956). The first Coloured worker in South Africa, born at Somerset West, Cape province. As the son of a casual laborer on the farms of Europeans living around Somerset West, Daniel, or Dannie as he was called all through his life, early learned to carry his share of home responsibilities. When only 8 years of age, returning with a load of firewood, he heard his mother asking God to make her son a minister. Dannie never forgot that prayer.

Three years later, when his mother died, Dannie was sent to work around Kimberley. He learned to care for horses on the farm of Pieter Wessels, who talked to him about the Sabbath, but the lad made no decision to keep it at that time. Returning to the Cape, he entered the employ of A. T. Robinson, the conference president, whose young son Dores struck up a lifelong friendship with the lad. It was Dores' discussion of the Seventh-day Adventist teachings that led Dannie to belief and baptism.

During the years following, he worked in various institutions around the Cape. For a time he looked after the coach and horses of Dr. George Thomason, the medical director of Cape Sanitarium. Even though still young, his heart burned with a desire to share his faith with his own people. On Sunday afternoons he walked or rode the streetcars to Salt River, where he spoke in the marketplace. A number became interested and met in a small hall on Sabbath mornings. This became the nucleus of the first SDA Coloured church in South Africa. Young Theunissen faithfully attended a Bible training school held on Breda Street, Cape Town, to prepare himself for wider service among his people. In 1911 he was ordained.

From then on Theunissen gave his entire time to evangelism, gathering together small companies in Goodwood, Parow, and Worcester. Not infrequently he would visit the Salt River church building alone and move from one pew to another, praying specifically for the church members, whose needs and problems he knew so well. For many years he was the only Coloured Seventh-day Adventist worker in South Africa.

He married Kirsten Sutherland, from the island of St. Helena. Their son Gold became an ordained minister to carry on his father's work.

After attending the 1930 General Conference session in San Francisco, Theunissen never ceased to tell of his thrill at meeting Seventh-day Adventists from all over the world. After retirement he continued to meet with his churches and preached until after he had passed his eightieth birthday. Before his death he saw rapid expansion of the work that he had so humbly begun. His funeral was held at the Good Hope Training School, an institution he had done much to promote through the years.

Thiel, Leo Francis

THIEL, LEO FRANCIS (1888—1965). Educator, administrator, editor. He was born in South Dakota and became a Seventh-day Adventist as a youth. He graduated from Union College in 1911 as president of his class. For the next four years he was professor of English at his alma mater, then was asked to serve as president of Southern Junior College. In succeeding years he also served as president of Union and Oakwood colleges.

He made a major contribution to the literature of the church while serving as book editor at the Southern Publishing Association. The book Drama of the Ages was one of his crowning editorial achievements. Because of ill health he retired from active service in 1952.

Third Angel's Message

THIRD ANGEL'S MESSAGE. See Three Angels' Messages.

Thirteenth Sabbath

THIRTEENTH SABBATH. A term designating the last Sabbath of each quarter of the year; a day marked generally by a special program in the Sabbath school, especially in the children's divisions. On this Sabbath, in all divisions, a Thirteenth Sabbath Offering is given for missions, larger than the regular mission offerings given on the other 12 Sabbaths of the quarter (see Sabbath School Offerings).

Thirteenth Sabbath Special Projects Offering

THIRTEENTH SABBATH SPECIAL PROJECTS OFFERING. A part of a special Sabbath school offering given on the last Sabbath (the thirteenth) of each quarter of the year for specific, designated projects in various parts of the world.

The idea of a special offering on this Sabbath originated in the first quarter of 1912, when the General Conference selected the work in the “cities of India,” a field that needed an appropriation of $10,000, and asked the Sabbath schools to reach that amount in an especially generous offering on the thirteenth Sabbath of that quarter, with the understanding that the field could have the entire offering. Only $7,674.33 was raised. The plan was continued, and the offering for the second quarter (for a mission in Africa) was $12,680.64.

In 1914 Thirteenth Sabbath Offering envelopes were introduced. These were discontinued in 1964 following Autumn Council action. In 1921 many Sabbath schools in North America began to promote the thirteenth Sabbath as “a double dollar day.”

At first the entire Thirteenth Sabbath Offering was given to the specific mission field, and usually a goal equal to the entire need of that field for a year was established. In the fourth quarter of 1918 a new plan was tried. The Sabbath schools were asked to raise a part of an appropriation to a specific field, with the understanding that everything given above their goal would be added to the appropriation for that project. For several years afterward both the new and the old methods of disbursing the offering were used. In 1928 the Autumn Council of the General Conference Committee voted that the overflow be divided between the specific project and the funds for new work elsewhere. By 1929 the Thirteenth Sabbath Offering overflow averaged $20,000 a quarter.

During the 1920s and early 1930s there were several years when there were no overflows over the goal for the offering. Subsequently, in the 1933 Autumn Council a plan was voted that would guarantee an overflow to the selected field each quarter. That field was to receive an “overflow” of $1,000 for the first $60,000 raised in offerings on the thirteenth Sabbath and, in addition, 10 percent of all above that amount.

In 1936 the plan was further revised to make the overflow equivalent to $2,000 of $60,000 and 10 percent of all given above $60,000. In 1961 the plan was revised to make the overflow the equivalent of 20 percent of all above $50,000.

The Autumn Council in 1971 revised the plan so that 25 percent of the total Thirteenth Sabbath Offering received is set aside for the special projects, and the remaining 75 percent is included with the regular mission funds.

Under these plans the donations for the Thirteenth Sabbath Offering has steadily increased. As of 1992 the annual Thirteenth Sabbath Special Projects Offering amounted to $1,892,589.83.

The offering is appropriated to the divisions on a rotating basis. Each division committee is responsible for selecting its own projects, usually at a time when all the unions within its territory are represented.

Thiruvella Adventist High School

THIRUVELLA ADVENTIST HIGH SCHOOL. See Seventh-day Adventist Higher Secondary School \(Thiruvella\).

Thòi-Triù ãn-Quán

THÒI-TRÌU ãN-QUÁN. See Vietnam Adventist Publishing House.

Thomann, Eduardo Werner

THOMANN, EDUARDO WERNER (1874—1955). One of the earliest Seventh-day Adventists in Chile, pioneer missionary in Bolivia and Peru, editor. He was born in Switzerland and came to Chile in 1885. Since his family was poor, he received only an elementary education before he was apprenticed to a cabinetmaker. Later he learned wood carving. As a young man he joined the Presbyterian Church and developed into a strong youth leader, serving as secretary and teacher in the Sunday school.

When the first SDA colporteurs in Chile, T. H. Davis and F. W. Bishop, came to Santiago in 1894, Thomann's younger brother, Victor, recognized them on the street as the men he had seen in a dream sometime previously and accosted them. This meeting led to Bible studies, which the colporteurs, who knew little Spanish, presented in English. As a result of these studies and of their personal study of SDA tracts and the Bible, the two brothers accepted the Seventh-day Adventist faith about 1896. Eduardo Thomann became the leader of the group in Santiago, and in the absence of the pastor took charge of the meetings.

Fired with enthusiasm and a desire to spread the newfound faith, the Thomann brothers distributed tracts until they had only one pair of shoes between them, and then they took turns in visiting the people. Since SDA publications in Spanish were few, Thomann decided to do his own translating and publishing. Learning English and acquiring a hectograph, he undertook as his first project the translation and duplication of Bible Readings for the Home Circle. Soon after that the mission bought a hand press and Thomann managed a small publishing house in Valparaiso. He became assistant editor and later editor of Las Señales de los Tiempos (begun in 1900 by G. H. Baber), and later began the church paper Revista Adventista, in which he printed his translation of Early Writings. He served not only as compositor, pressman, and circulation manager but as salesman as well, often making trips through Chile, Bolivia, and Peru.

Thomann was ordained in 1904. In 1906 he married Flora Westphal. A year later he volunteered to begin SDA work in the highlands of Peru and Bolivia, and for some time was the only SDA worker in the Bolivian Mission. In 1909 he returned to Chile, and in 1910, when the editorial offices of the paper Las Señales de los Tiempos were transferred to Argentina, he moved there. He edited and preached until his retirement sometime in the early 1930s. After his first wife died in 1921, he married Rosa Hoeffft. The last part of his retirement was spent in California in the United States.

Thomas, Edward Duraiswamy

THOMAS, EDWARD DURAISWAMY (1888—1952). The first national Seventh-day Adventist minister in the Southern Asia Division to be ordained (1917); teacher, translator, editor, evangelist, and conference administrator. He was born at Nazareth, Tinnevely District, south India, into a family of Tamil Indian Christians. He attended a Church of England school and first met SDAs when he served as language teacher and interpreter to J. S. James, a pioneer SDA missionary to south India. As he translated Bible studies he became interested in, and finally accepted, SDA beliefs, and was baptized in 1910. He joined J. S. James in building the mission station and school, later teaching and serving as principal of the Tamil Mission School. In 1919 when the Tamil Mission was organized, he became its superintendent. Later he served as assistant principal and business manager of the South India Training School (1928—1932) and for a time concurrently as home missionary secretary of the South India Union (1931—1932). In 1933 he joined the staff of the Southern Asia Division and served as Sabbath school secretary and assistant educational secretary (1933—1935), home missionary secretary (1936—1950), field secretary (1946—1952), and temperance secretary (1952). At different periods he was acting president of the Western India, South India, and Northwestern India unions. For 20 years, beginning in 1922, he edited the Tamil Signs of the Times and Herald of Health, and for some time the Tamil Messenger as well. His death was caused by heart attacks that struck him while he attended annual meetings in northwestern India in 1952.

E. D. Thomas Memorial Higher Secondary School

E. D. THOMAS MEMORIAL HIGHER SECONDARY SCHOOL. A coeducational, government-accredited boarding school on the senior higher secondary level, operated by the South India Union of the Southern Asia Division at Kudikadu, Madras state, India, seven miles (11 kilometers) east of Thanjavur (Tanjore). It is named in honor of E. D. Thomas, the pioneer teacher in southern India and the first ordained Tamil Seventh-day Adventist minister.

The school was established in 1953, when overcrowding of the facilities of, and the need for more industries in, the James Secondary Boarding School (now the James Memorial Higher Secondary School) dictated the need for the transfer of the high school grades to another campus.

The present site, a 55-acre (22-hectare) plot of land that is watered by an irrigation canal from the Mettur Dam, was purchased in 1951, and construction was begun under the supervision of G. Gurubatham. By 1953, when the move was made, an administration and classroom building, two dormitories, a principal's bungalow, and four teachers' quarters were completed, and later a rice mill and a rice-boiling unit were added. Thirty-five acres (14 hectares) of land were set aside for rice cultivation. In recent years cash crops such as sugarcane, bananas, and nuts have been cultivated. A printing press produces literature and Sabbath school quarterlies for the union. There also is a dairy farm with 15 cattle. Students attend from all parts of the division.

Principals: E. L. Rollins, 1953—1954; I. R. Thomas, 1954—1957; A. M. Job, 1957—1960; M. D. Kodan, 1960—1961; A. M. Job, 1961—1963; Manickam Dhasan, 1963—1967; Y. G. Thomas, 1967—1968; E. S. James, 1968—1972; S. Abiah, 1972—1973; Y. J. Samraj, 1973—1976; M. Thavesmony, 1976—1978; V. Joseph, 1978—1983; Henry Theodre, 1983—1984; Jeyabharathen, 1984—1985; Paulraj Isaiah, 1985—1991; S. Sundaram, 1991— .

Thomason, George W.

THOMASON, GEORGE W. (1872—1947). Physician, administrator. He was a member of the first class of the American Medical Missionary College and a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College (1899). He taught at the former institution and was assistant surgeon at the Battle Creek Sanitarium. For seven years, beginning in 1904, he served as the medical director of the Cape Sanitarium, South Africa, and then, on returning to the United States, he was appointed secretary of the General Conference Medical Department and later superintendent of the St. Helena Sanitarium in California.

In 1914 he began practice in Glendale, and until his death he served as professor of surgery and head of the Department of Surgery at the College of Medical Evangelists (Loma Linda University) and chief of the surgical staff of the White Memorial Hospital from its opening. For many years he served as chair of the surgical staff at the Los Angeles County Hospital, and for a number of years he was chair of the Board of Medical Examiners of the state of California.

Thompson, Charles

THOMPSON, CHARLES (1868—1946). Evangelist, administrator. He married Matilda Dillman in 1888 and shortly afterward became a Seventh-day Adventist. He served in the ministry for some 45 years as president of the Kansas Conference (1907—1909) and the Southeastern Union Conference (1909—1912), and as assistant treasurer of the General Conference (1920—1922), president of the South American Division (1922—1923), and president of the Northern Union Conference (1912—1919, 1924—1932).

Thompson, George B.

THOMPSON, GEORGE B. (1862—1930). Administrator. On becoming a Seventh-day Adventist in 1885, he attended Battle Creek College for one year, taught public school for two years, and began his ministerial work in Illinois in 1891. Ordained in 1893, he served in South Africa (1893—1896), then was president of the West Virginia (1897—1898), New York (1898—1903), and Ontario conferences (1903—1904). In 1904 he became secretary of the General Conference Sabbath School Department and in 1912 general secretary for the North American Division, then field secretary for the General Conference (1918—1926), during which time he traveled extensively in Europe and the Far East. He wrote for denominational journals and was author of The Ministry of the Spirit, Soul Winning, and In His Name.

Thousand, Two Hundred, and Threescore Days

THOUSAND, TWO HUNDRED, AND THREESCORE DAYS (1260 years). See Daniel, Interpretation of; Revelation, Interpretation of.

Three and a Half Times

THREE AND A HALF TIMES. See Daniel, Interpretation of; Revelation, Interpretation of.

Three Angels and the Crescent, The THREE ANGELS AND THE CRESCENT, THE. See Seventh-day Adventist Global Centre for Islamic Studies, The.

Three Angels' Messages

THREE ANGELS' MESSAGES. The prophetic messages recorded in Rev. 14:6—11, and there represented as being proclaimed by three angels flying in midheaven. In their context these messages constitute God's last appeal to the world to accept salvation in Christ and to prepare for His imminent advent, which is pictured symbolically in the verses that follow.

The first angel's message (Rev. 14:6, 7) is basically a proclamation of "the everlasting gospel" of salvation in Jesus Christ at the time "the hour of his judgment is come." It is a last-day appeal to "fear God, and give glory to him" and to "worship him," in order to avoid condemnation in the impending judgment. A corollary reason is given for worshiping God—He "made heaven and earth," including human beings. God thus has a twofold jurisdiction over humanity—as Creator and, by virtue of that fact, as Judge.

The second angel's message (Rev. 14:8) consists of a solemn announcement that mystical "Babylon is fallen." Babylon's fall is said to consist in the fact that "she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." She seduced the nations of the earth. In Rev. 17 mystical Babylon is cast in the symbolic role of a harlot who oppresses the people and makes them "drunk with the wine of her fornication" (vs. 1, 2). She collaborates with the "scarlet coloured beast" and "the kings of the earth" in destroying the saints. She makes war against "the Lamb," but "the Lamb" defeats Babylon and "the kings of the earth," and Babylon is judged and annihilated.

The announcement of Babylon's fall is repeated in Rev. 18, where her fall is said to be the result of her "sins" and "iniquities"—her illicit relations with the kings of the earth and her causing all nations to drink of "the wine of the wrath of her fornication." Because of this fall, God summons His people to "come out of her" in order to avoid complicity in her sins and a share in the judgments, or "plagues," to be meted out to her (vs. 1—4). The "judgment of the great whore" because of her fall (Rev. 17 and 18) closely links the fall of Babylon, announced by the second angel, with the arrival of the hour of God's judgment, announced by the first angel: Mystical Babylon has fallen, and God announces that the hour of her judgment has come as a warning to those of His people still in Babylon to come out and separate themselves from her sins and thus escape her judgment.

The third angel (Rev. 14:9—11) announces the outpouring of unmitigated divine wrath—that is, wrath not tempered with mercy—upon those who worship the beast and its image and who receive its mark. This wrath is said to consist of torment "with fire and brimstone." Those who heed the three messages and refuse to worship the beast and its image and to accept its mark are referred to as "saints"; those who reject these messages, worship the beast and the image, and accept the mark suffer the seven last plagues (Rev. 14:12; 15:2; 16:2); they are said to be "drunk with the wine" of Babylon's "fornication" (Rev. 17:2).

The three angels are represented as flying in midheaven and proclaiming their message to every nation and tongue (Rev. 14:6). These three messages constitute God's last invitation to all to accept the everlasting gospel and His final warning against the wine of Babylon and the judgments soon to be visited upon Babylon. Immediately following the proclamation of these messages, the judgments of God fall upon Babylon and upon all who have identified their fortunes with hers, and Christ comes in the clouds of heaven.

In post-Reformation times these three angels were occasionally interpreted as representing certain Reformers or pre- or post-Reformation preachers, but in the “Advent awakening”—the great surge of interest in the Second Advent in the early nineteenth century—there was widespread contemporary application of these symbols. Many of the British expositors of prophecy saw the first angel fulfilled in the new movements for the worldwide spread of the gospel (Bible and mission societies), and especially in their own proclamation of the nearness of the Advent—the “hour of his judgment.” Some included the second and third messages, but others considered these still future.

In America the people who called themselves Adventists, and who were called Millerites by others, regarded themselves as giving the message of the first angel—“The hour of his judgment is come.” Some of them declared that they were sounding the second message, “Babylon is fallen,” in 1844, at the time when many of them left or were expelled from the churches that were denouncing them. The Adventist pioneers believed that the Millerites and others had given the first two angels’ messages, but that they themselves were giving the third.

James White summarized the three stages thus: The first angel’s message was the proclamation, to the church and to the world, to gather out a people prepared for the near Second Advent. When the churches in general shut their doors to this message, the way was prepared for the second—Babylon is fallen—and the call to “come out.” (Most of the Millerite leaders did not approve this; but even Himes, who opposed it, came to the point of writing that whatever might be the disagreement about what constituted Babylon, the believers should separate from churches that rejected the message of the Advent.) White noted that the agitation concerning the Sabbath came immediately after this second message, which “called us out . . . where we are now free to think and act for ourselves in the fear of God” (Present Truth 1:68, April 1850; see pp. 65—69).

With the third angel’s warning against the worship of the beast and his image, and the characterization of the last-day “saints” as those who “keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus” (Rev. 14:12) as opposed to the mark of the beast, the SDA pioneers linked the fourth commandment, the Sabbath. Joseph Bates, in the 1847 edition of his booklet The Seventh Day Sabbath (p. 59), made this identification of the third angel’s message, the final message. James White urged that “we must seek a full and free pardon of all our transgressions and errors, through the atonement of Jesus Christ, now while he pleads his blood before the Father” (Present Truth 1:69, April 1850).

As the Seventh-day Adventist teaching developed, the third angel’s message came to be taught as not only climaxing but also including the threefold message. The SDA mission to the world is to give the everlasting gospel to “every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,” calling them to worship God as the Creator, for the hour of His judgment is come (now, in the sense of the investigative judgment); to come out of the Babylon of confusion and false systems; and, in the final test, to stand firm against the worship of the beast and on the full Christian platform of “the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus” (Rev. 14:12). See also Babylon, Symbolic; Investigative Judgment; Judgment; Latter Rain; Little

Time of Trouble; Loud Cry; Mark of the Beast; One Hundred and Forty-four Thousand; Plagues, Seven Last; Probation; Seal of God; “Shaking Time”; Sunday Laws.

Thunderbird Adventist Academy

THUNDERBIRD ADVENTIST ACADEMY. A coeducational boarding school on the senior high school level, operated on 72 acres (30 hectares) of land near Scottsdale, Arizona, by the Arizona Conference.

Seventh-day Adventist education began in the Phoenix area in 1899, 12 years after the organization of the first church there, with the operation of a church school in a room connected with the church at Tenth and Pierce streets. The first teacher was Martha Neilsen, and the initial enrollment about 15. The church school developed into an intermediate school in 1908, when Arizona Intermediate School was founded. In 1913 Phoenix Academy was announced. In the 1915 Yearbook it was called Phoenix Intermediate School, and after 1919 the Yearbook lists it as Arizona Intermediate Academy.

As the need for secondary education developed, six acres (two hectares) of land northeast of what was then the city limits of Phoenix were purchased and construction was begun. North Hall and South Hall (the boys' and girls' dormitories) were erected in 1920, and the church school building was moved onto the new campus. The planners of the new school, called Arizona Academy, were A. R. Sandborn, president of the Arizona Conference, and Ernest Bond, secretary of the Spanish work in the Southwest.

It was necessary at first to hold some of the academy classes in the basement of the boys' dormitory and the remainder in the basement of the girls' dormitory, which also housed the cafeteria. The enrollment in 1920—1921 was 21; the next year it was 30.

A Spanish American school for the training of young Mexican workers was established at the same time in conjunction with the Arizona Academy, with one principal supervising both faculties. The Spanish American Training School was discontinued in 1933.

A chapel and administrative offices were built about 1925. In 1945 an administration building, housing the library and the classrooms for the academy, was added to the original chapel building. A four-room elementary school building of masonry construction replaced the original church school building, which was converted in 1949 into a dining hall with a kitchen and bakery.

Problems arose when Arizona Academy became engulfed as the city limits expanded and wheat fields gave way to residential areas, with a large shopping center within two blocks of the school.

In 1953, however, a government air base, known as Thunderbird Field Number 2, eight miles (12 kilometers) north of the town of Scottsdale, was made available for educational purposes, and the Arizona Conference voted to relocate Arizona Academy at this new site. The base comprised several semipermanent buildings and a tract of 720 acres (300 hectares). Remodeling was begun immediately, and the classroom building, cafeteria, chapel, and renovated dormitories were put into use in September 1953. The name of the school was changed to Thunderbird Academy on Jan. 5, 1954. On May 22, 1973, the board voted to officially change the name to Thunderbird Adventist Academy.

All the original buildings of the central campus complex have been replaced with attractive block construction buildings with tile roofs.

Thunderbird Academy operates a fully accredited secondary academic curriculum, including an aviation program and work experience education. The academy owns two major campus industries that provide work experience for students: Thunderbird Furniture and Thunderbird Packaging.

Directors of the Spanish American Training School (under the academy principal): H. F. Brown, 1920—1922; A. N. Allen, 1922—1925; C. D. Stone, 1925—1926; John D. Livingston, 1927—1929; no separate director, 1929—1933.

Principals of the Arizona Academy: K. M. Adams, 1920—1924; W. L. Avery, 1924—1926; C. E. Kellogg, 1926—1928; J. E. Young, 1928—1931; C. D. Striplin, 1931—1934; E. G. Truitt, 1934—1935; C. O. Trubey, 1935—1936; R. F. Alderson, 1936—1938; C. R. Eckman, 1938—1939; Joseph Phillips, 1939—1942; O. D. Hancock, 1942—1947; R. L. Hubbs, 1947—1949; George E. Smith, 1949—1951; Bert R. Ritz, 1951—1953.

Principals: R. O. Stone, 1953—1956; G. E. Smith, 1956—1964; C. B. Harris, 1964—1967; R. O. Stone, 1967—1970; H. D. Lawson, 1970—1971; D. E. Wright, 1971—1974; Don R. Keele, 1974—1979; Ronald K. Russell, 1979—1983; Paul Rouse, 1983—1986; Gayle Rhoads, 1986—1988; M. Wayne Longhofer, 1988— .

Thurber, Robert Bruce

THURBER, ROBERT BRUCE (1882—1947). Missionary, editor, author. Graduate of Mount Vernon Academy (1902), and Emmanuel Missionary College (1918). After teaching church school in Dayton, Ohio (1902—1903), and Mount Vernon, Ohio (1903—1904), he became education secretary of the East Michigan Conference in 1904. After serving as principal of Adelphian Academy (1907—1909), he was called to establish an industrial school at Meiktila, Burma, and remained in that country till 1915. Returning to the United States, he taught Bible and missions at Emmanuel Missionary College (1916—1918), then became assistant editor of the Watchman Magazine, Nashville, Tennessee (1919—1925), and then editor (1925—1935). Serving overseas again, he was editor of the Oriental Watchman (India) from 1935 to 1941; and after returning he was editor of the Canadian Signs of the Times from 1943 to 1947.

Among his 27 published books are In the Land of Pagodas, Wings of the Morning, Master Men, Toward a Better Day, Personal Power for the New Age, and Without Doubt.

Thurston, William Henry

THURSTON, WILLIAM HENRY (1855—1924). Missionary, administrator. Converted at 25, he entered the ministry in 1890, served as president of the Wisconsin Sabbath School Association and secretary of the conference colporteur work. In 1894 he went to Brazil as a self-supporting missionary and opened a book depository in Rio de Janeiro. Seven years later he returned to the United States and served as vice president of the Lake Union Conference, and then as first president of the Canadian Union Conference (1902—1909). Later he was president of the Kansas Conference (1909—1910), and of the Wisconsin Conference (1910—1915). In 1915 he was called to work in the Upper Columbia Conference.

Tibet

TIBET. Tibet is an autonomous region of China. It is situated on the high plateau (average elevation 16,000 feet [5,000 meters]) between the Himalayan and Kunlun mountain ranges and has an area of about 470,000 square miles (1.2 million square kilometers). Its population (1994) is about 2 million; there are reportedly about 4 million Tibetans outside the legal boundaries of the area. Until recently Tibet was a theocratic state and the center of Lamaistic Buddhism. For many centuries it contained the residence of the Dalai Lama, held to be the incarnation of Chen-re-zi, the patron deity of Tibet. He was the political as well as the spiritual ruler of the people. Art, literature, and architecture of the land are permeated by its religious tradition. By the seventh century A.D. Tibetans, a Mongoloid people, had formed a strong state stretching from eastern China into upper Burma, and across Nepal into India. In the eighteenth century they came under the control of the Chinese Empire and remained under its suzerainty until the downfall of the Manchu dynasty in 1911. In 1951 the government of the People's Republic of China assumed control of the country and incorporated it as an autonomous region. The Dalai Lama left the country in the late 1950s.

Seventh-day Adventist Work for Tibetans

Seventh-day Adventist Work for Tibetans. In 1919 J. N. Andrews, M.D., opened a dispensary near the border of Tibet, at Kangding in the Chinese province of Sichuan, in an area that contained a large population of Tibetans. In 1921 a chart of the Ten Commandments in Tibetan was published at Kangding. Although there was no opening for mission work inside Tibet, publications were a means of reaching Tibetans.

Two Tibetans were baptized at Kangding in 1931. About the same time, two young Tibetan lamas learned of the Bible message from H. E. Schultz at his station in southern Gansu, in the Northwest, and came to the training school for study. Their presence fired the interest in Tibet and resulted in the "On-to-Lhasa" movement. The plan envisioned the preparation of SDA publications in Tibetan and a collection of sufficient funds to send one of the converted lamas to Lhasa on a missionary journey. The plan became a reality in 1938 when Feng Yung-seng left for Lhasa from Xining, Qinghai. Reaching the capital after a 90-day trip, he distributed publications, helped the sick, and taught the Bible in Lhasa, the sacred city of Lamaism. When he returned from Lhasa, he brought with him requests from high Tibetan officials that SDAs establish medical work in their capital. Unfortunately the onset of World War II interrupted the development of the work in Tibet.

As of 1994 the Seventh-day Adventist Yearbook has no listing or information on Tibet.

Tièche, Léon-Paul

TIÈCHE, LÉON-PAUL (1867—1928). Evangelist and administrator in France and Switzerland. He was born in Chindon, Switzerland, and was studying to be an accountant when, at the age of 19, he became a Seventh-day Adventist. After working at the Basel Publishing House for a short time, he went to the Battle Creek Sanitarium in Battle Creek, Michigan, U.S.A., where for two or three years he worked as a nurse. Upon his return to Europe he served as an evangelist in France and Switzerland, being ordained to the ministry about 1899. Later he served as president of the French-Swiss Conference (1903—1907), then of the Latin Union (1907—1920). For some time he also managed certain SDA institutions in Europe. He retired about 1924.

Tièche, Maurice

TIÈCHE, MAURICE (1895—1959). Educator, pastor, writer, and broadcaster. He was born Mar. 5, 1895, in Nimes, France, and was a son of Léon-Paul Tièche. Studying literature and philosophy at the University of Paris, he became interested also in theology and education. For a time he taught history, theology, and literature at Seventh-day Adventist schools in Nimes, Gland, and Collonges. From 1922 to 1924 he pastored a church at Lille; from 1924 to 1927 he edited the Revue Adventiste, the church paper for the French-speaking members; from 1927 to 1931 he pastored a church at Reims. After a time he turned his attention more and more to the subject of the education of youth.

From 1931 to 1946 Tièche taught education courses at Collonges, then after his retirement from teaching, spent four years reorganizing the youth work in France. From 1950 to his death he conducted an educational broadcast, La Voix de l'Espérance, “The Voice of Hope,” which was heard throughout the French-speaking world. He wrote numerous articles for church and secular magazines, lectured in person, and organized centers for family education in many cities of France. Fifteen published works stand to his credit: notable among them are Vivre (“Living”), Leçons de Pédagogie appliquée à l'École du Sabbath (“Lessons of Pedagogy Applied to the Sabbath School”), and L'Esprit de Prophétie et ses Enseignements (“The Spirit of Prophecy and Its Teachings”).

Tijuana Secondary School

TIJUANA SECONDARY SCHOOL. See Health and Knowledge Secondary School.

Tillamook County General Hospital

TILLAMOOK COUNTY GENERAL HOSPITAL. A 49-bed hospital located at 1000 Third Street, Tillamook, Oregon. It has been operated since Aug. 15, 1973, by the Northwest Medical Foundation (NWMF) under terms of a three-year, renewable lease which, in effect, links the hospital to the Seventh-day Adventist health-care system. The contract was negotiated after the hospital experienced management problems related to a decline in utilization. A NWMF statement of purpose said the agreement was intended to improve administration, financial management, and nursing administration. Key positions in management and nursing departments were filled by NWMF-recruited personnel. Portland Adventist Hospital, another NWMF subsidiary, helped with staffing during the transition and established continuing backup support in such areas as radiology (PAH radiologists visit Tillamook twice weekly on rotation) and laboratory services. Two family physicians, graduates of Loma Linda University's School of Medicine, were recruited by NWMF for Tillamook within the first year of the lease. A Task Force on Hospital Betterment was named. A Civic Advisory Board was appointed. Early study was given a proposed modernization, particularly in patient areas, and a certificate of need for the $2.3 million project was obtained.

The hospital, erected in 1949, was the first hospital in Oregon to obtain Hill-Burton financing. Similar funding was sought for the proposed modernization. The hospital management picture in the fall of 1974 was good, the operation of the institution then being in the black financially, according to Mardian J. Blair, president of NWMF. In February 1974 the Tillamook Headlight Herald noted "substantial improvement" had been made.

In 1993 TCGH is the designated trauma center for the area and serves the 20,000 residents of Tillamook County. It has sound operations and enjoys the support of the community. There are 12 physicians on staff, nine of whom are graduates of Loma Linda University School of Medicine. This has had a corresponding impact on the local church and school.

Administrators: T. L. Werner, 1973—1978; J. F. Pogue, 1978—1981; S. B. Berry, 1981—1984; D. L. Jones, 1984—1987; C. W. Hesseltine, 1987— .

Time of Trouble

TIME OF TROUBLE. An expression from Dan. 12:1, where is described the eschatological experience of God's people immediately prior to their deliverance and the establishment of the eternal kingdom. Seventh-day Adventists interpret the standing up of Michael here mentioned to be an allusion to Christ's cessation from His high priestly ministry in the heavenly sanctuary at the close of probation, and hence assign this time of trouble to a brief period between the close of probation and the second advent of Christ. This is understood to coincide with the time assigned in Rev. 15:1 to the seven last plagues. God's people do not suffer directly from these plagues, which are poured out upon those who have rejected God's mercy, but they do experience a period of supreme testing from which Christ delivers them at His coming. This is called the "great time of trouble" in contrast with what is known as the "little time of trouble."

Referring to the prophecy of Daniel, Christ speaks of a time of "great tribulation" (Matt. 24:21) subsequent to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans in A.D. 70 but prior to His coming. He explained that the sun would be darkened "in those days, after that tribulation"—that is, within the period of time specified but after persecution had ceased—and that unless the persecution were thus shortened, "no flesh should be saved" (Mark 13:24, 20). Seventh-day Adventists equate this time of "great tribulation" with the "time and times and the dividing of time" of Dan. 7:25 (the "time, times, and an half" of Dan. 12:7), which on the basis of the year-day principle of interpreting the time periods of symbolic prophecy would be equivalent to the 1260 days of Rev. 12:6 (cf. v. 14). Seventh-day Adventists understand that this prophetic period met its fulfillment in the 1260 years of papal supremacy and persecution, from A.D. 538 to 1798. (See Daniel, Interpretation of.) An article by E. S. Walker in the Review and Herald of Sept. 10, 1861 (18:117), discusses both of these times of trouble—the time of trouble of Dan. 12:1 and the time of tribulation of Matt. 24:21—at great length.

In considerable detail Ellen White describes the experience through which God's people will pass during the great eschatological time of trouble (EW 282—285; GC 613—634). They will suffer imprisonment at the hands of their enemies, or the privations of flight to remote mountain areas in order to escape persecution. This time of trouble will reach a climax in what is called "the time of Jacob's trouble," when the leaders of earth issue a decree authorizing the simultaneous execution of God's people in all countries of the world. But God in a miraculous way protects His people, and none perishes, though surrounded by enemies bent on their destruction; and at the very crisis, when the death decree is to go into effect, Christ appears and delivers them. See also Jacob's Trouble, Time of; Little Time of Trouble.

Time Setting

TIME SETTING. The prediction of a time for the Second Advent. Seventh-day Adventists do not set a time for the Advent or any future event. The Seventh-day Adventist founders, who came from the Millerite movement, insisted after the 1844 disappointment that the Second Advent was not the event indicated by the 2300—day prophecy. Their refusal to move the end of the prophetic period to a later date, and their insistence that no time prophecy extended beyond 1844, saved them from the successive time settings of the others who revised their dating.

Ellen White wrote in 1850 “that time had not been a test since 1844, and that time will never again be a test” (Present Truth 1:87, November 1850).

Time, Times, and a Half

TIME, TIMES, AND A HALF (1260 years). See Daniel, Interpretation of; Revelation, Interpretation of.

Times Square Center

TIMES SQUARE CENTER. See Evangelistic Centers.

Timor

TIMOR. One of the Lesser Sunda islands, situated in the Indian Ocean off the north coast of Australia. The territory is included in that of Nusa Tenggara Mission, which is part of the West Indonesia Union Mission within the Far Eastern Division. See Indonesia.

Tippett, Harry Moyle

TIPPETT, HARRY MOYLE (1891—1974). English teacher and book editor. Of Welsh ancestry, he was born Jan. 10, 1891, in the tin-mining village of Redruth, Cornwall, England. In 1893 his mother took him and three other children to America to join her miner husband and two older sons in Butte, Montana. He interrupted his education in the public schools when his mother died during his teen years, and worked in a grocery for nearly a decade. About 1916 he embraced the third angel's message, largely through reading, and joined the Butte, Montana, Seventh-day Adventist Church. He soon married one of the members, Gladys Robinson. For two years he worked in the copper mines. Then in 1919, through the interest and influence of church leaders, he was encouraged to attend Walla Walla College. For five years his wife taught sewing classes in the college and he completed his education. Immediately upon graduation in 1924, he was called to teach English at Sutherlin Academy in Oregon. The next year he served as principal. Then in 1926 he moved to Emmanuel Missionary College to teach English for 20 years. There, as chair of the department, he helped to train many workers for the church. One of his enduring accomplishments in this period was the inauguration of Sabbath afternoon vespers, a practice that has been copied by many institutional churches and numerous other congregations. In 1946 he was called to the Review and Herald Publishing Association to serve as an associate book editor. He was 55 years of age, but he took up his new career with enthusiasm, and instead of the expected 10 years of service, he worked for 25 years in this capacity. In all, he gave 47 years to the work of the church. In 1961 he was ordained to the gospel ministry and Andrews University conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Letters. In addition to editing several hundred books, he wrote at least 12 books, numerous columns for church papers, and many articles. His best-known title was My Lord and I, the daily devotional book for 1949. The catalog of publications in 1970, the year of his retirement, listed the following titles from his pen still in print: I Became a Seventh-day Adventist, I'd Rather Be Right, Key in Your Hand, Live Happier, My Lord and I, People of the Book, Pioneer Stories Retold, The Power of Kindness, Radiant Horizons, Self-Inventory, Treasured Themes From Familiar Hymns, The Voice From Sinai.

Tirad View Academy

TIRAD VIEW ACADEMY. A coeducational boarding school on the senior high school level, operated by the Mountain Provinces Mission of the North Philippine Union. It is situated on a 32-acre (13-hectare) rocky mountain slope in Tumbaga, Quirino, Ilocos Sur, Philippines, 95 miles (153 kilometers) southeast of Baguio City.

The school began in 1950 as a multigrade school. In 1965 the first year of the academy was added, and the school became known as Tumbaga Seventh-day Adventist Junior Academy. Forty students, some twice as old as their teacher, enrolled, and classes were held in a two-room schoolhouse with split-bamboo walls, grass roof, and part-concrete floor. With mission and union assistance, two new classrooms were built. In 1966 the school became known as Tirad View Academy, after the historic peak visible from the campus. It became a mission-sponsored school when it gained full status as an academy in 1968—1969, and the first class of 34 students graduated at the close of the school year. In 1972 a dormitory to house 40 girls was added to the three main buildings already on campus.

Principals: R. A. Budayao, 1965—1968; A. P. Miguel, 1968—1971; P. J. Barayuga, 1971—1976; E. L. Dalupan, 1976—1978; N. R. Ramos, 1978—1979; D. R. Rafanan, 1979—1980; J. S. Zarate (acting), 1980—1981; B. Zarate, 1981—1983; T. A. Agsiweng, 1983—1987; P. S. Santiago, 1987—1988; L. L. Alawas, 1988—1990; P. S. Santiago, 1990—1992; J. S. Zarate, 1992—1993; R. Tupagen, 1993— .

Tiruchirapalli Adventist High School

TIRUCHIRAPALLI ADVENTIST HIGH SCHOOL. See Seventh-day Adventist High School \(Tiruchirapalli\).

Tisza Conference

TISZA CONFERENCE. See Hungary; Trans-European Division.

Tithe

TITHE. One tenth of a person's income, claimed by God as an acknowledgment of His ownership of all things, and as a means of training in faithful stewardship. "Thou shalt remember the Lord thy God: for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth" (Deut. 8:18). "Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the firstfruits of all thine increase" (Prov. 3:9). "The tithe . . . is the Lord's" (Lev. 27:30).

It is certain that the ancient Israelites were expected to pay much more than one tenth of their income for the support of God's work, though some of the details are obscure. The "tenth" mentioned in Lev. 27:30 has sometimes been called the first tithe, and its use for the priesthood and the tabernacle is explained in Num. 18:21. A second tithe (see Deut. 12:17, 18; 14:26, 27) was used to sustain the people at their numerous feasts and festivals, which were intended to foster religious principles and national unity. Every third year this tithe was held at home for use among strangers, fatherless, widows, and local Levites (Deut. 14:28, 29; see PP 525, 526, 530).

As anciently the tithe was devoted to the support of the priesthood and the sanctuary, so today, among Seventh-day Adventists, it is devoted to the support of the ministry in their work of propagating the gospel (Num. 18:21; 1 Cor. 9:14; 1 Tim. 5:18). The first recorded instance of tithing is that of the patriarch Abraham (Gen. 14:17—21; Heb. 7:1, 2). Jacob similarly vowed to pay a faithful tithe (Gen. 28:20—22). Seventh-day Adventists fully adopted the present tithing plan in 1879, in the belief that our Lord made the OT principle set forth in Lev. 27:30 and Mal. 3:8—11 applicable to Christians: "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone" (Matt. 23:23).

The tithe, or one tenth, is reckoned on the income, spoken of in Scripture as the "increase." In the case of an employed person, the tithe is paid on the entire salary. In the case of a self-employed person or a business, the tithe is paid on the profit—the amount remaining after deducting the expenses of earning the income. No one is received into membership in the Seventh-day Adventist Church until he or she accepts tithe paying as a scriptural obligation. Members who cease to pay tithe are encouraged by the pastor or church leaders to begin again to be faithful in this obligation, but, because tithe paying is not a test of fellowship, the individual may continue as a member even if he or she remains delinquent. However, they are not to be considered eligible for holding church office.

Tithe Distinguished From Offerings. Besides the first one tenth of individual income Seventh-day Adventists are urged to give freewill offerings from the nine tenths to other projects. These offerings are intended for the support of the worldwide mission work of the church, local church expenses, welfare work, and various other church activities.

"Second Tithe." Many Seventh-day Adventists allot a second tenth, an amount equal to the tithe, to provide for these various freewill offerings. The phrase "second tithe" is thus used to denote a budgeted amount for the total of the voluntary offerings.

Disbursement of Tithe. From the very earliest instances when the “tithing principle” was considered by the Seventh-day Adventists, in the 1850s, the main objective of “systematic benevolence,” as the offering on the proportionate principle was then called, was the support of the ministry. Until the actual tithe, one tenth, was adopted (1876—1879) there were other allowed uses for the funds derived from systematic benevolence.

By the time a model constitution for state conferences was prepared by the General Conference in 1863, it apparently had become quite well established that the major part of the fund was to be used for the support of evangelistic work, and thus formed the base of conference finances. The General Conference work was at first financed by irregular appropriations from the state conferences. In 1878 the General Conference Committee recommended that conferences pay a tithe on their income to the General Conference. Later, when union conferences were organized in 1901, the conferences paid tithe of their income to the unions, which in turn paid tithe to the General Conference. Under the current system of tithe distribution, conferences remit to the General Conference additional percentages of their tithe.

The Working Policy provides that “the tithe is to be held sacred for the work of the ministry and Bible teaching, including the carrying forward of conference administration in the care of the churches and of field missionary operations. The tithe is not to be expended upon other lines of work such as church or institutional debt-paying or building operations.”

Tithe as the Base of Denominational Finance. For nearly a century the tithe has formed the base of all Seventh-day Adventist giving, the total of which in North America alone now amounts to approximately $560 per member per year. It has been estimated that today more than half the members of the church return to the Lord a faithful tithe and add freewill offerings over and above that. The worldwide missionary work of the church is now financed through a unified budget amounting to about $130 million annually, which is voted at the Annual Council of the General Conference. This is in addition to the funds raised by the local congregations for their own projects and activities. A strong financial system makes it possible to allocate funds according to need, and provides for a uniform support of the work of the church everywhere. See Stewardship; Systematic Benevolence.

Titicaca Adventist Academy

TITICACA ADVENTIST ACADEMY (Colegio Adventista de Titicaca). A coeducational boarding school on the senior high school level, owned and operated by the South Peru Mission and serving its constituency. It is situated on a 617-acre (250-hectare) farm four miles (six kilometers) from Juliaca, Peru.

Until 1950 the school offered only the first three years of the secondary course, and it was necessary for the students to revalidate their work in some government school, for the school lacked official recognition. But in that year the complete secondary course was fully accredited as the result of the favorable report given by the minister of public education and other dignitaries who visited the school. In 1993 there were 177 students attending. Fourteen teachers were serving them.

The institution was founded in 1922, beginning with a summer school, with B. L. Thompson as the first principal. E. H. Wilcox and others had begun to look for a suitable site for a training school near Puno as early as 1920. Finally, in May 1922 they learned of the possibility of securing the Chullunquiani Ranch near Juliaca. When they saw this property, which had 12 springs, they immediately agreed to purchase it, and were able to finish the transaction within the short space of two weeks. Chullunquiani, an Indian term, means “place of ice,” a name that aptly describes the cold wind-blown flat and its surrounding hills, often covered with frost in winter.

Young men who wished to enroll in the new school were hired to make adobe bricks for the construction, and by September 25,000 adobes were ready. A building was erected, thick-walled and square, with a tower that could be seen from Juliaca. School opened with the summer session beginning December 1922, and the session continued for four or five months to enable many of the teachers from the Indian schools to finish the primary course. Soon a director’s cottage was added, and dormitories consisting of rows of cubicles, each with a tiny backyard and kitchen, where the students prepared their own food. This system was changed and a central dining room was installed in 1944. A modern brick administration building, whose erection was begun in 1958, now has replaced the original one, which had been severely damaged by a storm. Three teachers’ cottages have been built near the director’s home.

The school has undergone some structural changes. In 1993 there were new cement-block buildings; a residence for the principal; comfortable modern houses for the faculty; new classrooms; modern girls’ and boys’ dormitories constructed with the help of the German Evangelische Zentralstelle für Entwicklungshilfe. A new library and laboratory have been completed.

The early industries included farming and dairying, carpentry, and spinning and weaving, utilizing the wool from the school’s flock of sheep. Later welding and baking and the manufacture of burnt bricks and cement blocks were added.

Principals: B. L. Thompson, 1922—1923; Guy E. Mann, 1924; H. M. Colburn, 1925—1927; W. E. Murray, 1927—1929; C. H. Baker, 1930; Agustín Alva, 1931;

Leon Replogle, 1932—1933; R. A. Hayden, 1934; C. D. Christensen, 1935—1939; H. C. Morton, 1940—1944; R. L. Jacobs, 1945—1947; Donald von Pohle, 1948; P. P. León, 1949—1951; P. G. Werner, 1952—1954; Arthur Mitchel, 1954—1962; Lynn Baerg, 1962—1964; Conrado Visser, 1964; Oswaldo Krause, 1964; Arturo Carcagno, 1965—1971; Eleodoro Rodriguez, 1972; Félix Bendezú, 1973—1977; Ruben Chambi, 1978—1982; J. Pomalaya, 1983—1989; Melinio Beltran, 1990—1991; Ruben Rodriguez, 1992— .

Tjimindi Training School

TJIMINDI TRAINING SCHOOL. See Indonesian Union College.

Tobacco

TOBACCO. See Temperance (principles); Breathe Free: The Plan to Stop Smoking; Health Principles.

Tobago

TOBAGO. See Inter-American Division; Trinidad and Tobago.

Togo

TOGO. A West African republic, independent since 1960, belonging to the French-speaking nations, bounded on the north by Burkina Faso, on the east by Benin, on the south by the Gulf of Guinea, and on the west by Ghana. It has an area of 21,622 square miles (56,000 square kilometers), and a population (1994) of 4.3 million. Agriculture is the principal occupation, the chief exports being cocoa, cotton, coffee, and palm kernels. The country is long and narrow, and has 40 miles (65 kilometers) of seacoast. Twenty percent of the population are Christians, most of whom are Roman Catholics. Most of the other 80 percent are animists.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics: The territory of Togo constitutes the Togo Mission in the Sahel Union, which forms part of the Africa-Indian Ocean Division. Statistics (1992): churches, 5; members, 2,014; ordained ministers, 5; licensed ministers, 2. Headquarters: Lome.

The first Seventh-day Adventist worker to enter Togo was Georges Vaysse, a colporteur, who, beginning in 1956, spent two years selling books and papers. From reading these publications, a number of persons became interested in Seventh-day Adventist doctrines and began to call themselves Seventh-day Adventists. These were visited in January 1960 by H. Kempf from the Ivory Coast. In November 1963 the West African Union Mission appointed Kempf and his family resident missionaries to Togo. In 1964 Kempf began work there, establishing groups of converts and opening schoolwork. He also visited Dahomey. In both countries requests were made for SDA medical work. In 1970 H. Kempf left Togo and was replaced by R. Fidelia, who worked in Togo until July 1972 and was replaced in March 1973 by P. Heise from Côte d'Ivoire.

Togo Mission

TOGO MISSION. See Africa-Indian Ocean Division; Togo.

Togoba Hospital

TOGOBA HOSPITAL. A medical institution formerly operated at Togoba, which lies at an elevation of more than 5,000 feet (1,500 meters) in the Nebilyer Valley and is situated eight miles (13 kilometers) west of Mount Hagen, New Guinea. The institution was established in response to a government request that the mission establish a colony for the treatment of leprosy patients in the New Guinea highlands.

In the following years as many as 500 inpatients were treated at Togoba at one time. However, with changing government policy in the treatment of leprosy, and the understanding that isolation is not essential for control of the disease, the number of inpatients decreased.

An occupational therapy weaving project provided employment and valuable hand therapy for inpatients. Reconstructive surgery and physiotherapy hastened the rehabilitation of those with deformities. By 1974 indigenous staff occupied many senior positions.

With the decline in the number of leprosy inpatients, the role of the hospital was expanded to include leprosy outpatient supervision, nonleprosy outpatient care, infant welfare clinics, and aid post supervision.

The hospital was taken over by the government in 1982.

Directors: L. H. Barnard, 1950—1955; R. O. Yeatts, M.D., 1955—1961; R. L. Waddington, 1961—1966; W.E.J. Hokin, 1966—1967; K. J. Robson, 1968—1971; S. R. Smith, 1971—1974; C. I. Butler, 1974—1975; G. R. Stanley, 1975—1976; S. Papapu, 1976—1979; Mrs. D. Bradley, 1979—1980; F. Kagai, 1980—1981; R. Sambale, 1981—1982.

Toivonlinna Summer Sanitarium

TOIVONLINNA SUMMER SANITARIUM (Toivonlinnan Kylpyparantola). An 81-bed medical institution formerly operated during summer vacation from June through August in the buildings of Toivonlinnan Yhteiskoulu, a junior college, in the community of Piikkiö, 14 miles (22 kilometers) from the city of Turku, on the southwest coast of Finland. Facilities for physical therapy (mechanotherapy, thermotherapy, electrotherapy, and hydrotherapy, including the sauna bath) were available, and special attention was paid to diet.

The majority of the patients suffered from cardiovascular disease, arthritis, or neurosis, and came from the southern part of Finland; a few came from other countries.

The sanitarium was established in 1933. The first director was Aarne Rintala and the first physician, Vilhelm Sucksdorff. During World War II the sanitarium was closed. In its stead a military hospital was operated in 1940; a summer home for city children in 1942; and in 1944 an institution for children and old people from Ingria, a district near Leningrad in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. The sanitarium was reopened in 1948 and functioned until 1992, when it was again closed.

Administrators: A. Rintala, 1933—1944; H. Karstrom, 1948—1961; V. A. Jaakkola, 1961—1964; V. A. Kuosmanen, 1964—1969; T. J. Karkkainen, 1969—1976; R. Hatonen, 1976—1983; P. Kankaanpaa, 1984—1992.

Toivonlinnan Yhteiskoulu

TOIVONLINNAN YHTEISKOULU. See Finland Junior College.

Tokelau Islands

TOKELAU ISLANDS. See Samoa and Tokelau Islands.

Tokyo Adventist Hospital

TOKYO ADVENTIST HOSPITAL (Tokyo Eisei Byoin). A general hospital with a capacity of 164 beds and 30 bassinets, situated in a suburb of Tokyo, Japan, and owned and operated by the Japan Union Conference. It is administered by a medical director and a staff of about 15 Japanese physicians. A School of Nursing, accredited by the government as Saniku Gakuin, is operated in connection with the hospital.

Tokyo Adventist Hospital was founded in 1928, when a 20-bed frame building was erected by the faculty and students of Japan Junior College and the Japan Union Mission staff. The institution was opened on May 1, 1929, largely the result of the sacrifice of the 620 Seventh-day Adventists in Japan, who had contributed more than two thirds of its 50,000 yen cost. The original hospital staff members included Dr. Edward E. Getzlaff and his wife; Dr. Shogo Watanabe, a former household doctor of Prince Mikasa; two missionary wives who served as matron and cook; H. J. Perkins, union mission treasurer, who acted as hospital manager; and six Japanese nurses. The hospital had an outpatient department and held baby welfare clinics for the neighborhood. In 1932 four private rooms and a dining room were added to the building. During that year the institution was incorporated and accredited by the government. In the following years, the reputation of the hospital became well established and the hospital was full to overflowing.

In 1941, because of international tension, E. H. Olson, the foreign medical director, left Japan. For two and a half years after the war in the Pacific began on Dec. 7/8, 1941, Dr. Kozo Tamaki, a Loma Linda graduate, with about 40 workers, kept the hospital open. In the autumn of 1943, when the government dissolved the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Japan, the hospital was turned over to a Salvation Army group belonging to the Japan Medical Corporation. Only a few SDA workers remained on the staff.

With the close of the war in 1945, the hospital and all other properties were recovered through the efforts of an official whose family had been patients of the hospital prior to the war. With the help of volunteers, Ernestine Gill, the superintendent of nurses, spent three months cleaning the building and partially reequipping the hospital. It was reopened on Nov. 23, 1947, with some 13 staff members. Dr. Getzlaff returned, volunteering to give two years' service, and stayed for nearly three years more.

During 1951, 1955, and 1961 concrete wings were added to the building, bringing the bed capacity to 130 and providing increased space for each department. In spite of this expansion, the building is still too small for the service required of it, especially since the adoption in 1953 of a health insurance scheme by the hospital.

In 1980 a new main building of six stories was constructed in concrete to replace the original wooden building. In 1987 the front part of the main building was expanded and a gift shop was located by the new entrance. The English name of the hospital became Tokyo Adventist Hospital.

The Dental Department was opened in May 1967 by Douglas A. Bixel, D.D.S., a graduate of Loma Linda University School of Dentistry. He arrived in Japan in August 1965 as an overseas dentist and studied the Japanese language full time for one and one-half years before becoming the first foreign dentist to pass the National Dental Board Examination in the Japanese language.

School of Nursing

School of Nursing. In the fall of 1928 six Japanese nurses holding nursing or midwife certificates were recruited and given additional training under the direction of Mrs. Getzlaff, and later of Roby Peck, of New England, who relieved Mrs. Getzlaff in 1930. In 1931 four from this group were graduated. Tomino Itagaki and Sakuyo Wakabayashi, members of the first graduating class, were still serving at the hospital in 1965. At first students were accepted only every two or three years. The School of Nursing was closed with the closing of the hospital in 1943, but in 1948, soon after the hospital was reopened, the School of Nursing began again. The faculty consisted of Ernestine Gill and three Japanese nursing instructors. In 1952 the school was accredited by the government as a class A nursing school. About 15 students are admitted yearly for a three-year training course intended to prepare them for the government examinations. Up to the spring of 1974, 321 nurses had graduated from this school. In April 1974 the school was transferred to Japan Missionary College, becoming one of the college departments.

Tokyo Adventist Hospital is the main affiliated hospital for the nursing students.

Medical Directors: E. E. Getzlaff, 1928—1933; Paul V. Starr, 1933—1940; E. H. Olson, 1940—1941; S. Kitamura, 1941—1943; operation temporarily suspended, 1943—1946; E. E. Getzlaff, 1946—1951; C. E. Syphers, 1951—1957; N. C. Woods, Jr., 1957—1960; R. A. Nelson, 1960—1964; N. C. Woods, Jr., 1964—1965; C. Delmar Johnson, 1965—1970; Haruo Ichinose, 1970; Takaharu Hayashi, 1970—1975; C. Delmar Johnson, 1975—1981; Takaharu Hayashi, 1981—1993; Yasushi Inagaki, 1993— .

Tonga

TONGA (also called “Friendly Islands”). A country comprising about 150 islands in the South Pacific Ocean about 1,200 miles (2,000 kilometers) northeast of New Zealand. There are three main island groups—Tongatapu, Haapai, and Vavau—with most of their islands being coral atolls. Total land area is 270 square miles (699 square kilometers), with Kao, an extinct volcano in the Haapai group rising 3,380 feet (1,030 meters). Fertile soils cover extensive areas of Tonga and together with a mild climate produce excellent crops including yams, taro, and vegetables. Most of the 105,000 people (1994)—brown-skinned Polynesians—dwell in small rural villages, mainly on the largest island of Tongatapu, where the capital and chief port of Nukualofa is situated. After being a protectorate of Great Britain since 1900, Tonga became independent in 1970. Authority is vested in a constitutional monarchy, with the king, Taufaahau Tupou IV (crowned 1967), appointing a prime minister and a cabinet. The legislative assembly is composed of the cabinet, nobles elected by the hereditary nobility, and commoners elected by the people.

Professing Christianity and enshrining Sunday sacredness in the constitution, the people are predominantly Methodist. Seventh-day Adventists observe Sabbath on what locally is known as Sunday because the islands of Tonga lie east of the 180° meridian in the Western Hemisphere day sequence. If Tonga decides to change to Western Hemisphere day sequence, as the countries of Samoa, the Cook Islands, and French Polynesia did, Seventh-day Adventists would then be observing Sabbath on Saturday, the seventh day of the week in Tonga.

Early indigenous rulers held the hereditary title of Tu’i Tonga, with the people believing the Tu’i Tonga were the sacred representatives of the Tongan gods. Two Dutch navigators, Willem C. Schouten and Jacob Lemaire, were the first Europeans to visit Tonga (1616), while Dutch sea captain Abel Tasman landed on Tongatapu in 1643. Captain James Cook visited the islands three times between 1773 and 1777.

In 1797 the London Missionary Society ship Duff landed 10 missionaries on the island of Tongatapu. Three of these were murdered by the islanders, and the rest left before the end of 1800 without making a single convert. In 1822 the Wesleyan Missionary Society began work in the islands. In 1831 Chief Taufaahau (later King George Tupou I) was baptized into the Methodist Church and exerted his influence in Christianizing his subjects, who within a few years renounced their heathen gods and accepted Christianity. This same king, with the assistance of Shirley Baker, a Wesleyan minister turned prime minister, developed legal codes that became the basis of the Tongan Constitution, adopted in 1875.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Tonga forms part of the Tonga and Niue Mission within the Central Pacific Union Mission, which in turn is within the South Pacific Division. The Tonga Mission became the Tonga and Niue Mission in 1976. Statistics (1992) for the Tonga and Niue Mission: churches, 14; members, 1,500; primary schools, 3; secondary schools, 2; ordained ministers, 8; licensed ministers, 3; teachers, 15; health workers, 1. Headquarters: Mangaia, Nukualofa.

Institutions

Institutions. Beulah College.

Seventh-day Adventist Work

Seventh-day Adventist Work. On the first voyage of the missionary ship Pitcairn in 1891, visits were made to the three main island groups, where books and papers were distributed mainly among the English-speaking Europeans. Four years later, on Aug. 30, 1895, on the fourth voyage of the Pitcairn, E. Hilliard with his wife and daughter (Mrs. A. Christiansen) arrived to commence mission work. Toward the close of the year Mrs. Hilliard opened a school, which functioned intermittently. In 1896 E. S. Butz and his wife and daughter (Mrs. N. Wiles), together with two Pitcairn Islanders, Maria and Sarah Young, joined the mission staff. At a later date Maria assisted Queen Lavinia at the birth of her daughter, Salote. A year later Dr. M. G. Kellogg and his wife arrived from Samoa, and before long a medical clinic was established.

Charles Edwards was the first person to be baptized in Tonga. Baptized by Butz on Dec. 10, 1899, he continued assisting Dr. Kellogg in medical work and married Maria Young. The first Tongan convert, Timote Mafi, was baptized by Butz in 1904. Other early converts were David Holland, W. W. Palmer (1900), his wife, and son Cyril. A. Tyndale, Mr. and Mrs. Stevens, Mr. Charles, Mr. Wright, M. Walde and H. Walde (in 1903), and Mrs. H. Walde (in 1904).

Near the close of 1904 Ella Boyd, a teacher from Australia, opened a church school at Nukualofa, which served both Europeans (mornings) and nationals (afternoons). Nellie Sisley continued this educational emphasis in 1907. To care for additional enrollments, Mrs. Lily Thorpe also taught school. In 1908 Myra Ford cared for the educational work in Nukualofa while returning Ella Boyd opened a school at Faleloa on Poa island, Haapai, on five acres (two hectares) of land obtained by W. Palmer who was caring for the work of the church. For many years Faleloa remained a major outpost for Adventism in Tonga. Harold and Lily Piper replaced Boyd in 1908. Later educational and field workers were Leonard Paap, George Stewart, Bert Thorpe, Hubert Tolhurst (whose wife died of influenza at Faleloa on Mar. 14, 1918), Bernard Hadfield, Arthur Powell, Robert Smith, and Maggie Ferguson.

During his supervision of church work in Tonga, Smith established a training school at Houma on the western end of Tongatapu island in 1923. It was called the "Alimoni School," meaning the "Hidden School," because it was far away from the town of Nukualofa. C. S. Palmer was the first principal. In 1926 the school was transferred to a more suitable property at Vaini, nine miles (14.5 kilometers) from Nukualofa on the eastern side of the island. This venture was the beginning of Beulah College. During this time and on up to 1946, volunteer Maggie Ferguson operated a primary school of 60 pupils in the northern group of islands known as Vavau, and Lusi Moala ran a primary school of 21 pupils in Haapai.

Tonga's national radio station broadcasts weekly SDA programs, which commenced with the Voice of Prophecy in 1962.

"Pierson Laymen's School," offering a two-year course in local church activities and practical evangelism, began operation in 1972 on 7.5 acres (three hectares) of land made available by the Honorable Maafu Tukuiaulahi, near the village of Vaini on Tongatapu island. After intensive training of many young church members, predominantly married couples, under the experienced guidance of principal Pene Moto Inoke and Tevita Lanivia the school closed in 1984.

Over the past 60 years the most fruitful source of converts has been Beulah College. Village evangelism, while pursued with vigor in some areas, has met with opposition, and only small numbers have come from the villages. In Nukualofa itself, evangelism has proved more fruitful. An English language primary school operates in Nukualofa with an enrollment of 160 pupils.

Tonga and Niue Mission

TONGA AND NIUE MISSION. See Niue; South Pacific Division; Tonga.

Toppenberg, Aksel Valdemar Emil

TOPPENBERG, AKSEL VALDEMAR EMIL (1884—1957). Pioneer Seventh-day Adventist missionary in Ethiopia. He was born in Aalborg, Denmark. While still a young man, he emigrated to America, where he accepted the SDA faith. In 1909 he was graduated from Union College and immediately asked the mission board for an overseas appointment. As a result he was sent, as a single man and as one of the first SDA workers, to the Italian colony of Eritrea, a hot and rather unhealthful country on the shores of the Red Sea. About a year later he was transferred to Tanganyika (now Tanzania).

In 1913 Toppenberg married Minnie Hansen, and the two were appointed to the mission field of Tanganyika, then under the supervision of the German Union Conference. Here during the years a strong work was built up, with some 12 stations manned by Europeans, and many outschools. When World War I broke out and German missionaries were forced to leave their stations, Toppenberg, as a Dane, fortunately was not molested. He remained in western Tanganyika and for two dangerous years cared for the work and the workers. During most of that time the war raged across East Africa, and the family was entirely cut off from the outside world. Food was difficult to obtain, and they were forced to make clothing from the skins of animals. When the situation gradually became more critical, as thousands of native tribespeople roamed about killing, robbing, and looting, Toppenberg took his family in the dead of night, and amid peril and confusion made his way to the advancing British lines, where they were kindly received. Health conditions made it imperative for them to leave the tropics, and sadly they departed for the homeland in 1917.

Returning to Africa in 1921, Toppenberg pioneered the work in Ethiopia and became the first president of the Ethiopia Union. After many years of service there, he went south and took up work in the newly entered Uganda mission field. There his wife got the dread sleeping sickness, and they returned to Denmark in 1936, where she died.

The next year, with his second wife, Mary Hendrickson Oswald, he sailed back to East Africa, and for 10 years worked in Uganda. From there he went to Ethiopia once more. In 1952 he returned to the United States after giving 43 years of service to Africa.

An autobiographical account of his life and work was published under the title Africa Has My Heart.

Toraja View Academy

TORAJA VIEW ACADEMY (Sekola Lanjutan Advent). A coeducational boarding school on the senior high school level operated by the South Sulawesi Conference on an estate of about 38 acres (15 hectares) 228 miles (365 kilometers) north of Makassar (Ujungpandang), south Sulawesi, Indonesia, in a mountainous area at an elevation of 3,000 feet (910 meters). In 1993 the school had an enrollment of 78 students. The school draws students mainly from south Sulawesi and southeast Sulawesi. Most of the students are Torajanese.

The school was opened in 1958 as a junior academy, with Chriss Dompas as principal and an enrollment of 18, at Rantepao, 20 miles (32 kilometers) north of the present location. It was called Sekolah Lanjutan Advent Rantepao. Classes were held in the Rantepao church. The school was moved to its present location, Mebali, Toraja, in 1969 and housed in temporary buildings made of bamboo with thatched roofs. The desks, beds, and benches likewise were made of bamboo.

The name of the school was changed to Toraja Academy in 1969, and since 1972 it has been known as the Toraja View Academy. It was named by eight student missionaries who came from the Jakarta English Language School to help construct a permanent administration building.

Principals: Chriss Dompas, 1958—1959; H. Rumambi, 1959—1961; A. J. Kountur, 1961—1967; T. Katemba, 1967—1973; F. Kairupan, 1973—1974; A. J. Kountur, 1975—1976; A. Wahongan, 1977—1980; J. Engka, 1981—1986; F. N. Manoppo, 1987—1990; W. Rhebok, 1991—1992; W. Liogu, 1993— .

Tornblad, Ollie (Oberholtzer)

TORNBLAD, OLLIE (OBERHOLTZER) (1868—1953). Pioneer Seventh-day Adventist physician in Burma. A daughter of an SDA minister, she began her service in the church as a Bible instructor in Indianapolis, Indiana. Then, after a brief period in the neighboring state conferences, she went to the Battle Creek Sanitarium to study nursing, where she eventually began the study of medicine under Dr. Kellogg. In 1905 she graduated from the medical school at the University of Arkansas and went to Burma, where she pioneered SDA medical work at Moulmein. In 1910 she married Carl Tornblad, an SDA businessman in Burma, and together they established an industrial mission station among the Shan people in the interior. She returned to the United States in 1932 and served as a part-time Bible instructor in the Central California Conference for a number of years.

Tortola Island

TORTOLA ISLAND. See Virgin Islands.

Toungoo High School

TOUNGOO HIGH SCHOOL. A coeducational boarding school on the senior high school level, formerly operated by the Burma Union at Kyauktaing, Toungoo, Burma. The school property, 50 acres (20 hectares) of well-watered land with a clear stream running next to it, is situated nine miles (14 kilometers) northeast of Toungoo, 180 miles (300 kilometers) north of Rangoon. School buildings, of brick or strong framework, include classrooms, dormitories, dining hall, and 10 teachers' cottages. The school garden produces pineapples, bananas, and a variety of vegetables.

The high school for the Burma Union had been at Meiktila. A school was established here by Robert B. Thurber in 1909 in response to a request by local Buddhists that Seventh-day Adventists open an industrial school. As Thurber tells the story, interest in SDAs was aroused by a telegraph operator, who, having some knowledge of SDAs, told his neighbors about them. What he told them about the SDA educational philosophy of training the head, the hand, and the heart appealed to them; so much so that they offered financial support and started a subscription fund for the school. Industries made the new school distinctive in Burma. At first the enrollment was largely Buddhist, but in 1940, 93 of the 102 boarders were SDAs. This school produced many mission workers and continued until it was closed by World War II in 1942.

After the war, with the buildings of the Meiktila school either destroyed or badly damaged, the Myaungmya Middle School erected several temporary buildings to accommodate the Meiktila high school students while search for a new location began. Many felt the Meiktila school was too far north. This search lasted from 1946 until 1956, when the site at Kyauktaing was selected.

The General Conference furnished liberal funds to reestablish the high school. At first temporary buildings were constructed to facilitate a quick move from Myaungmya, where the large enrollment constituted a problem. The new school opened on May 29, 1957, with Chit Maung as principal.

Operated entirely by national leadership, Toungoo High School prospered spiritually and scholastically, enlisting an enrollment of more than 300 in all grades up to college entrance until it was nationalized by the Burmese government in April 1966.

Principals: Chit Maung, 1957—1963; Barnabas Peter, 1963—1965; Kyaw Balay, 1965—1966.

Town, Nelson Zane

TOWN, NELSON ZANE (1863—1936). Publishing secretary. After he graduated from the ministerial course at South Lancaster Academy in 1889, his first official position was that of field missionary secretary for the New York Conference. In 1890 he married Sadie R. Graham, who was closely associated with him in pioneer colporteur work. The next year they went to Scotland to pioneer the colporteur work in that country, and in 1892 they moved to England, where he became the first field missionary secretary of the denomination that devoted full time to supervising book sales alone.

Four years later Town was transferred to the Argentine, where for 12 years he engaged in various denominational activities, including the establishing of the River Plate College. He was recalled to the United States in 1908 to be assistant secretary of the Publishing Department of the General Conference. From 1913 to 1930 he was its head. Returning to South America in 1930, he was president of the Austral Union Conference until 1933.

Tract and Missionary Societies

TRACT AND MISSIONARY SOCIETIES. Former organizations (often referred to as the T. and M. Societies or Tract Societies) that promoted the following activities: the distribution of Seventh-day Adventist publications, evangelistic correspondence or visitation by lay volunteers, and relief and welfare activities. The conference societies were organized first (beginning in New England in 1870), then these organized local or district branch societies, and finally the General Conference, in 1874, set up a denomination-wide General (later International) Tract and Missionary Society. The conference Tract and Missionary Societies, later called Tract Societies, were replaced by the present Adventist Book Centers; the International Tract and Missionary Society on the General Conference level was replaced by the Publishing Department; later the promotion of lay evangelistic and welfare activities was assigned to a new organization—the Home Missionary Department (now Church Ministries Department).

I. Development of the “T. and M.” Societies

I. Development of the “T. and M.” Societies. 1. The Vigilant Missionary Society. The germ of these departments of the church was a local women’s group called the Vigilant Missionary Society, formed in June 1869 in South Lancaster, Massachusetts, with nine charter members. Its officers were Mrs. Roxie Rice, president; Mrs. Mary H. Haskell, vice president; Mrs. Mary L. Priest, secretary; and Rhoda Wheeler, treasurer. Society members visited their neighbors, helped the sick and the needy, distributed tracts and other publications, and wrote letters sharing their faith in a personal way. Encouraged by S. N. Haskell, who then supervised the Southern New England Mission, they specialized in correspondence and the mailing out of papers on a large scale. From 1870 the Vigilant Missionary Society continued as a women’s auxiliary to the New England Tract and Missionary Society, and other similar societies were formed (although in later years the Vigilant Missionary Societies were not necessarily restricted to women). They retained the correspondence and mailing activities, specializing later in sending out Signs of the Times.

2. State Tract and Missionary Societies. By extending the pattern of the original Vigilant Missionary organization to the whole conference, the first conference Tract and Missionary Society was organized by S. N. Haskell in 1870 for the newly formed New England Conference. This was followed by the formation of district and local “T. and M.” Societies in churches and groups of churches. Haskell’s organization attracted the attention of James and Ellen White, who visited Massachusetts to study the plan. White immediately published his findings and urged other conferences to follow the lead. At a special session of the General Conference, opened Dec. 29, 1871, a resolution was passed recommending the formation of Tract and Missionary Societies, and a committee was appointed for this, led by S. N. Haskell.

In 1873 the General Conference asked Haskell to travel in all of the conferences, promoting tract and missionary work.

In a few years every conference had its Tract and Missionary Society operating in each church, setting members to work with correspondence reaching to the ends of the earth. A monthly paper, The True Missionary, was published in 1874 to promote missionary work. This contained instruction, statistical reports from various societies, interesting letters, and experiences.

3. Local Societies. The most important result of the establishment of the Tract Society work was in creating and increasing the missionary spirit among local churches. Each district (of several neighboring churches) had a director and secretary and each church had a “librarian,” who ordered publications from the conference Tract and Missionary Society, keeping a supply on hand, and sent in a summary of the local members’ reports of work done. In each church weekly missionary meetings were devoted to reading letters received, relating personal experiences in working for others, and planning future work. Reports were rendered at local and district quarterly meetings. On the fourth Sabbath of each month the theme of lay missionary work was stressed in the church service.

According to J. N. Loughborough, from 1871 onward almost as many converts were won by the efforts of Tract and Missionary Society layworkers as through the work of the ministry itself. These societies sent tracts to distant states and to foreign lands and this, together with correspondence, won converts or at least aroused interests that opened the way for public evangelism. These societies served the growing church until 1901, when the General Conference organized general departments for the promotion of different lines of church work.

The scope of the work done by the T. and M. Societies is summarized in a pamphlet of 1878: “The object of this organization is to systematically canvass the country with books, tracts, and pamphlets, setting forth the things we hold to be special truths for this time, to obtain subscribers for our various periodicals, visit the sick, call upon, and converse and pray with, families and individuals; and the general organization is designed to seek out openings and supply calls for help, in all the world.

“This Tract and Missionary organization is quite recent, the present year, 1878, being only the fifth year with most of the state societies. Yet the funds raised for the work of this society now amount to over $100,000, and during the past year reports show that between four and five millions of pages of reading matter have been distributed, mostly given away, thousands of bound volumes placed in public libraries, nearly ten thousand families visited and prayed with, while publications have been sent to England, Scotland, Ireland, Italy, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Australia, New Zealand, and to every missionary station on the coast of Africa” (The Seventh-Day Adventists; A Brief Sketch of Their Origin, Progress and Principles [1877—1878], p. 14).

4. International Tract and Missionary Society. At the General Conference held in Battle Creek in 1874, the General Conference Tract and Missionary Society was formed to coordinate the work of the local and state societies. The officers were James White, president; George I. Butler, vice president; Maria Huntley, secretary; Benn Auten, treasurer; and S. N. Haskell, business agent—a term inadequate to describe his activities as the moving spirit of the whole work. At its 1882 annual session held in Rome, New York, the General Tract and Missionary Society, having expanded beyond national borders, changed its name to the International Tract and Missionary Society.

The International Tract Society, as it was commonly called, not only gave direction and coordination to the work of the conference and local societies; it also undertook to distribute publications in different countries and also to publish or have published tracts and other reading materials in various languages. Therefore depositories, distributing agencies, or publishing houses, in many lands, even when established on local initiation, were operated under the name International Tract Society. For example, the Advent-Verlag at Hamburg, the Stanborough Press in England, and the Oriental Watchman Publishing House in India began under that name.

II. Successors

II. Successors. The T. and M. Societies were replaced by several agencies: the local church missionary societies, the Book and Bible Houses (now Adventist Book Centers), and two General Conference departments. In 1901 the International Tract Society was disbanded, and from 1902 to 1913, the Tract and Missionary work was assigned to the new Publishing Department. Because the Publishing Department was primarily occupied with the production and sale of publications, it became apparent that the lay missionary work needed a new organization, stronger promotion, and means of training new members in this work. The constant admonition of Ellen White during this time was that every church should be a training school for Christian workers. The result was the formation of the General Conference Home Missionary Department (now Church Ministries Department) and the appointment of home missionary secretaries (now personal ministries directors) in each conference mission, or union organization. Many of the local T. and M. Societies had continued to function; these and others newly established came to be called church missionary societies, embracing the entire church membership. The weekly society meetings became the 10-minute missionary service (now Church Ministries period) for promoting lay evangelism, held between the Sabbath school and church services. The librarian was replaced by what was called the local home missionary leader and the church missionary secretary. Later the first Sabbath (instead of the fourth Sabbath) of the month was designated Home Missionary Day, on which the offering, if not always the sermon, was to be devoted to local lay activities.

The conference societies, as distributors of publications to local churches and to colporteurs, later became Book and Bible Houses, and still later, Adventist Book Centers.

Tract Distribution

TRACT DISTRIBUTION. See Missionary Literature.

Tract Society

TRACT SOCIETY. See Adventist Book Center.

Tracts

TRACTS. See Missionary Literature; [Present Truth \[2\]](#).

Trade Books

TRADE BOOKS. In Seventh-day Adventist usage, books published by the denominational publishing houses mainly for circulation among the church membership. At times the same book may be available in subscription and textbook editions, as well.

Trano Fanontam-Printy Adventista

TRANO FANONTAM-PRINTY ADVENTISTA. See Adventist Printing House \(Madagascar\).

Trans-Africa Division

TRANS-AFRICA DIVISION. A former large unit of church organization to which was allotted the territory of Botswana (formerly Bechuanaland), Burundi, Lesotho, Malawi, Namibia (formerly South-West Africa), Republic of South Africa, Rwanda, Swaziland, Zaïre (formerly Congo), Zambia, Zimbabwe, and the islands of Ascension, St. Helena, and Tristan da Cunha. Headquarters were located at Princess Drive and Enterprise Road, Highlands, Harare, Zimbabwe. Northern Area: Robins Road, Kabula Hill, Blantyre, Malawi. Official organ: Trans-Africa Division Outlook.

The division was organized in 1920 and named the African Division, replacing the South African Union Conference. It then comprised three conferences and 16 missions, with 52 churches and 2,705 members. In 1931 it was renamed the Southern African Division, and in 1964 it became the Trans-Africa Division with one union conference and six union missions consisting of 1,370 churches with a membership of 214,948. During its nineteen-year history, the division experienced a number of territorial changes. The conference and unions that were a part of the Trans-Africa Division when it was dissolved were Central African Union Mission, South African Union Conference, South-East Africa Union Mission, Southern Union Mission, Zaïre Union Mission, Zambesi Union Mission, and Zambia Union.

In 1969 the East African Union, for political reasons, was detached from the division and administrated as an unattached union by the General Conference. Then in 1970 the Tanzania Union, for similar reasons, was detached from the division and incorporated, along with the East African Union into the newly organized Afro-Mideast Division.

In 1972, for political reasons, the Zambia Union was formed from part of the Zambesi Union.

In 1980 the Trans-Africa Division underwent a major territorial and membership change resulting in the separation of the French unions of Zaïre and Central Africa from the division to become part of the newly organized Africa-Indian Ocean Division.

In 1983 the Trans-Africa Division experienced a dramatic change in its realignment, which led to its demise. The South African Union Conference and the Southern Union Mission were detached from the division and administered directly from Washington by the General Conference.

The remaining constituencies of the Trans-Africa Division, along with part of the Afro-Mideast Division, became the Eastern Africa Division. This marked the close of a 19-year history of a remarkable period of growth and development.

Despite the fact that the division had shared the larger part of its territory, institutions, and membership with other divisions, it ended its existence with 1,199 churches, 185,881 members, three colleges, and two publishing houses.

Division Presidents: W. H. Branson, 1921—1930; J. F. Wright, 1930—1941; N. C. Wilson, 1941—1942; C. W. Bozarth, 1942—1952; R. S. Watts, 1952—1958; R. H. Pierson, 1958—1966; M. L. Mills, 1966—1980; K. J. Mittleider, 1980—1983.

Trans-Africa Leprosy Rehabilitation and Research Service

TRANS-AFRICA LEPROSY REHABILITATION AND RESEARCH SERVICE.
See TALRES.

Trans-Australian Union Conference

TRANS-AUSTRALIAN UNION CONFERENCE. See Australia; South Pacific Division.

Trans-Caucasus Field

TRANS-CAUCASUS FIELD. See Armenia; Azerbaijan; Euro-Asia Division; Georgia.

Trans-European Division

TRANS-EUROPEAN DIVISION. A large unit of church organization to which is allotted the territory of Afghanistan, Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Channell Islands, Croatia, Denmark (including Faroe Islands and Greenland), Finland, Greece, Hungary, Iceland, Ireland, Isle of Man, Israel, Macedonia, Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Slovenia, Svalbard and Jan Mayen Islands, Sweden, United Kingdom, Yugoslavia. As of Jan. 1, 1994, the Baltic Union, comprising the countries of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania became part of the territory of the Trans-European Division.

Statistics (1992): churches, 1,075; members, 70,533; church or elementary schools, 58; ordained ministers, 403; licensed ministers, 143.

Headquarters: 119 St. Peter's Street, St. Albans, Hertfordshire, England. Commencing in 1992, the Trans-European Division issues a biweekly official press bulletin, Adventist News Review.

The division was organized in 1928 in the fourfold partition of the European Division. It then was named Northern European Division. During World War II, when unsettled conditions prevented the normal functioning of the division, it was supervised by representatives appointed by the General Conference. When the war ended, the Netherlands became part of this division. In a provisional reorganization in 1946, the British Union Conference became a detached union and the division headquarters were moved to Stockholm, Sweden. In 1951 the division was reorganized, with the return of the British Union, and the headquarters were moved to Edgware, England. In 1965 the headquarters were moved to St. Albans. In 1970 the Ethiopian Union was attached to the new Afro-Mideast Division and, in the same year, the division was renamed Northern-Europe West Africa Division, in order to reflect the growing partnership of the West African territories.

Further territorial realignment at the time of the GC session in 1985 reduced the size of the division to a third of its previous membership and aligned West African Mission territories with a new division in Africa. Since then the division has functioned under the name Trans-European Division. In 1986 the countries of Afghanistan, Albania, Greece, Hungary, Israel, Pakistan, and Yugoslavia were assigned to the division.

With the fall of Communism, former Eastern Bloc countries opened up and traditional evangelistic campaigns continue to be part of a strong emphasis on evangelism with some large baptisms being televised nationally. Radio stations and production studios further strengthen the evangelism outreach in most of the countries of the division.

The division continues to be a major resource area for the world field, providing missionary personnel and finance from both the membership and Western European governmental agencies prepared to channel funds through the church for projects in the developing countries.

Civil war between Serbs and Croatians has resulted in the necessity of creating two new organizations, namely the Croatian-Slovenian Conference and the Macedonian Mission. These are attached directly to the division.

One country remains unentered in 1993. Afghanistan, lying across the border from Pakistan, is the victim of strife between warring factions that has made it impossible to even bring humanitarian aid into the country at the present time.

The rebirth of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Albania has been a highlight of this quinquennium (see Albania).

Constituent Organizations

Constituent Organizations. The Trans-European Division is composed of nine union conferences, one union section, one union of churches, four attached fields, and two attached conferences.

1. Baltic Union Conference (organized 1924; reorganized 1989). Territory: Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. Statistics (1992): churches, 61; members, 5,334; church or elementary schools, 1; ordained ministers, 40; licensed ministers, 24. Headquarters: Riga, Latvia.

Constituent organizations and their territories—Estonian Conference (organized 1920): Estonia; Latvian Conference (organized 1920; reorganized 1979, 1994): Latvia; Lithuanian Field (organized 1994): Lithuania.

2. British Union Conference (organized 1902; reorganized 1920). Territory: England, Ireland, Northern Ireland, Scotland, Wales, and adjacent islands. Statistics (1992): churches, 213; members, 18,200; church or elementary schools, 6; ordained ministers, 116; licensed ministers, 39. Headquarters: Watford.

Constituent organizations and their territories—Irish Mission (organized 1902; reorganized 1952): the six counties of Northern Ireland (Antrim, Armagh, Derry, Down, Fermanagh, and Tyrone), together with Ireland. North England Conference (organized 1902; reorganized 1928, 1975, and 1991): the English counties of Cheshire, Cleveland, Cumbria, Derbyshire, Durham, Greater Manchester, Hereford and Worcestershire (east of a line due north of the East Gwent Border), Humberside, Lancashire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Merseyside, North Yorkshire, Northamptonshire, Northumberland, Nottinghamshire, South Yorkshire, Staffordshire, Tyne and Wear, Warwickshire, West Midlands, and West Yorkshire, and the Isle of Man. Scottish Mission (organized 1902; reorganized 1991): Scotland. South England Conference (organized 1898; reorganized 1928): the English counties of Avon, Bedfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Cambridgeshire, Cornwall, Devonshire, Dorset, East Sussex, Essex, Gloucestershire, Greater London, Hampshire, Hertfordshire, Kent, Norfolk, Oxfordshire, Somerset, Suffolk, Surrey, West Sussex, Wiltshire, Isles of Scilly, Isle of Wight, and the Channel Islands. Welsh Mission (organized 1902; reorganized 1928): Wales and the English counties of Hereford and Worcester (west of a line due north of the East Gwent Border) and Shropshire.

3. Danish Union of Churches (organized 1880; reorganized 1931, 1992). Territory: Denmark, Greenland, and Faroe Islands. Statistics (1992): churches, 53; members, 3,105; church or elementary schools, 7; ordained ministers, 29; licensed ministers, 9. Headquarters: Naerum.

4. Finland Union Conference (organized 1909; reorganized 1929, 1955, 1982, 1991). Territory: Finland. Statistics (1992): churches, 67; members, 6,126; church or elementary schools, 3; ordained ministers, 20; licensed ministers, 10. Headquarters: Turku.

Constituent organizations and their territories—Finland Finnish Conference (organized 1909; reorganized 1929, 1946, 1991): Finland (except Lapland). Finland Swedish Conference (organized 1909; reorganized 1929, 1982): Swedish-speaking areas of Finland. Lapland Mission (organized 1982): Lapland.

5. Hungarian Union Conference (organized 1912; reorganized 1966, 1984). Territory: Hungary. Statistics (1992): churches, 118; members, 4,462; ordained ministers, 23; licensed ministers, 25. Headquarters: Budapest.

Constituent organizations and their territories—Duna Conference (organized 1967; reorganized 1977, 1984): Bacs-Kiskun, Baranya, Budapest, Fejer, Gyor-Moson-Sopron, Komarom-Esztergom, Nograd, Pest, Somogy, Tolna, Vas, Veszprem, and Zala. Tisza Conference (organized 1967; reorganized 1977, 1984): Bekes, Borsod-Abauj-Zemplen, Csongrad, Hajdu-Bihar, Heves, Jasz-Nagykun-Szolnok, and Szabolcs-Szatmar-Bereg.

6. Netherlands Union Conference (organized 1938; reorganized 1973). Territory: Netherlands. Statistics (1992): churches, 49; members, 4,213; church or elementary schools, 1; ordained ministers, 26; licensed ministers, 3. Headquarters: Bosch en Duin.

7. Norwegian Union Conference (organized 1931; reorganized 1992). Territory: Norway. Statistics (1992): churches, 71; members, 5,396; church or elementary schools, 10; ordained ministers, 31; licensed ministers, 14. Headquarters: Oslo.

Constituent organizations and their territories—East Norway Conference (organized 1887; reorganized 1942): East Norway. North Norway Conference (organized 1929; reorganized 1942): North Norway. West Norway Conference (organized 1942): West Norway.

8. Pakistan Union Section (organized 1949). Territory: Afghanistan and Pakistan. Statistics (1992): churches, 50; members, 8,955; church or elementary schools, 27; ordained ministers, 29; licensed ministers, 1. Headquarters: Lahore.

Constituent organizations and their territories—Northern Section (organized 1952; reorganized 1978): Punjab and the Northwest Frontier Province. Southern Section (organized 1978): Sind and Baluchistan.

9. Polish Union Conference (organized 1921). Territory: Poland. Statistics (1992): churches, 105; members, 5,227; ordained ministers, 34; licensed ministers, 22. Headquarters: Warsaw.

Constituent organizations and their territories—East Polish Conference (organized 1927; reorganized 1946): districts of Biala Podlaska, Bialystok, Chelm, Ciechanow, Lodz, Lomza, Lublin, Olsztyn, Ostroleka, Piotrkow, Plock, Radom, Siedlce, Sieradz, Skierniewice, Suwalki, Warszawa, and Zamosc. South Polish Conference (organized 1920; reorganized 1946): districts of Bielsko-Biala, Czestochowa, Katowice, Kielce, Krakow, Krosno, Nowy Sacz, Opole, Przemysl, Rzeszow, Tarnobrzeg, and Tarnow. West Polish Conference (organized 1918; reorganized 1946): districts of Bydgoszcz, Elblag, Gdansk, Gorzow, Jelenia Gora, Kalisz, Konin, Koszalin, Legnica, Leszno, Pila, Poznan, Slupsk, Szczecin, Torun, Walbrzych, Wloclawek, Wroclaw, and Zielona Gora.

10. South-East European Union Conference (organized 1925; reorganized 1992). Territory: Bosnia and Herzegovina, Yugoslavia. Statistics (1992): churches, 190; members, 7,105. Headquarters: Belgrade.

Constituent organizations and their territories—North Conference (organized 1925): Vojvodina. South Conference (organized 1931): Serbia. Southwest Conference (organized 1956): Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Montenegro.

11. Swedish Union Conference (organized 1901; reorganized 1969, 1982). Territory: Sweden. Statistics (1992): churches, 47; members, 3,259; church or elementary schools, 1; ordained ministers, 23; licensed ministers, 12. Headquarters: Stockholm.

12. Attached Fields (under the direct supervision of the division) and their territories:

a. Albanian Mission of Seventh-day Adventists (established 1992; organized 1994). Territory: Albania. Statistics (1992): churches, 1; members, 98; ordained ministers, 2. Headquarters: Tiran'.

b. Croatian-Slovenian Conference (organized 1925; reorganized 1992). Territory: Croatia and Slovenia. Statistics (1992): churches, 92; members, 3,398; ordained ministers, 31; licensed ministers, 5. Headquarters: Zagreb, Croatia.

c. Greek Mission (established 1903). Territory: Greece. Statistics (1992): churches, 7; members, 322; ordained ministers, 5; licensed ministers, 1. Headquarters: Athens.

d. Iceland Conference (entered 1897; organized 1914). Territory: Iceland. Statistics (1992): churches, 8; members, 557; church or elementary schools, 1; ordained ministers, 5. Headquarters: Reykjavik.

e. Israel Field (organized 1931). Territory: Israel. Statistics (1992): churches, 5; members, 110; ordained ministers, 1; licensed ministers, 2. Headquarters: Jerusalem.

f. Macedonian Mission (established 1993). Territory: Macedonia. Statistics (1993): churches, 10; members, 366; ordained ministers, 4; licensed ministers, 1. Headquarters: Skopje.

Institutions

Institutions. The following institutions operate in the area of the Trans-European Division:

Educational Institutions. Adventist Seminary (Croatia); Adventist Theological Seminary (Yugoslavia); Danish Junior College; Home Study International (Trans-European Branch) (United Kingdom); Finland Junior College; Iceland Secondary School; John Loughborough School (United Kingdom); Netherlands Junior College; Newbold College (United Kingdom); Norwegian Junior College; Pakistan Adventist Seminary; Polish Spiritual Seminary; Skodsborg Physiotherapy School (Denmark); Stanborough School (United Kingdom); Swedish Junior College and Seminary; Theological Academy (Hungary); Theological Institute (Yugoslavia); Ellen G. White Research Centre (United Kingdom).

Food Companies. Esdakost Food Company (Sweden); Swedish Nutana Food Company; The Healthy Kitchen Food Company (Sweden).

Health Care. Health Education Center (Israel); Hopeaniemi Sanitarium (Finland); Hultafors Health Centre and Hospital (Sweden); Karachi Adventist Hospital (Pakistan); North Norway Rehabilitation Center; Nyhyttan Health and Rehabilitation Center (Sweden); Roundelwood (Scotland); Skogli Health and Rehabilitation Center (Norway).

Retirement Homes and Orphanages. Dell Residential Care Home (United Kingdom); Mosserod Old People's Home (Mosserod Aldersheim) (Norway); Netherlands Old People's Home (Vredenoord); Netherlands Old People's Home (Walterbosch); Old People's Home (Adventkirkens Eldresenter) (Norway); Old People's Home (Adventtikirkon Vanhainkoti) (Finland); Old People's Home (Konak) (Yugoslavia); Old People's Home (Solbakken Plejehjem) (Denmark); Old People's Home (Sondervang Plejehjem) (Denmark); Polish Old People's Home (Samarytanin); Sakshus Old People's Home (Norway); Tass Old People's Home (Hungary).

Publishing. Advent Publishing House (Hungary); Croatian-Slovenian Publishing House; Danish Publishing House; Finland SDA Publishing House; Iceland Publishing House; Light House Publishing Company (Greece); Netherlands Adventist Publications; Norwegian Publishing House; Polish Publishing House; Qasid Publishing House (Pakistan); Stanborough Press Limited (United Kingdom); Swedish Union Publishing Service; Yugoslavian Publishing House.

Study Centers (not operated by the Trans-European Division but located in its territory): Global Centre for Islamic Studies (Newbold College); Jerusalem Study Center (Israel).

History

History. For the history of the work in the Trans-European Division, see specific names of countries in the area of the division.

Presidents: Trans-European Division: L. H. Christian, 1929—1936; W. E. Read, 1936—1941; (no report because of war 1943—1946); G. A. Lindsay, 1947—1950; A. F. Tarr, 1950—1962; E. E. Roenfelt, 1962—1966; W. D. Eva, 1966—1970.

Northern Europe-West Africa Division: W. D. Eva, 1970—1973; Alf Lohne, 1973—1975; W.R.L. Scragg, 1975—1980.

Northern European Division: W.R.L. Scragg, 1980—1983; J. Paulsen, 1983—1985.

Trans-European Division: J. Paulsen, 1985— .

Transgression of Desolation

TRANSGRESSION OF DESOLATION. See Abomination of Desolation.

Transjordan

TRANSJORDAN. See Jordan.

Translation

TRANSLATION. The bodily transport of human beings from earth to heaven without experiencing death. The term was first used in this sense in Wycliffe’s translation of Heb. 11:5: “Bei feith ennok was translatic: that he schulde not se deeth, and he was not founden, for the lord translited hym, for bifor translacioun he hadde witnessynge: that he plesid god.” The NT word metatithēmi, “to translate,” means “to remove from one place to another,” “to transfer,” “to take up.” The only two specific examples of translation recorded in the Bible are those of Enoch (Gen. 5:24; Heb. 11:5) and Elijah (2 Kings 2:11). At the second coming of Christ the living saints will be translated to heaven without seeing death (1 Thess. 4:17; 1 Cor. 15:51—53).

The transfiguration of Jesus provided a miniature representation of the Second Advent (2 Peter 1:16—19), while Elijah represented those who are to be translated without experiencing death, and Moses the resurrected saints. Translation includes the transformation of the mortal body into a spiritual body resembling the resurrected body of Christ (1 Cor. 15:51—53; Phil. 3:21; see Resurrection), and a removal of these bodies to the heavenly realm to be united with Christ (1 Thess. 4:17). See Home of the Redeemed; Second Advent.

Trans-Mediterranean Division

TRANS-MEDITERRANEAN DIVISION. The name adopted by the delegates to the 1970 General Conference session to designate the territory comprehended in the former Southern European Division. This unit of church organization functioned from June 20, 1970, to Dec. 31, 1971, when the Trans-Mediterranean Division was merged with the former Central European Division to become the Euro-Africa Division. (See Southern European Division for the history and the Euro-Africa Division for the territory.)

President: C. L. Powers, 1970—1971.

Trans-Orange Conference

TRANS-ORANGE CONFERENCE. See South Africa, Republic of; Southern Africa Union Conference.

Transportation and International Personnel Service (TRIPS)

TRANSPORTATION AND INTERNATIONAL PERSONNEL SERVICE (TRIPS).

A section of the General Conference Treasury Department devoted to assisting the headquarters staff, Seventh-day Adventist interdivision employees (missionaries), and volunteers serving in foreign service for the church. This assistance includes procurement of airline tickets, visas, arranging for needed freight shipments, and monthly salary payments to homeland bank accounts of interdivision employees.

The director of TRIPS is an associate treasurer of the General Conference. The main office is located at the General Conference headquarters in Silver Spring, Maryland. There are two warehouses used mainly for processing freight shipments for interdivision employees and for shipping goods as ordered by SDA institutions located outside of the U.S.A. These warehouses are located on each coast of the U.S.A.—one in Baltimore, Maryland, and one near San Francisco, California. Each warehouse has a manager and a small staff. Outside of the U.S.A. the division treasurers serve as TRIPS agents for their respective fields.

Trans-Tasman Union Conference

TRANS-TASMAN UNION CONFERENCE. See New Zealand; South Pacific Division.

Transvaal Conference

TRANSVAAL CONFERENCE. See South Africa, Republic of; Southern Africa Union Conference.

Treasurer, Church

TREASURER, CHURCH. See Church Treasurer.

Treatment Rooms

TREATMENT ROOMS. Establishments operated generally by nurses, specializing in physical therapy, hydrotherapy, massage, and sometimes electrotherapy. Often such establishments developed into sanitariums.

Tribulation (preceding Second Advent)

TRIBULATION (preceding Second Advent). See Jacob's Trouble, Time of; Little Time of Trouble; Plagues, Seven Last; Premillennialism; "Shaking Time"; Time of Trouble.

Tri-City Sanitarium

TRI-CITY SANITARIUM. See Illinois Conference.

Trinidad and Tobago

TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO. An independent state since Aug. 31, 1962, composed of two islands separated by a channel 19 miles (30 kilometers) in width, situated off the northeastern coast of Venezuela, South America. Their combined area is 1,980 square miles (5,130 square kilometers). The population (1994) of 1.3 million is composed largely of West Indians of African descent and people from India. English is the official language. Spaniards arrived in Trinidad in 1498 and met Carib and Arawak settlers. The island was captured by the British in 1797. Tobago was settled by several groups of Europeans in the sixteenth century. It became a British territory in 1814.

In 1889 Tobago was incorporated with Trinidad to form the colony of Trinidad and Tobago. In 1976 Trinidad and Tobago became a republic. The Roman Catholic Church has the largest number of adherents; the other religious groups represented are Hindus, Anglicans, Muslims, Methodists, and Jehovah's Witnesses. However, in Tobago the Anglican Church has the largest membership, followed by the Seventh-day Adventist Church.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The republic of Trinidad and Tobago constitutes the territory of the South Caribbean Conference, which is part of the Caribbean Union Conference of the Inter-American Division. Statistics (1992) for Trinidad and Tobago: churches, 123; members, 41,749; church or elementary schools, 17; ordained ministers, 40; licensed ministers, 27; Bible instructors, 21; teachers, 134. Headquarters: St. Augustine, Trinidad.

Institutions

Institutions. Andrews High School; Bates Memorial High School; Caribbean Union College; Community Hospital of Seventh-day Adventists; Harmon High School; Southern Academy.

Seventh-day Adventist Work

Seventh-day Adventist Work. Beginnings. SDA teachings were probably introduced to Trinidad and Tobago through literature sent from Southhampton, England, around 1879 through the efforts of John Loughborough. As early as 1880 or 1881 a group of Sabbath-keepers led by James R. Braithwaite met in Tobago. By the early 1880s SDA literature was sent to Trinidad and Tobago by the International Tract and Missionary Society (ITMS) in the United States. Early in 1883 Braithwaite was badly beaten on another island for proclaiming SDA teachings. In November 1883 the ITMS reported at its annual meeting that literature was sent from the society to many places including Tobago and Trinidad. Unfortunately, the group in Tobago did not develop into a permanent congregation. The first specific positive response to SDA teachings in Trinidad came through a copy of Ellen White's Patriarchs and Prophets, which was purchased by a minister from another island, passed on to a catechist and then to an individual who became one of the first Sabbathkeepers in the island.

An American colporteur, William Arnold, canvassed in Trinidad in 1891 and 1892 selling many copies of The Great Controversy and other books. In 1892 L. C. Chadwick of the ITMS visited Trinidad and reported that Arnold was engaged in literature evangelism. When William Arnold left the Caribbean for England, the Foreign Mission Board invited Charles D. Adamson, a West Indian, to work in Trinidad as a self-supporting colporteur-evangelist in response to a call for further instruction by several Sabbathkeepers. Adamson arrived in April 1893 and made contact with persons interested in SDA teachings, including Louis J. Briggs in Princes Town, St. Clare M. Phipps in Couva, George Maitland in Carapichaima, James Braser in California, and Elvira Nurse in Port of Spain. He organized Sabbathkeeping groups in Couva and Port of Spain. When W. G. Kneeland, an American missionary en route to British Guiana, spent Christmas Day in Trinidad in 1893, he met several persons who had become acquainted with Signs of the Times and other SDA publications.

In February 1894 a minister, Andrew Flowers, and his wife, Rachael, arrived as missionaries. In April Flowers led out in evangelistic meetings in Couva at the Heart and Hand Lodge. The following month two American canvassers, F. B. Grant and his wife, began working in Trinidad. Flowers contracted yellow fever and died in Port of Spain in July 1894, but his wife, Rachael, and the Grants returned to the United States two months later. For the next 14 months there was no SDA minister stationed in Trinidad. However, during that time SDA work was consolidated by Adamson with the assistance of Phipps and others.

The first Seventh-day Adventist church was organized at Couva, Trinidad, with 28 members, on Nov. 23, 1895. From 1896 Stella Colvin, an American nurse in Trinidad, engaged in medical missionary work until her death in 1905. In January 1897 the first Seventh-day Adventist church building on the island was dedicated at Couva. Later, on June 5–6, the Port of Spain church was organized with 18 members. By the end of September of that year members in these two churches and those scattered throughout the island totaled 72. Dr. J. O. Johnston, another American missionary, held evangelistic meetings in Indian Walk. As a result, a church was organized. In 1900 there were about 160 members in three churches, and a church school had been started in Couva. Late in 1899 two Jamaican canvassers worked in Tobago. In 1903 W. G. Kneeland held evangelistic meetings and four persons were baptized. He was assisted by James Mathews, a West Indian, who had been a minister of the African Methodist Episcopal (AME) Church.

Shortly after, another former AME minister, T.L.M. Spencer, took charge of the work in Tobago. In the same year, 1903, the East Caribbean Conference, embracing the territories from St. Thomas in the north to the Guianas in the south, was organized. The publication of the Caribbean Watchman, a 16-page monthly evangelistic journal with a color cover, was so successful that by 1906 a small printing plant was set up at Port of Spain.

Growth and Development. In 1906 Trinidad and Tobago and several other islands were reorganized into the South Caribbean Conference with headquarters in Port of Spain. By the end of 1913 there were 632 members in Trinidad and Tobago meeting in 12 congregations. In 1926 the Caribbean Union Conference was organized, with headquarters in Port of Spain. The following year the union became operational, and the Caribbean Union College was established. During the 1930s several churches were organized in Tobago as a result of the evangelistic work of Pastor T. J. Warner. In 1945 the South Caribbean Conference and other conferences in the region were reorganized as missions.

In 1948 a clinic was established, followed by a nursing home in 1953 (see Community Hospital of Seventh-day Adventists). In 1950 the mission was restored to conference status. By that time there were several talented and articulate national workers, including Samuel L. Gadsby and Charles Manoram. By 1955 three secondary schools had been established (see Bates Memorial High School; Harmon High School; Southern Academy) and there were new developments in youth work, including camping and the Pathfinder Club. In 1966 E. E. Cleveland, an African-American minister, conducted an evangelistic effort in Port of Spain in which 824 persons joined the church. At the time it was the largest number of accessions from a crusade in the Seventh-day Adventist denomination. Since then there have been many outstanding evangelists in Trinidad and Tobago. These have included several American preachers such as George H. Rainey, Ron Halvorsen, C. D. Brooks, and Don Crowder, and Caribbean evangelists Peter J. Prime, Stephen Purcell, K. S. Wiggins, Earl Baldwin, and Roosevelt Daniels.

The work among Indians has grown steadily in central and south Trinidad. Jacob Budhoo has led many Indians to the Seventh-day Adventist Church.

Trinidad Food Factory

TRINIDAD FOOD FACTORY. See Inter-American Health Food Company, Trinidad Branch.

Trinity

TRINITY. See Doctrinal Statements.

Tromsø/Clinic

TROMSØ/CLINIC. See North Norway Rehabilitation Center.

Trucial Oman

TRUCIAL OMAN. See United Arab Emirates.

True Midnight Cry

TRUE MIDNIGHT CRY (1844; only one number, Aug. 22, known; Haverhill, Mass.; edited by S. S. Snow; copy in RH). A four-page issue, in journal form, but not continued as such. However, it was reprinted several times, either separately (Oct. 4, 1844) or in other journals, for example, in the Advent Herald, Oct. 9, 1844. The single number contained Snow's exposition of the reasons for expecting the Second Advent on Oct. 22, 1844.

True Missionary

TRUE MISSIONARY (January-December 1874; monthly; Seventh-day Adventist Publishing Assn.; file in RH, GC; circulation c. 2,000). An organ of the Tract and Missionary Society of Seventh-day Adventists, published in order to promote local and foreign evangelism, instruct in the best methods of work, publish statistical reports, and exchange experiences. After one year's existence, it was merged into the Review and Herald. Apparently James White was its editor. The name of S. N. Haskell was also prominent in its pages.

Trummer, Ernest Max

TRUMMER, ERNEST MAX (1875—1960). Missionary, administrator. Born in Germany, he came to the United States when 17 years of age. After his graduation from the German course at Union College, he went to South America to organize the colporteur work there. After serving three years as president of the West Caribbean Conference, he went late in 1921 to open Seventh-day Adventist work in Bogotá, Colombia. He encountered fierce opposition even to the point of imprisonment, but when he retired in 1942 there were more than 2,000 SDA members in that country. After his retirement he worked for 12 years in the Paradise Valley Sanitarium and Hospital.

Truong Co Doc

TRUONG CO DOC. See Saigon Adventist School.

Trust Services

TRUST SERVICES. A specialized service at every level of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, whereby individuals and families may give their continuing support to God's work through trusts, annuities, wills, and other special gifts.

History

History. Seventh-day Adventists believe in a wholistic view of stewardship. Primary emphasis is given to present giving, with the church also stressing the wise handling of accumulated assets and remembering the Lord's work by wills. James White insisted that a proper legal organization was necessary to accomplish this (Review and Herald, Apr. 26, 1860). He realized the importance of the principles that his wife, Ellen White, had set forth from 1858 onward in connection with wisely considering one's final distribution at death (1T 199, 200; 3T 117—123; 4T 478—483; CS 323—335).

Many church members responded in the late 1800s by leaving a portion of their estates to the work of the church. In addition, starting in the 1890s, a number of members signed gift annuity agreements in which they donated an amount to church organizations, but received back a stipulated payment for life. (See Wills, Charitable Gift Annuities, Trusts, Life Income and Other Charitable Agreements.) This plan later was endorsed by the General Conference in a 1933 pamphlet. Conferences usually appointed a part-time or retired person to encourage members to remember the larger family of God in their estate plans.

In the 1960s the existing basic organization for Trust Services came into being. At Autumn Council it was voted to recommend "that each union conference strongly promote gifts, annuities, and trust agreements in their respective fields," and added that proper personnel be secured for both union and local conferences. This was the first time substantial numbers of full-time employees were utilized by the church in this area. The General Conference Working Policy (1992—1993) defines the work of Trust Services by stating that it "provides the means whereby individuals and families may, through the avenues of special gifts, trusts, annuities, and bequests, give their continuing wholehearted support to God's work" (p. 251).

General Conference Trust Services Organization

General Conference Trust Services Organization. In 1966 R. E. Osborn was elected to serve as the first General Conference Director of Trust Services (then called Deferred Giving). He carried this responsibility along with being assistant treasurer. Under his leadership many of the policies of Trust Services were formulated, including investment of funds.

In 1969 A. C. McKee was elected as the first full-time director of Trust Services at the General Conference. He did much to implement the Trust Services program through the entire world field. He was followed by A. R. Appel and then G. T. Carter as directors of Trust Services of the General Conference. Also serving as associate directors have been W. L. Massengill, W. S. Wager, A. W. White, and D. E. Johnston. Trust Services has now been introduced into all the world divisions.

Maturities

Maturities. The past 25 years has seen a phenomenal growth in funds to the work of the church through Trust Services. From 1970 to 1974 the equivalent of $22 million was received. From 1975 to 1979, $53 million; 1980 to 1984, $112 million; and 1985 to 1989, $178 million. The estimate was that from 1990 to 1994, receipts would amount to more than $200 million. While the North American Division accounts for a large portion, the maturities in the other world divisions are increasing. In 1991 the other divisions accounted for 25 percent of the total.

Certification and Accreditation

Certification and Accreditation. The 1984 Annual Council, pertaining to actions for the North American Division, voted an extensive Trust Services Certification and Accreditation program. This came from a realization that one engaged in either Trust Services management or development is charged with a sobering responsibility and accountability. Not only is there responsibility to the church and members but also to the government and third parties. The following guidelines were voted to encourage all Trust Services personnel to achieve the highest professional and ethical level possible:

1. Certification. Within one year of beginning work in Trust Services, all persons in either management or development must be certified. Among the requirements are basic and advanced courses in estate planning and Trust Services. They must pass a certification exam and receive a minimum of 30 hours of continuing education each year.

An internship and reading requirement are also required. More than 250 persons have been certified in the North American Division.

2. Accreditation. Each organization involved in Trust Services is judged by 51 standards as well as generally recognized fiduciary standards to achieve accreditation.

3. Trust Services Audits. The General Conference Auditing Service designated O. R. Caldwell to coordinate Trust Services Auditing in 1986. There are presently 13 auditors in NAD in this area, all being certified public accountants.

4. Certification and Accreditation Committee. As mandated by the 1984 action, there is a seven-member committee to monitor the certification and accreditation, with power to issue accreditation. A minimum of three of the members must be laypersons. Certification and accreditation of Trust Services is now being studied in a number of other world fields as well. (For a summary of the various legal vehicles used by Trust Services, see Wills, Charitable Gift Annuities, Trusts, Life Income, and Other Charitable Agreements.)

Trusts

TRUSTS. See Wills, Charitable Gift Annuities, Trusts, Life Income, and Other Charitable Agreements.

Truth, Sojourner

TRUTH, SOJOURNER (Isabella Van Wagener) (c. 1797—1883). Religious mystic, itinerant exhorter, and lecturer against slavery (also, on occasion, for women's rights and temperance). Born a slave in Ulster County, New York, emancipated in 1828, she set out for New England in 1843 to tell the people their sins, particularly the sin of slavery, and soon became the protégée of prominent New England abolitionist leaders. She was illiterate, but her ready wit, her quaint speech, and her commanding personality could captivate an audience. She could quell a crowd of hoodlums by singing or silence an opposer with sarcasm, as the case might require.

About 1856 she moved to Harmonia, Michigan, where friends from her home county had settled; later she moved five miles (eight kilometers) to Battle Creek, where she enjoyed the friendship of John Byington, Dr. J. H. Kellogg, and other prominent Seventh-day Adventists. There is a persistent tradition, both affirmed and denied by old-time Battle Creek residents, that she was baptized into the Seventh-day Adventist Church by Uriah Smith. This is only one of several aspects of her life concerning which there are conflicting accounts.

Her age, which she did not know, was estimated at the time of death as 108; yet in 1835 she had a letter of recommendation from a former master, in whose household she had been a favorite slave for nearly 18 years, which began, he wrote, when she was 12 or 14, in 1810 (Gilbert Vale, Fanaticism; . . . Narrative of Isabella [1835], vol. 1, p. 11). Her biography, which she sold to support herself, relates on page 13 her emancipation in 1817 when New York law freed all its slaves over 40; yet page 29 puts it in 1828 (cf. pp. 39, 71), when the remaining slaves were freed (Olive Gilbert, Narrative of Sojourner Truth, enlarged and published by Sojourner Truth's closest friend in her old age, a Quaker, Mrs. Frances W. Titus, and printed at the Review and Herald).

When she started for New England in 1843, she gave herself the name Sojourner Truth. Her legal surname, Van Wagener, was that of her last legal owner (but prior to this she had had four other surnames from other masters). She visited two Adventist (Millerite) camp meetings in 1843 (and thus was reported by one modern biographer as having joined the Seventh-day Adventists in Connecticut before Seventh-day Adventists existed); but she did not join the Millerites, and rejected their Adventist views (ibid., pp. 109—112).

The available evidence, pro and con, as to her connection with the Seventh-day Adventist Church, may be summarized as follows: Cited as authority for her baptism is the childhood recollection of Henry Lewis, an aged barber of Battle Creek; for her having been buried from the Seventh-day Adventist Tabernacle by Uriah Smith, a newspaper clipping without date line or identification. For the first event there is no documentary evidence, as the church records were destroyed by fire; against the second there is the contemporary account of her funeral held in the Congregational and Presbyterian church, conducted by the Reverend Reed Stuart and G. B. Stebbins, neither of them Seventh-day Adventists ("Memorial Chapter," pp. 10, 11, added in the 1884 edition of her aforementioned biography). The supposed SDA funeral can probably be accounted for in either of two ways: The report could have originated from the dispatch sent out to the newspapers on the day of her death, in which the reporter remarked that at the funeral, still two days away, the “Advent Tabernacle, which holds 3,000, will undoubtedly be filled” (Chicago Daily Inter Ocean, Nov. 27, 1883, p. 5); or, since it is reported that other churches in Battle Creek held memorial services, it is possible that it was a memorial service that was held in the Tabernacle, which was presided over by Smith.

The SDA publications mentioning her death are completely silent on her church membership. These are: (1) the notice in the Review and Herald 60:765, Dec. 4, 1883, not in the obituary column but in the news notes, referring to her as “the noted lecturer”; (2) the account in Good Health 18:382, December 1883: “Her life was that of a Christian and her death the rest of an aged pilgrim. . . . The funeral address by Rev. Reed Stuart was an able effort”; (3) the biographical sketch inserted into the second printing (December 1883) of the book Sunshine at Home, page 92, for which room was made by the removal of two pages of the first printing—an indication of the high regard in which she was held.

It is known that she was a familiar speaker in the Battle Creek Sanitarium, and it is probable that she frequently attended services in the Tabernacle. The indications against her having been a member of that church at the time of her death do not preclude the possibility of her having been baptized at some earlier time, though that cannot be proved.

Tsuen Wan Adventist Hospital

TSUEN WAN ADVENTIST HOSPITAL. A 118-bed general hospital in Tsuen Wan, a satellite town of Hong Kong, operated by the South China Island Union Mission. Originally known as the Adventist Sanitarium-Hospital of Hong Kong, it opened May 22, 1964, with a bed capacity of 100. The land was made available by the Hong Kong government. Apart from the hospital building, a separate five-story block provided staff housing. Planning and fund-raising had been carried out by Dr. Harry W. Miller since 1959, with help from Ezra L. Longway and Robert M. Milne, all veteran China missionaries. Another floor, with 50 beds, was added in 1970 with a grant from the U.S. Government China Refugee Fund, making it a six-story building. Medical, surgical, pediatric, and obstetric services were provided, with outpatient and dental departments. In 1968 the School of Nursing opened, offering a three-year diploma course. In 1974 the school moved into its new three-story complex, which included a 250-seat auditorium and staff apartments.

In May 1971, with the addition of a second hospital on Hong Kong Island, the name was changed to Hongkong Adventist Hospital, Tsuen Wan Branch. The two hospitals, 14 miles (22 kilometers) apart, were under one administration. By 1983 the difficulties of administration at two sites were recognized and the two branches became independent as the Tsuen Wan Adventist Hospital and the Hongkong Adventist Hospital. The hospital changed from a closed staff system to a community open staff with full-time Seventh-day Adventist staff. Specialty clinics were started, with part-time physicians. An infant health program and child-care service met with great success. Major renovation of the 20-year-old main building was carried out, aided by support from the Chan Shun Foundation. Private and semiprivate wards and central air conditioning were among the significant changes.

In 1986 a 10-story complex was added, providing nurses' residences, administration offices, and other departments. In 1988 the School of Nursing was recognized for the enrolled nurse program by the Hong Kong Nursing Council.

Administrators: P. Tan, 1964—1968; W. Runyan, 1968—1970; R. W. Burchard, 1970—1979; D. L. Dunfield, 1979—1983; F. Yeung, 1983—1992; A. Phua, 1992— .

Tuamotu Islands

TUAMOTU ISLANDS. See French Polynesia.

Tucker, Julius Lafayette

TUCKER, JULIUS LAFEYETTE (1895—1989). Founder of The Quiet Hour. Born in Elk Point, South Dakota, of non-Seventh-day Adventist parents, he later as a youth was baptized into the Seventh-day Adventist Church in the Missouri River by conference president C. M. Babcock. A few days after his baptism Babcock announced to Julius that he thought God wanted the young man to become a preacher. Stunned and doubting that God would want him, he agreed to attend Plainview Academy in Redfield, South Dakota. There he met Ida Jane Stratton, whom he married on July 4, 1917.

For a year he was dean of boys and teacher at Mount Ellis Academy in Montana. The following year he entered into the gospel ministry as an evangelist in northeastern Montana, where he was later ordained to the ministry. Nine years later Julius, Ida Jane, and their two children moved to Colorado, then to Minnesota, and then to Portland, Oregon, where he served as pastor of the Central church.

In July of 1937, after being encouraged by H.M.S. Richards, he had his first 15-minute broadcast on Station KEX. The listeners named the program The Quiet Hour, and it soon became a daily, 30-minute program, then a twice daily program.

In 1943 Julius was called to be pastor in Berkeley, California, necessitating the program's reestablishment in Oakland, where it was headquartered until 1954. In 1949 it became a father-son broadcast and also the first weekly television program of the Seventh-day Adventist Church on KGO-TV in San Francisco.

In 1954 Tucker was asked to be pastor of the Emmanuel Missionary College (now Andrews University) church, and again The Quiet Hour was reestablished, this time becoming a nonprofit religious corporation.

After 41 years of service to the church, Tucker retired in 1959 from pastoral duties and moved to Redlands, California, where he gave full attention to his radio ministry. Soon the broadcast became international and the listener-supported ministry's emphasis on missions increased. The Quiet Hour provided world missions with more than 50 airplanes, scores of jeeps, bicycles, and boats as well as sponsoring hundreds of evangelistic meetings and building many churches and jungle chapels. Julius' loving companion was laid to rest in 1979. In 1980 he married Dorothy Came. He served faithfully, coming to the offices each morning until he was past 90 years of age.

Tumbaga Seventh-day Adventist Academy

TUMBAGA SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST ACADEMY. See Tirad View Academy.

Tunesassa School

TUNESASSA SCHOOL. See Union Springs Academy.

Tunheim, Petra

TUNHEIM, PETRA (1871—1923). Missionary. Born in Norway, she came to America while young, and attended Union College. After teaching church school for a time, she went to Australia in 1904 and to Java in 1906. Here she engaged in evangelistic work, and was for a period director of the West Java Mission. After a furlough in America she returned in 1916 to Java, but because of ill health went to the Shanghai Sanitarium shortly afterward. During four years there, she learned Chinese and worked among the Chinese. She died in Singapore on her way back to Java.

Tunisia

TUNISIA. An independent North African republic, bounded by the Mediterranean on the north and east, Algeria on the west, and Libya on the south and east. It has an area of 63,170 square miles (163,610 square kilometers), and a population (1994) of 8.4 million, of whom the larger part are Muslims. Agriculture is the chief industry, with wine, grain, and olive oil the most important products.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Tunisia is a part of Mission and Services in Trans-Mediterranean Countries (MISSERM), which is part of the Euro-Africa Division.

Seventh-day Adventist Work

Seventh-day Adventist Work. As late as 1928 the president of the Algerian Mission reported, "We have one member in Tunisia." That same year Alphonse Gissler settled in Tunis to do evangelistic work, and the next year colporteurs were sent there, and other workers followed. Progress was slow, but in 1937 Tunisia was organized as a mission. A small dispensary was operated for a number of years and made a good impression on the public. At the end of 1947 the mission had one church, in Tunis, with a membership of 60, all Europeans. In 1955 the Tunisian Mission and the Algerian Mission merged to form the Algerian-Tunisian Mission.

Because of political changes, all the members have left the country. Several years ago a suitable property was purchased in Tunisia for meetings, but recently this was taken over by the government. Evangelistic efforts are limited to the Arabic broadcast from Radio Trans-Europe and the Bible correspondence course originating in France, which some hundreds of Arabic students are studying.

Turkey

TURKEY. A republic in the Middle East occupying the peninsula of Asia Minor in Asia and eastern Thrace in Europe. Its area is 301,302 square miles (780,372 square kilometers), and its population (1994) about 62 million. About 80 percent of the people are Turks.

The territory occupied by Turkey has been a part of several great empires of history: Hittite, Persian, Greek, and Roman. In A.D. 330 Constantinople (now Istanbul) became the eastern capital of the Roman Empire. Beginning in the eleventh century, the Turks, who came from Central Asia, overran Asia Minor. From there they entered Eastern Europe and captured Constantinople in 1453. They established their own empire, which at its height in the sixteenth century extended in the west and north to the Adriatic and into the heart of Europe, and in the east and south to embrace the Arab lands of the fertile crescent and the north shore of the continent of Africa.

During the course of succeeding centuries, the power of the Turkish Empire gradually declined, so that by the end of World War I its territory had been reduced to about its present size. At the same time its population became more homogeneous, although it still contained significant groups of Kurds, Arabs, Circassians, Georgians, Armenians, Bulgarians, and Jews. The old Ottoman Empire became Turkey, and in 1923 it became a republic.

During the 1920s, under Mustafa Kemal Ataturk's program of modernization, the Arabic script was replaced by the Latin alphabet; polygamy, the veil, and the fez were abolished; freedom of conscience was provided by law, but proselyting was prohibited to both Muslims and Christians; and the government and education were secularized. This set the pattern modern Turkey still follows.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Turkey comprises the Turkey Section, within the Middle East Union, an attached field of the General Conference. Statistics (1993) for Turkey: churches, 1; members, 14; licensed ministers, 1. The headquarters are in Istanbul.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. Beginnings. The first Seventh-day Adventist to enter Turkey was a layman, a Greek shoemaker named Theodore Anthony, who had migrated from Turkey to the United States and there had accepted the SDA faith. In February 1889 he returned to his native land as a self-supporting missionary. Anthony's arrival in Turkey marked the beginning of permanent SDA work in the Middle East.

Anthony began to work among the Christian people of Constantinople. When his money gave out, he took up cobbling to support himself. Among his first converts was a young Armenian, Zadour G. Baharian, who was convinced by reading and was baptized in 1890.

Baharian went to Basel, Switzerland, and after two years of study and translating returned in 1892 as an SDA missionary.

Publications played a major role in the development of the Seventh-day Adventist work in Turkey. The first tracts in Turkish were prepared by Baharian. While still a student in Basel he duplicated more than 10,000 pages of tracts and sent them to acquaintances in various places in Asia Minor. Upon his return to Constantinople in 1892, he and Anthony immediately scattered printed material widely and soon had more calls for religious instruction than they could meet.

Also in 1892 Baharian and Anthony held the first evangelistic meetings in Turkey, in Constantinople, which resulted in six converts (one of whom later became Baharian's wife). In 1893 Anthony and Baharian held meetings in the cities of Ovajuk, Bardizag, Aleppo (now Malab, in Syria), and Alexandretta (Iskenderun), where the publications had aroused intense interests. Groups of converts were formed in these places, and Sabbath school lessons, tracts, and books held the new members together.

In 1894 Baharian became the first national in the Middle East to be ordained to the SDA ministry. Officiating at the ordination was H. P. Holser, then in charge of the Central European Mission, who visited Constantinople. The two men then made an extended tour of Asia Minor, organizing churches in Constantinople (20 members), Ovajuk and Bardizag (each about 30 members), and a company in Alexandretta, where they had held meetings.

Since the Ministry of Religion in Turkey granted permits only to workers of recognized Christian churches, and since Seventh-day Adventists were not recognized, the work in the early years was carried on largely by lay members, who plied their trade while they spread the SDA teachings. Nevertheless, religious intolerance was encountered and church members suffered imprisonment, exile, and massacre.

Organization. From 1890 to 1898 the work in Turkey was under the supervision of the Central European Mission; then for three years it was under the Central European Union. In 1901 it became a part of the Oriental Union Mission (along with Egypt and Syria) of the European General Conference. Later it was under the Levant Union Mission.

In 1903, when the Turkish government restrained Baharian from traveling about the country, Dr. A. W. George, an overseas worker, was invited to join the Turkish Mission. He arrived in Constantinople that same year and set up mission headquarters there and in 1904 opened a clinic. But he became ill and left Turkey in 1906. The first official workers' meeting was held in Aintab in 1905. Early in 1907 C. D. AcMoody arrived from America to replace Dr. George as the director of the Turkish Mission. In that year Turkey was assigned to the Levant Mission. During the summer of 1907 AcMoody visited all of the churches and companies in Turkey, using a 13-year-old Greek girl of Turkish citizenship, Diamondola Keanides, as his translator. In the fall he opened in Bardizag the first mission school, but became ill and left the country in 1909.

Early in 1907 Robert Greaves, from Canada, arrived in Smyrna to direct the work. When Greaves went to Greece late in 1910 or in 1911, A. Buzugherian, an early convert, took charge of the work. In 1912 Dr. Girou, of France, started a dental clinic in Smyrna, but it was closed when he left.

E. E. Frauchiger, a German-speaking Swiss, came to direct the work in Constantinople in 1909. (When the headquarters of the Levant Union were moved from Hamburg, Germany, to Constantinople in 1910 or 1911 he became president of the union.) He organized a workers' training school, which operated between 1910 and 1912 for short terms only. From this school ministers and colporteurs were sent into the field. In 1909 a book depository was established in Constantinople, and from that year until Turkey entered the war in 1914, colporteurs, although often imprisoned and beaten, traveled through the country placing thousands of pages of SDA publications in the homes of the people. During the massacres of Armenians in 1914—1915, all but two of the SDA colporteurs, Nicolos Trifonides and Dicran Derhousikian, were killed.

In 1912 Diamondola Keanides, a graduate of the American High School at Brousa, was employed to translate SDA publications and mimeograph Sabbath school lessons and tracts. At that time publications were printed in Greek, Armenian, Arabic, Turkish, Assyrian, Greco-Turkish, and Armeno-Turkish. Because Seventh-day Adventists had no presses of their own, printing was done by commercial presses.

During World War I, because of exile, massacres, starvation, and emigration, the membership of the church declined from about 350 to less than 100. By 1920, despite accessions, the total number of members was only 179.

At the conference held in August 1920 at Zurich it was agreed that an orphanage should be opened in Constantinople for the children of SDA parents orphaned by the massacres and exiles. An orphanage, headed by Aaron Larson, was opened in the summer of 1922, but operated only a little more than a year, at the end of which further massacres led to its removal to Thessaloníki, Greece.

By the beginning of 1923 most of the church members and workers, weary from years of tension and fear, had left Turkey. Only one family of national workers, A. E. Ashod and his wife, the former Diamondola Keanides, remained to carry on the work, which from that time has been consolidated almost entirely in Constantinople (Istanbul), although it retained mission status and an overseas worker.

In 1923 the Levant Union was dissolved into separate fields responsible directly to the European Division. In 1928 Turkey was a mission under the Central European Division; then during World War II this was one of the missions for which the General Conference was directly responsible.

Between 1943 and 1948 the Turkish Mission had a national, A. E. Ashod, as its director. In 1950 the Turkey Mission Field came under the East Mediterranean Union of the Middle East Division. In the middle 1950s SDAs built the first Christian church in Turkey since before World War I in Istanbul. Between 1948 and 1959 the only national worker in Turkey was Yebraksi Gomig, a Bible instructor, daughter of the first Turkish convert, but in 1959 Manouk Benzatian, a graduate of Middle East College, at Beirut, joined the Turkish Mission, the first new national preacher in more than 35 years. He later became president of the Turkey Section of the Middle East Division.

During the late 1960s successful temperance work was done in Turkey with the use of films and the antismoking clinics held by Manouk Benzatian, L. C. Miller, and H. C. Lamp. A small medical clinic was opened in 1964 with a young Turkish nurse, Hermine Gomig Tulgar, in charge. Medical services were mainly home nursing. The clinic continued operation until 1973. In March 1965 the first SDA radiobroadcast in Turkey, a temperance program, was aired at Bursa. The first Armenian evangelistic effort to be conducted since World War I was held in Istanbul in 1969.

With the reorganization of the Middle East Division in 1970 the emphasis of work in Turkey shifted to working from outside of the country. Turkish language cassettes were prepared and sold to Turks living in Europe by literature evangelists with good success. Turkish correspondence lessons also were prepared, and a school was conducted from Beirut. In May 1974 Turkish radiobroadcasts were begun from Adventist World Radio in Portugal. In Turkey junior camps are held regularly and temperance work is still carried on, including cooperation between the International Temperance Association and Yesilay begun in 1974.

In 1994 anywhere from six to 15 people worship in the two-story building that houses the Seventh-day Adventist church in Istanbul. In summer there may be as many as 40 visitors. An English language school opened in 1993. It is staffed by Seventh-day Adventist lay professionals. In the nation's capital, a Seventh-day Adventist couple is attached to one of the embassies. A young SDA doctor and his wife did a residency in a Turkish hospital and are involved in a special prayer ministry for the country. ADRA has been serving the Kurdish refugees who fled to the mountainous terrain on the Turkish border after the Gulf war.

A young worker who pastored the church in Kuwait now resides in a Turkish seaport city. An SDA convert among Christian Turks in Ukraine is studying at Zaoski Theological Seminary in Russia.

Turkish broadcasts will soon begin from Adventist World Radio facilities in Novosibirsk, Russia. Slowly the power of living witness combined with personal contact is overcoming the prejudices of centuries in this fascinating country.

Turkey Section

TURKEY SECTION. See Middle East Union; Turkey.

Turkmenistan

TURKMENISTAN. An Asian country occupying an area of 188,417 square miles (488,000 square kilometers). It has a population (1994) of 3.9 million. Its neighbors include Uzbekistan, Afghanistan, and Iran.

The region became a part of Russian Turkistan in 1881, and a constituent republic of the USSR in 1925. Turkmenistan declared independence on Oct. 27, 1991, and became independent when the Soviet Union disbanded on Dec. 25, 1991.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. Turkmenistan is part of the Central Asia Conference in the Southern Union Conference of the Euro-Asia Division. Statistics for Central Asia Conference (1994): churches, 18; members, 1,122.

Turkmenistan is one of the difficult spots as far as the preaching of the three angels' messages is concerned: hot climate, the desert, language barriers, and strong atheistic pressure make the entrance of the Seventh-day Adventist work difficult.

After a destructive earthquake in 1948, Ashgabat (also called Ashkhabad), the capital of Turkmenistan, was under the motto: "Neither a church nor a mosque."

In 1982 Vjacheslav Chubarov's family moved to the city of Ashgabat and began to preach the gospel in a cautious way. This family has lived there for 10 years. The local church in 1993 had a membership of 26. There was no missionary work going on in the rest of the cities and settlements of Turkmenistan. The country has adopted a constitution allowing freedom of conscience for its citizens.

Turks and Caicos Islands

TURKS AND CAICOS ISLANDS. A British crown colony comprising a group of small islands, of which only six are inhabited, at the southern end of the Bahamas in the Atlantic Ocean. Until August 1962 they were a dependency under the jurisdiction of the governor of Jamaica. The area of these islands is 193 square miles (500 square kilometers). The islands were first settled from Bermuda; the population is now more than 11,000. The chief industry is tourism.

The territory of the Turks and Caicos islands forms the Turks and Caicos Islands Mission in the West Indies Union Conference of the Inter-American Division. There is one Seventh-day Adventist church on Grand Turk and two in the Caicos group, with a total membership of 227.

According to a report in the Review and Herald (Nov. 16, 1905, p. 15), a woman on one of the Turks Islands at the turn of the twentieth century had come to recognize the seventh-day Sabbath through reading her Bible. In 1905 or 1906 Philip Porter, from Jamaica, began colporteur work on the islands. He reported a few converts there. Forty years later, in 1945, a colporteur, Clyde Nebblett, and his wife went to Grand Turk, organized a Sabbath school in their home, and enrolled many in the Bible correspondence course. Several months later when a hurricane devastated the island, the Nebbletts moved to Blue Hills, in the Caicos group. As a result of their work there, 26 persons were baptized. In December 1945 these islands, together with Mayaguana and the Inagua islands, were formed into the Salt Cays Mission. In 1946 the first church building in the group was erected. In 1947 Gordon Premier went to Grand Turk; shortly afterward R. H. Pierson held evangelistic meetings there in a tent for a month. As a result, a church was organized and a house was purchased and transformed into a church building.

In the early 1950s the Turks and the Caicos were merged into the East Jamaica Conference, becoming one of its districts, and remained there, with the exception of a brief period of administration by the Bahamas Mission in 1954 through 1964. The territory was organized as the Turks and Caicos Islands Mission Jan. 1, 1965, which continued to operate as a mission until January 1980, when it became a district of the Bahamas Conference. In January 1988 it reverted to mission status under the direction of West Indies Union.

The Turks and Caicos Islands Mission operated one high school. Pierson Secondary School was started in 1971. It was located in South Caicos and was named for Robert H. Pierson, who organized the mission in 1947. Unfortunately, this school ran into financial difficulties and had to be closed in 1979.

Turks and Caicos Islands Mission

TURKS AND CAICOS ISLANDS MISSION. See Inter-American Division; Turks and Caicos Islands.

Turner, Joseph

TURNER, JOSEPH (fl. 1844). Millerite preacher and, after the Disappointment, leader of an extreme splinter group in Maine. He joined with John Pearson, Jr., in publishing the Hope of Israel. In January 1845 he joined Apollos Hale in publishing the Advent Mirror (vol. 1, no. 1) setting forth the view that the Bridegroom of the parable (of Matt. 25) had indeed come to the wedding, in 1844, but not to the earth, and that Christ's intercessory work had ended. Soon afterward he taught an extreme "shut door" view (see Open and Shut Door) and told certain people that they were rejected by the Lord. Though friendly at first, he later clashed with Ellen Harmon and her family and others of the group who became the nucleus of the Seventh-day Adventists. (See 2SG 49, 50, 62, 63, 67, 68.) For a time he held, then abandoned, the view that "the Bridegroom had come" (Day-Star 11:27, Aug. 25, 1846).

Turner, William Gordon

TURNER, WILLIAM GORDON (1885—1978). Evangelist, administrator. He was a young Baptist businessman from Hastings, New Zealand, when he became aware of Seventh-day Adventist beliefs from a Sydney Sanitarium-trained nurse who, with his wife, had set up treatment rooms in the town.

After graduating from the missionary course at Avondale in 1914, he entered evangelical work in his birthplace, Melbourne. His mother-in-law, Clara Greenfield, was one of the first Seventh-day Adventists in New Zealand.

A meticulously organized person and a forceful speaker, Turner soon found himself in church administration, occupying a succession of responsible posts. For two separate terms he was leader of the SDA work in Australasia. In between he was vice president of the General Conference, responsible for North America. He was an active preacher until six weeks before his death at 93 years of age.

Tuvalu

TUVALU. A group of nine atoll islands—Nanumea, Niutao, Nanumanga, Nui, Vaitupu, Nukufetau, Funafuti, Nukulaelae, and Niulakita—lying in the center of the Pacific Ocean between 6 and 11 degrees south of the equator. A total land area of 10 square miles (26 square kilometers) supports 10,000 (1994) mainly brown-skinned Polynesians who depend on bananas, coconuts, fish, and taro for sustenance. Tuvaluan is widely spoken, while English and Samoan are used to a lesser extent.

Formerly known as the Ellice Islands, Tuvalu was ruled by Great Britain from the 1890s and in 1916 was joined with its northern neighbor to form the Gilbert and Ellice Islands Colony. In 1975 the two island groups were separated. In 1978 Great Britain granted independence to the Ellice Islands, which were then renamed Tuvalu. Authority is now vested in a governor general, a prime minister, and an elected parliament.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. From early beginnings in 1946 through mission organization on Jan. 11, 1954, Tuvalu was administered as part of the Gilbert and Ellice Islands Mission with headquarters first on Abemama Island and from 1968 on Tarawa Island in the Gilberts. The mission was a section of the Central Pacific Union Mission, with headquarters in Suva, Fiji. From 1972 to 1984 administrative control of the Kiribati (Gilbert) and Tuvalu (Ellice) Islands Mission passed to the Western Pacific Union Mission, with headquarters in Honiara, Solomon Islands. In 1985, at the request of the members, administration of Tuvalu was returned to the Central Pacific Union Mission, with headquarters in Suva, and was given the status of an attached mission. Statistics (1992): churches, 1; companies, 5; members, 156; primary schools, 1; ordained ministers, 1; licensed ministers, 3; teachers, 1.

Seventh-day Adventist Work

Seventh-day Adventist Work. SDA work in Tuvalu commenced in October 1946, with the arrival in Funafuti of Tavita Niu, accompanied by his family and his father, from Samoa. Both father and son were of Somoan/Tuvaluan lineage. During his little more than three years' stay he encountered strong opposition and persecution.

Seven candidates were prepared by Tavita Niu for the first baptism on Mar. 22, 1949. It was conducted by John T. Howse, Gilbert and Ellice Islands superintendent, who had arrived on the mission ship M.V. Fetu Ao ("Morning Star" in Samoan).

For a number of years the Fetu Ao proved useful in spreading the message among the people on isolated islands of the group, although at times some officials restricted its visits by enforcing the Closed District Ordinance, originally introduced to exclude the Roman Catholic Mission from being established on the exclusively London Missionary Society islands.

The first school offering primary education was taught by Tavita Niu, his wife, Fetu, and two youth assistants. It began on Funafuti in 1948. On completion of his furlough in Samoa, Tavita Niu sailed for Kiribati (Gilbert Islands), where he arrived on July 19, 1950, to engage in teaching work on the island of Abemama.

In Tuvalu (Ellice Islands), church members Tui and Apete, assisted by Luteru and Alefaio, cared for the work of the church on Funafuti, while Ieremaia helped out on Vaitupu. During this year persecution on Funafuti drove Seventh-day Adventists from their homes and onto an island in the lagoon known as Papa Elise. Here they stayed for nearly a year, being blessed by God with sufficient water while Funafuti experienced severe water shortage because of a prolonged drought. In later years the SDA message became permanently established on the following atolls: Nui, 1959; Niutao, 1961; Vaitupu and Nukefetau, 1962; Nanumanga, 1991.

Tuvalu Mission

TUVALU MISSION. See South Pacific Division; Tuvalu.

Twelve Hundred and Sixty Days

TWELVE HUNDRED AND SIXTY DAYS (1260 years). See Daniel, Interpretation of; Revelation, Interpretation of.

Twentieth Century Bible Correspondence Course

TWENTIETH CENTURY BIBLE CORRESPONDENCE COURSE. See Bible Correspondence Schools.

Twenty-Three Hundred Days

TWENTY-THREE HUNDRED DAYS. An abbreviated form of the KJV “two thousand and three hundred days” of Dan. 8:14, literally, “evening morning two thousand and three hundred.” The KJV thus considers “evening morning” to refer to the light and dark portions of a 24-hour day. On the basis of the year-day principle, these 2300 prophetic days represent as many literal years. According to Dan. 8:9—14, this was a period at whose close the sanctuary was to be “cleansed.” Seventh-day Adventists understand that the 70 weeks (490 literal years) of Dan. 9:24—27 were to be cut off from the 2300 years, and that the two periods of time were to begin simultaneously with “the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem” (v. 25). Three such decrees were issued by the Persian kings Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerxes, respectively (Ezra 6:14). Because the first two decrees were only partially effective—as the need for a second and later a third decree indicates—the third decree, issued by Artaxerxes, is taken to be the one specified by Dan 9:25. With 457 B.C. as the beginning date, the 2300 years extend to A.D. 1844. It was this date to which many expositors, including William Miller and Seventh-day Adventists later, pointed as the fulfillment of Dan. 8:14.

Interpretation

Interpretation. The Seventh-day Adventist reckoning of the 2300 days of Dan. 8:14 as 2300 years was inherited directly from the Millerite movement and indirectly from earlier writers of the historical school of prophetic interpretation, which is characterized by the use of the year-day principle. Other schools of interpretation have seen this time period as 2300 literal “evenings and mornings” of desecration of a literal Jewish temple, either by Antiochus in the past or by a personal antichrist in the future.

Many historicist writers on the prophecies in various countries had anticipated William Miller in reckoning the 2300 days as years, beginning at the starting point of the 70 weeks. A number of them had arrived at approximately Miller’s dating.

1. Chronology, From Petri to Miller. As early as 1768 Johann Petri, a Reformed pastor near Frankfurt, Germany, wrote that the 2300 days, or years, and the 70 weeks (490 years) were to be computed as beginning together. He reckoned the 2300 from 453 years before Christ’s birth to 1,847 years after it, and placed the Crucifixion in the middle of the seventieth week (Dan. 9:27) and the Second Advent at the end of the 2300 days, leading to the millennium. A half century later and onward, many expositors dated the period in similar fashion, either 457 B.C. to A.D. 1843 or 1844, or 453 B.C. to A.D. 1847; others used different dates, some ending in 1866 or 1867. The figure 1847 was in many instances (for example, for Petri) virtually equivalent to 1843 because it was reckoned as 1,847 years from the birth of Christ, which was dated in 4 B.C. by the then-popular Ussher’s chronology.

In his Prophetic Faith of Our Fathers, volume 4, L. E. Froome lists about 35 writers between 1810 and 1844 who ended the period in 1843 or 1844, most of them in England, but including some in Scotland, Ireland, Germany, and the United States; about 25 who looked to 1847 (five of them using a supposed 2400—year period), writing in England, Germany, India, Canada, the United States, and Mexico. Not all of these began the 70 weeks and the 2300 years together, and a number of those who ended the 2300 years in the 1840s calculated other prophetic periods, such as the 1290 and 1335 years, beyond the 2300 years to such dates as 1877 and 1922. However, for the 2300 years, there was a great vogue for computing the period as ending in the 1840s, and most writers arrived at that dating by computing from the 70 weeks as ending in the time of Christ.

William Miller arrived at his expectation of the Second Advent in 1843 mainly on his computation of the 2300 years. He simply accepted, without question, A.D. 33 (the Crucifixion date as printed in the margin of his KJV Bible) as the end of the 70 weeks, which he took to be the first 490 years of the 2300—year period. Then, he reasoned, the rest of the longer period would extend 1810 years beyond that ($2300 - 490 = 1810$), and $A.D. 33 + 1810 = 1843$. Similarly, to count backward from A.D. 33 as the end of the 70 weeks, he calculated that this period of 490 years began in 457 B.C. (he merely subtracted: $490 - 33 = 457$). Further, he found the figure “457 B.C.” in the margin of Ezra 7 as the date for the return of Ezra to Jerusalem under the decree of Artaxerxes’ seventh year, to restore the commonwealth of Judah under Jewish law. This decree Miller equated with “the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem” (Dan. 9:25), from which the 70 weeks were to begin. Further, he could see that 457 years before Christ plus 1843 years after Christ totals 2300 years.

These two dates (457 B.C. and A.D. 33) in English Bible margins, derived from Archbishop Ussher’s chronology and generally accepted as authoritative by theologians of that day, seemed to Miller, as to others before him, to make the computation obvious and inescapable.

Miller’s equation $457 + 1843 = 2300$, like Petri’s similar equation $453 + 1847 = 2300$, ignored a one-year difference in computing from B.C. to A.D. dates. This error was to be corrected later by some of Miller’s colleagues (see sec. 3 below).

2. Events at End of 2300 Years. There was relatively little argument about the beginning date, the decree of the seventh year of Artaxerxes, but there was a variety of expectations among expositors in regard to the cleansing of the sanctuary that was to take place at the end of the 2300 years. This event had been interpreted variously by Miller’s predecessors as the purification of the church, the liberation of Palestine from the Muslims, the end of the Papacy or of Islam, the beginning of the millennium, the restoration of true worship, or, in some cases, the return of Christ to set up a kingdom on earth. (Petri, for example, expected the end of the abomination in the church, and the coming of Christ to set up His kingdom and begin the millennium.) Miller held that the cleansing of the sanctuary was the purification of the temple of lively stones—the people of God—through the first resurrection at the Second Advent; later he included the cleansing of Palestine (the place of God’s sanctuary) and of the whole earth in the final fires. This fiery cleansing, he held, would destroy the last trace of sin and purify the earth for the introduction of the divine kingdom, which would last not merely 1,000 years, but throughout eternity.

The Millerite view differed from all the rest in equating the end of the 2300 days with the end of probation, the end of this world and its mortal, sinful inhabitants, and the ushering in of the eternal kingdom of the glorified saints on the renewed earth. See Millerite Movement.

3. Millerite Revision From 1843 to 1844. Miller came to define his “about 1843” as the “Jewish year 1843,” which he thought extended from equinox to equinox, Mar. 21, 1843, to Mar. 21, 1844. However, beginning in 1843, some of his colleagues, especially Hale, Bliss, Litch, and others, began to reckon the “Jewish year 1843” by the Jewish lunar calendar. They ended it (according to the reckoning formerly used by the Karaite Jews) a month later than the modern Jewish calendar with the new moon of April 1844. An editorial, presumably by S. Bliss (in The Signs of the Times 5:123, June 21, 1843), discusses this, and also introduces the idea that Miller’s 1843 is only the 2300th year (and A.D. 33 the 490th year) from 457 B.C., and that the 70 weeks and the 2300 years actually ended in 34 and 1844, respectively. But it was not until later that it was explained why the computation by straight subtraction ($2300 - 457 = 1843$) was a year off.

By the spring of 1843 several articles in Millerite journals pointed out that 2300 full years beginning at any time in 457 B.C. would extend to the same point in A.D. 1844, not in 1843. The explanation was that 2300 years would require 457 complete B.C. years plus 1843 complete A.D. years, which if counted from the beginning of 457 B.C. would continue to the end of A.D. 1843; therefore, if the period began at any point of time after the beginning of 457, it would not end until that same point of time after the end of 1843, that is, in 1844.

(The reason for this is that in historical dating, the year immediately preceding A.D. 1 is called the year 1 B.C., for there is no zero year between; see SDACom 1:178; SDADic “Chronology”; SB, no. 454.)

But already in February 1844 Samuel S. Snow wrote an article using this reckoning of 2300 full years from 457 B.C. (from the autumn, according to his view). Therefore he reached the conclusion that the Second Advent was not to be looked for until the autumn of 1844, and that the sixty-ninth week ended in the autumn of A.D. 27 (Midnight Cry 6:243, 244, Feb. 22, 1844). Little attention was given to this new expectation until the summer, by which time he had expanded his explanation and arrived at a definite date, Oct. 22.

4. Revision of Seventy Weeks. Miller had ended the 70 weeks with the Crucifixion in A.D. 33, but already by 1843 there was discussion of the idea that the cross was in the “midst” of the seventieth week, and authors were cited for A.D. 31 as the Crucifixion date (see Bliss, in Signs of the Times 6:132—136, Dec. 5, 1843).

Now in early 1844 the correction of the subtraction error led not only to the ending of the 2300 days in 1844 instead of 1843 but also to the adopting of several new positions on the 70 weeks:

- (1) that the 70 weeks, or 490 years, ended in A.D. 34, not 33;
- (2) that the Crucifixion took place, not at the end, but in the midst (Dan. 9:27) of the seventieth week, three and a half years before the end—that is, in A.D. 31 (the date being based on William Hales’ New Analysis of Chronology), and that the anointing of Christ (at His baptism) at the end of the sixty-ninth week would leave three and a half years for His ministry before the “midst” of the week;
- (3) that the seventieth week, ending three and a half years later than the Crucifixion, which occurred in the spring (at Passover time), would therefore have ended in the autumn of A.D. 34;
- (4) that consequently the principal points of the seventieth week could be lined up at specific times: autumn 27 (Christ’s baptism), spring 31 (the Crucifixion after a three-and-a-half-year ministry), and autumn 34 (the end of the seven years allotted “to confirm the covenant” by Christ and, after Him, by the apostles).

This lent conviction to the final conclusion that the concurrently beginning 2300 years would also end at a specific time—the autumn of 1844. Thus, even after Miller’s year of 1843/44 ran out in the spring, the end was still to be looked for.

This autumn ending point came to be assigned to the tenth day of the seventh Jewish month as the proper day for the antitypical cleansing of the sanctuary, and the date was calculated to Oct. 22, fixed according to the former Karaite calendar. The preaching of this date resulted in the “seventh-month movement,” which culminated in the expectation of the return of Christ on that day, and in the Great Disappointment (see Millerite Movement). But Miller never set this specific date, and he accepted it only a few weeks before it arrived.

5. Seventh-day Adventist Interpretation of the Expected Fulfillment. With the passing of Oct. 22, most of the Adventists concluded that their chronology was in error, and during the next few years progressively later dates for the end of the 2300 days were advanced by one group or another. But a sizable minority held that the error was not in the reckoning of the period but in the interpretation of the closing event to be expected. Among these were a still smaller minority, the little groups who came to form the nucleus of the later Seventh-day Adventist organization (see Seventh-day Adventist Church). Retaining the Millerite chronology of the 2300 years as revised in 1844, that is, as reckoned from autumn 457 B.C. to autumn 1844, they explained the cleansing of the sanctuary, in terms of the antitypical day of atonement, as representing the final phase in Christ’s priestly work “in the heavens” as “minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle” (Heb. 8:1, 2), which phase they came to define as an “investigative judgment.”

Twijnstra (Twynstra), H.

TWIJNSTRA (TWYNSTRA), H. (1892—1945). Pioneer Seventh-day Adventist worker in Indonesia. He entered denominational service in his native Netherlands in 1913 after studying for the ministry at Friedensau Missionary Seminary. Between 1913 and 1925 he was engaged in evangelistic and pastoral work. He was ordained to the ministry about 1923. From 1929 until his internment during World War II he directed SDA evangelism in several areas of what is now Indonesia, serving as pastor of the Djakarta, Java, church (1929—1934), director of West Java Mission (1933—1934), director of North Celebes Mission (1937—1939), and director of North Sumatra Mission (from 1939 to the time of his internment). He died in internment only a few weeks before the end of the war.

Two Laws

TWO LAWS. See Law.

Two Thousand and Three Hundred Days

TWO THOUSAND AND THREE HUNDRED DAYS. See Twenty-three Hundred Days.

Two-Horned Beast

TWO-HORNED BEAST. See Revelation, Interpretation of.

Tyrifjord Videregaende Skole

TYRIFJORD VIDEREGAENDE SKOLE. See Norwegian Junior College.

U

Ubol Mission Clinic

UBOL MISSION CLINIC. See Thailand.

Ucayali Adventist Academy

UCAYALI ADVENTIST ACADEMY (Colegio Adventista de Ucayali). A day academy at the senior high school level in the Peruvian jungle, 500 miles (800 kilometers) northwest of Lima, in the city of Pucallpa, Peru, on the banks of the Ucayali River.

The city of Pucallpa has approximately 157,000 inhabitants. The Seventh-day Adventist Church membership in the city is 7,618. A highway from Lima to the Andes reaches Pucallpa, and several airlines connect Pucallpa with the main cities of Peru.

The school was opened on Apr. 14, 1966, with 61 students. The enrollment in 1993 was 202. The property contains 13,988 square feet (1,300 square meters), 2,582 square feet (240 square meters) of which are occupied by classrooms and administration facilities. The library has 532 books.

Uelzen Old People's Home

UELZEN OLD PEOPLE'S HOME. An old people's home with a nursing station operated by the North German Union. The home is located at the edge of the city of Uelzen, Germany, in the Lueneburger Heide region (between Hamburg and Hannover), an area especially renowned for its beauty, and was opened Oct. 1, 1969.

The home cares for approximately 110 people. Each individual has a personal apartment. There are five larger apartments for married couples. Twenty-two beds are reserved for those needing special care. All the apartments are equipped with their own sanitary facilities. Roomy living rooms and balconies are provided for the occupants. All the rooms are well ventilated, and are equipped with an intercom system. There is a wooded city park nearby where the residents of the home enjoy going for walks.

Superintendents: Herbert and Gisela Wagner, 1969—1980; Wolfgang and Erna Thieme, 1980— .

Uganda

UGANDA. An East African kingdom (formerly a British protectorate, 1893—1962), an independent state since 1962. The equator runs through its southern part. It has an area of 93,981 square miles (243,410 square kilometers) and a population (1994) of approximately 19.8 million. The population is made up of various tribes, including Bantu, Nilotic, and Nilo-Hamitic groups. Agriculture is the principal occupation of the people, bananas being one of the staple articles of diet. The two principal export crops are cotton and coffee. More than 70 percent of the people profess Christianity; the rest are either Muslim or animist. The country is bounded on the north by the Sudan, on the east by Kenya, on the south by Lake Victoria, Tanzania, and Rwanda, and on the west by Zaire.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Uganda constitutes the Uganda Union Mission, having attained that status in 1987, which is part of the Eastern Africa Division. Statistics (1992) for Uganda: churches, 402; members, 75,725; church or elementary schools, 185; secondary schools, 15; ordained ministers, 84; licensed ministers, 53; teachers, 217. Headquarters: Kampala.

Institutions

Institutions. Bugema Adventist College; Bugema Adventist Secondary School; Ishaka Adventist Hospital; Upper Nile Press.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. Beginnings. The first Seventh-day Adventist missionary known to have entered Uganda was E. C. Enns, from Pare, Tanganyika (now Tanzania), who made a journey around Lake Victoria from south Nyanza in 1906. He did not stay long, but preached while he was there. Twenty years passed before the first appointed SDA missionaries set foot in Uganda—S. G. Maxwell and two African workers. W. T. Bartlett, president of the British East African Mission (under the European Division), accompanied Maxwell in the initial search for a suitable mission site, and eventually the Nchwanga estate, 118 miles (188 kilometers) northwest of Kampala, was purchased. The name “Nchwanga” became synonymous with the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Uganda, and to this day SDAs are still known to many as the people of Nchwanga. Other African workers came from Kenya and Tanganyika, and these traveled through Uganda gathering many interested groups. Itinerant evangelists widely used a small book printed in Luganda, entitled Omusale Wafe, written by Maxwell.

The first baptism took place near Nchwanga after about two years of work. The first convert was an old blind man named Joshua, who lived at Mityana, 70 miles (110 kilometers) away. In his enthusiasm he closed his small tobacco shop and had his son take him to all his friends to tell them of his newfound faith.

Maxwell paid a visit to the kabaka (king) of Buganda, presenting him with two specially bound books—Ellen White’s Great Controversy and Patriarchs and Prophets. The kabaka later was instrumental in securing for SDAs a plot of land at Mityana when prejudice toward a new church was strong. In 1928 Rye Andersen joined Maxwell at Nchwanga. Andersen was temporarily in charge when in 1929 Maxwell was called to succeed W. T. Bartlett as superintendent of the East African Union (which was then under the Northern European Division). Later, in the same year,

V. E. Toppenberg came to Uganda as superintendent. Shortly after his arrival the field headquarters were moved to a more central location.

In 1932 Andersen went to the Eastern province to open work, and in 1934 established the Kakoro Mission, 12 miles (20 kilometers) from Mbale. He was assisted by African workers H. Guweddeko and K. Kigulla, who went with him to the Eastern province, and by an African worker from Kenya, Ezekiel Rewe.

New Administrative Arrangements. In 1933 the unentered territory of southern Sudan was added to that of Uganda to form the Upper Nile Union, with V. E. Toppenberg as the superintendent. At this time there were three Uganda stations and a membership of 281. During 1935 M. E. Lind came to Kakoro as director and later held evangelistic meetings in a number of places. The work was taken into the northern area when Lind and L. Kaddu held a series of meetings among the Lango people.

The Upper Nile Union (Uganda) was transferred to the Southern African Division when World War II made it difficult to administer the territory from Northern Europe. Another reorganization in 1943 returned Uganda to “field” status, with G. A. Lewis as president, and it became part of the new East African Union. In this same year F. H. Muderspach established the Katikamu Mission in the Central province and M. E. Lind went to open work in the Western province. At Kazingo the king of Toro gave a plot of land on which a church was built. In 1948 an estate was bought about 11 miles (17 kilometers) from Fort Portal among the foothills of the Ruwenzori Mountains. On this estate the Ruwenzori Station was opened.

In 1943 the first five Uganda workers were ordained to the ministry. In 1955 Kakoro Station in the Eastern province was placed under the care of an African director Y. Bamanya. In 1963 D. Bazzarra became the first African president of the Uganda Field.

A training school built at Nchwanga was later merged with the Bugema Training School, now Bugema Adventist College. In 1950 the Ishaka Mission Hospital was opened. Most of the stations operate medical work on a dispensary level.

In 1987 Uganda became a union by itself. In 1994 there were four fields and one mission in the new union: the Central, Eastern, Southwestern, and Western Uganda fields, and the Northern Uganda Mission.

Uganda Union Mission

UGANDA UNION MISSION. See Eastern Africa Division; Uganda.

Uitgeverij “Veritas”

UITGEVERIJ “VERITAS.” See Netherlands Adventist Publications

Ukiah Valley Medical Center (UVMC)

UKIAH VALLEY MEDICAL CENTER (UVMC). A 116-bed not-for-profit community hospital located in Ukiah, California. The institution is owned and operated by Adventist Health System/West. Established in 1956 as Hillside Hospital, the facility was relocated and named Ukiah Adventist Hospital in 1980. Ukiah Adventist Hospital purchased the assets of Ukiah General Hospital in 1988, and the consolidated facilities became Ukiah Valley Medical Center—the sole provider of acute care in Ukiah (a town located at the foot of the Redwoods in Mendocino County with a population of 15,000 and a service area along the Highway 101 corridor of more than 60,000).

The hospital currently operates on two separate sites with all acute-care and 24-hour emergency services located at one site and outpatient surgery, obstetrics, neonatal, and pediatric services at the other. UVMC's staff and technology are well above that found in most rural settings. Some of its state-of-the-art technology and services include a CT scanner, MRI, lithotripsy (noninvasive removal of kidney stones), SPECT nuclear medicine imaging, family-oriented birthing center and Level II nursery, laser surgery, mammography program accredited by the American College of Radiology, cardiac catheterization laboratory, and donor blood bank. Other services include cardiac and pulmonary rehabilitation and an active community health education program.

UVMC's philosophy strives for a balance of physical, mental, and spiritual health through the prevention and treatment of disease. The employees, physicians, and volunteers of UVMC are committed to meeting the health-care needs of their community by offering a wide range of services. The hospital team is comprised of 520 full-time, part-time, and contingent employees; 54 volunteers (who donate approximately 9,000 hours of service each year), and more than 60 active members on the medical staff. UVMC is accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Health Care Organizations, fully licensed by the California State Department of Health and the California Medical Association, and certified by the Department of Health and Human Services for participation in the Medicare program.

Administrators: Daniel A. Ballew, 1980—1982; Edwin L. Ermslar, 1982—1989; ValGene Devitt, 1989— .

Ukraine

UKRAINE. A European country with an area of 233,100 square miles (603,729 square kilometers). The population in 1994 was 51.9 million. Its neighbors include Russia, Moldova, Romania, Hungary, Slovakia, and Poland.

In 1939 Ukraine was the first European state to wage war against Nazi-led aggression in the region. More than 5 million Ukrainians lost their lives during World War II, in which they also fought against the Soviets. Ukraine was occupied by the Soviet Union in 1944.

Ukrainian independence was restored on Aug. 24, 1991, by means of a national referendum.

Ukraine is one of the larger European countries. It has the longest borderline with Russia, and also touches on Belarus, Poland, Romania, Moldova, Hungary, and Slovakia.

Ukraine is the land of origin of many ethnic groups. The most common are the Ukrainians and Russians; also included are the Moldovans, Poles, Romanians, Tatars, Hungarians, Bulgarians, Greeks, Germans, Jews, Slovaks, and Czechs. The Russian Orthodox Church has a ruling influence in Ukraine, but the Greek Orthodox and Roman Catholic churches are growing more powerful. Baptists, Pentecostals, and Jehovah's Witnesses are the most common Protestant denominations. Many of the Crimean Tatars are Muslims.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of the Ukraine constitutes the Ukrainian Union Conference, which in turn is part of the Euro-Asia Division. Statistics (1993) for the Ukraine: churches, 349; members, 27,363; ordained ministers, 79; licensed ministers, 132. Headquarters: Kiev.

Statistics for the local conferences—Bukovinskaya Conference: churches, 55; members, 4,598; ordained ministers, 8; licensed ministers, 21. Headquarters: Chernovtsy. Central Ukrainian Conference: churches, 56; members, 4,386; ordained ministers, 11; licensed ministers, 21. Headquarters: Kiev. Eastern Ukrainian Conference: churches, 64; members, 5,678; ordained ministers, 16; licensed ministers, 23. Headquarters: Kharkov. Podolsk Conference: churches, 67; members, 3,623; ordained ministers, 8; licensed ministers, 23. Headquarters: Vinnitsa. Southern Ukrainian Conference: churches, 39; members, 3,148; ordained ministers, 14; licensed ministers, 17. Headquarters: Nikolayev. Western Ukrainian Conference: churches, 68; members, 4,565; ordained ministers, 16; licensed ministers, 27. Headquarters: Lvov.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. Noteworthy is the fact that Ukraine is the cradle of Christianity in the region in general, particularly Adventism. In Kiev, the capital of Ukraine, Vladimir, prince of Kiev, baptized Slavonic peoples in the waters of the Dnieper River. In 988 the Slavs began to be called Christians.

Nine hundred years later German missionaries, Perka and Kandad, preached the three angels' messages for the first time on the Black Sea coast in the Crimea and the Caucasus. After a baptism in 1886, the first Seventh-day Adventist church with 17 members was established in the village of Berdibulat.

At the end of the nineteenth and the beginning of the twentieth century, the message spread quickly in the Eastern and Western Ukraine, Russia, Poland, and other countries. In Ukraine, the Seventh-day Adventist Church went through a difficult time during its more than 100-year-old history. The ruling Orthodox Church was hostile to the church, which had only short periods of freedom. Hundreds of the church members and pastors were persecuted for their beliefs. They spent many years in prison, and many of them died in camps during Stalin's time.

The church was established and developed as an underground institution. Because of that, it had no official organization nor could it enter into the sister churches of the worldwide family of God. The establishment of Adventist Church organization started in 1978 when 11 Ukrainian conferences began to function. Then in the period from 1979 to 1982, the number of conferences was reduced to eight, then in 1991 to six.

In 1988 the Ukrainian Seventh-day Adventist Church Congress took place in Kiev, and the Ukrainian Union Conference was organized for the first time in the history of the church. This was approved at the General Conference session in 1990, and the Ukrainian Union became a member of the worldwide church organization and a part of the Euro-Asia Division.

Thanks to the power of the Holy Spirit, the efforts and finances of the evangelists from the United States, Canada, and other countries, and because of the democratic changes and religious liberty in the country, the number of members in Ukraine has doubled within the past five years.

Ukrainian Union Conference

UKRAINIAN UNION CONFERENCE. See Euro-Asia Division; Ukraine.

Unclean Animals

UNCLEAN ANIMALS. See Diet.

Underwood, R. A.

UNDERWOOD, R. A. (1850—1932). Evangelist, conference administrator. His father, Alfred B. Underwood, a prominent Baptist preacher, became a Seventh-day Adventist in 1864, and five years later his son, after reading a series of articles in the Review and Herald, “Life Only Through Christ,” written by Uriah Smith, accepted the Seventh-day Adventist faith. In 1877 R. A. Underwood entered the ministry in Ohio, but shortly afterward attended Battle Creek College for a year. He was ordained in 1879 and for several years engaged successfully in evangelism. He served as president of the Ohio Conference, 1882—1889; then as superintendent of General Conference District no. 6 (in Western United States and Canada), 1889—1891; of District no. 1 (Eastern United States), 1891—1893; and of District no. 5 (Southwestern United States) in 1893. After serving a short time as president of the Wisconsin Conference (1893), he entered pastoral and evangelistic work in Philadelphia, but after a brief period he became president of the Pennsylvania Conference (1895—1897, 1899—1903).

He became president of the Northern Union Conference (1904—1912), briefly of the West Pennsylvania Conference (1913—1914), then of the Central Union Conference (1914—1920). From 1885 until his retirement in 1920 he was a member of the General Conference Committee.

Underwood was a strong advocate of the tithing system and had much to do with its adoption in the Seventh-day Adventist Church. Because of his administrative and financial abilities, he was often called to fields where conference institutions were in debt and needed his direction.

Unemployment Compensation

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION. Funds paid to unemployed persons by the government to provide financial relief during periods of involuntary unemployment. This subject, which to the casual observer would seem to have no connection with religious freedom, has been the background for the church's most significant contribution to American law on that subject.

Frequently members' employment is terminated because of their refusal to work during the Sabbath. In the United States the ex-employer often challenges that person's receipt of unemployment benefits on the ground that the person is not available for full-time work, or that failure to report as scheduled constitutes misconduct, either of which disqualifies an applicant under most state statutes. In most instances, state commissions reject those arguments and allow the benefits.

The most prominent court case on this subject was that of Adell H. Sherbert, of South Carolina. Mrs. Sherbert became a Seventh-day Adventist in 1957 while temporarily employed in a textile mill five days a week. In 1959 all three work shifts in that mill were changed to a six-day week, including Saturday. When Sherbert declined to work on the Sabbath, she was discharged. The South Carolina Employment Security Commission denied her claim for unemployment compensation benefits on the ground that she refused to accept jobs available to her that required Saturday work and was therefore unavailable for employment as required by law. After that ruling was upheld by the South Carolina Supreme Court, the case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States on the ground that the denial constituted a violation of the free exercise of religion guarantee of the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

On June 17, 1963, the Court handed down its 7 to 2 decision (Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398), which held that a state could "not constitutionally apply the eligibility provisions so as to constrain a worker to abandon his religious convictions respecting a day of rest." Justice William Brennan, writing for the Court, also stated that "... [If] the purpose or effect of a law is to impede the observance of one or all religions or is to discriminate invidiously between religions, that law is constitutionally invalid even though the burden may be characterized as being only indirect."

The significance of Sherbert is that through it the Court stated for the first time a clear interpretation of the free exercise clause. The Court ruled that if a governmental action significantly burdens the free exercise of religion, government must justify its action by showing that it serves a "compelling public interest" that may not be met by any method less intrusive on religious practices. The burden of evidence thus was placed primarily on government to show why the action in question was necessary.

In another important case involving a Seventh-day Adventist, Hobbie v. Unemployment Appeals Commission (480 U.S. 136), the Supreme Court held in 1987 that the protection of religious practices in the workplace extends not only to those religious convictions held at the time of employment but also to those acquired after the beginning of employment, thus broadening the Sherbert rationale to protect not only religious belief and practice but also the right to change those beliefs and practices.

This standard, referred to as the “Sherbert test,” was one of the world’s strongest in the protection of religious practices from governmentally placed burdens. It remained the standard for free exercise of religion cases under American law until Apr. 17, 1990, when the Supreme Court released its decision in the case of Employment Division, Department of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith (110 S. Ct. 1595). In that case, the Court allowed the Sherbert rule to remain the standard in any action in which government allows testimony as to the individual reasons for the conduct at issue, such as being unavailable for work on a given day. But the Court ruled that as to a law or other governmental action that is applicable to all (with no provision for individual exemption) and is not intended to burden religious practice, no religious exemption need be granted. Since 1990 a broad coalition of American religious groups have worked to reestablish a version of the Sherbert test.

Union (Union Conference; Union Mission)

UNION (Union Conference; Union Mission). A unit of church organization formed by a group of several local conferences or missions (or fields, sections, districts, or area “churches,” according to varying modes of organization in different areas of the world), and in turn forming a constituent part of the General Conference in one of its geographical divisions. The union conference organization is similar to that of the local conference, and it is governed by a constitution and bylaws. The president, secretary-treasurer, committees, and departmental secretaries of a union conference are elected biennially by delegates appointed by the local conferences. The executive committee, which has administrative authority between sessions, consists of the union officers and departmental secretaries, local conference presidents, and heads of union conference institutions. The president of the union is a member of the General Conference Committee.

Institutions that serve the entire union, come under union control. The constituent conferences sustain to the union conference a relationship similar to that of the churches to the conference.

In areas in which the church is not self-sustaining, the union organization (called a union mission or simply a union) appoints the officers of the local missions, sections, fields, et cetera; and the union officers, and in some cases the departmental secretaries, are appointed by the division of which it is a subsidiary.

The original union conferences developed from the six General Conference districts into which the United States and Canada had been divided at the 1889 General Conference and the two overseas districts, Europe and Australasia. In 1894 the Australasian Union Conference was formed, becoming something of a model for the reorganizing of districts into unions in North America in 1901 in connection with the General Conference reorganization (see Organization).

Union Adventist Educational Complex

UNION ADVENTIST EDUCATIONAL COMPLEX (Complejo Educativo Adventista Union). An educational complex, including Inca Union University and Inca Union Academy, located in Ñaña, Puru (near Lima). In 1994 there were more than 1,500 students and 120 teachers. The library contains nearly 30,000 volumes.

History. Forerunner of the Union Adventist Educational Center was the Instituto Industrial (Lima Training School), which opened its doors on Apr. 30, 1919, in a small rented house in Miraflores, a suburb of Lima, the capital of Peru, with H. B. Lundquist as the principal and only faculty member. When the news reached the churches that a training school would open, a young man by the name of Agustín Alva and two of his cousins came from Contumazá, Cajamarca, to matriculate in the new school. These three plus another young man who came from Laraos, an isolated town in the department of Lima, constituted the entire student body at first.

The first student to graduate from the school was Agustín Alva, who completed the prescribed secondary course in 1923 and later became a minister. The members of the second (1928) and third (1930) graduating classes all became SDA missionaries. Among them are Mateo E. Aguilar, who was on the faculty of his alma mater for more than 20 years, and Alcides J. Alva, who was president of the school in one of its critical periods, and later director of the Department of Education of the South American Division.

In 1922, 25 acres (10 hectares) of land were purchased in the country between Lima and Miraflores with donated money from an estate. This rural site was considered to be ideal because of its isolation, yet it was near enough to the libraries and museums of the capital. The first buildings—a two-story administration building, a cottage for the director of the school, and the women's dormitory—were constructed of adobe bricks in 1926, and soon after a men's dormitory was built at the far end of the farm about two blocks away. City water and lights were installed about three years later. In 1936 a much-needed chapel and several classrooms were added to the administration building. At first the farm and the dairy furnished the only work for the men, most of whom needed to earn their own way. Later a bakery was started, which became the school's most profitable industry, vying today with a dairy and chicken farm. In 1938, as the result of the Education Ministry's restrictions, the name was changed to Industrial Academy; however, its philosophical development remained unchanged.

In 1941 the school's system of coeducation was challenged, and the school was closed by order of the Ministry of Public Education. During 1942 and 1943 classes were held at night. In 1944 the Ministry of Education granted temporary permission for the school to operate while the proper accreditation was being considered. Also in 1944 the name was changed to Union, "a short, euphonic, and meaningful name." In 1945 a boys' school under Principal César A. Muñoz, and a girls' school under Dr. Jacoba Florián, merged with full accreditation by the Peruvian Ministry of Public Education for the regular five-year secondary course.

In 1945, because of rapid urbanization of the area surrounding the campus, the school was relocated at Ñaña, a short distance from Lima. In 1945 five teachers' cottages, the men's and ladies' dormitories, a building housing the dining rooms and kitchen, and the first floor of the administration building were erected of brick and concrete. The second story of the administration building was added in 1949, followed in succeeding years by an industrial building (bakery and printshop), dairy installations, quarters for married students, and a large auditorium of cement block. When the auditorium was being erected, some pre-Inca archaeological remains were discovered and taken to the school museum in 1966. These findings were classified by the House of Peruvian Culture (Casa de Cultura del Perú) as belonging to the Maranga culture, which developed in the valley of the Rimac River.

As the level of popular education rose with the establishment of new government universities, normal schools, and trade schools, it became necessary for the Inca Union to bring higher Christian education within reach of its young people. Thus a one-year college course in theology was added to the curriculum in 1947, a second year in 1951, a third year in 1959, and a fourth year in 1964; and two-year courses in commercial, secretarial, and normal training were added.

The business course was increased to four years in 1968. In April of the same year an agreement was signed to affiliate the normal school of the college to the National University Federico Villarreal, thus enabling the college to offer four years of officially recognized university training in elementary education. (Because of a change in the national policy on education, this program was phased out in the late 1970s.)

An experimental mission was organized in 1965 to guide and direct the pastoral practice of college theology students. This organization took under its responsibility four churches and 18 groups organized as a mission, led by students sponsored by one of the theology teachers.

On the fiftieth anniversary of the college (1969), the model primary school was inaugurated and roads on the school property were asphalted. Earthquakes on May 31, 1970, and Oct. 3, 1974, seriously damaged the physical plant of the institution, making it necessary to carry out some reconstruction work and build new edifices.

On Mar. 2, 1971, the Union Higher Education Center Association (UHEDA) was made official, encompassing the following schools: Union Primary School, Union Secondary Academy, Adventist Theology University (created to prepare missionaries and pastors for Peru, Ecuador, and Bolivia), Union Teachers' Training School, Business and Secretaries Higher Education School, Union Business Administration Technical Institute, and Technical Education School.

In 1984 the college became Inca Union University.

Principals/Presidents: H. B. Lundquist, 1918—1920; C. D. Striplin, 1920—1925; B. L. Thompson, 1925—1927; D. E. Lust, 1927—1929; E. U. Ayars, 1929—1933; C. H. Baker, 1922—1939; C. D. Christensen, 1939—1942; H. C. Morton, 1942; C. O. Muñoz, 1943—1945; T. W. Steen, 1945; A. J. Alva, 1945—1948; R. L. Jacobs, 1948—1950; G. R. Ernst, 1950—1952; D. J. von Pohle, 1952—1957; D. W. Holbrook, 1957—1959; E. G. Meyer, 1959—1963;

O. Krause (acting), 1963; D. K. Sullivan, 1964—1965; Edmundo Alva, 1966—1972; Eleodoro Rodríguez, 1973—1974; Walter Manrique, 1975—1977; Adalberto Alarcón, 1978—1980; Eleodoro Rodríguez, 1981—1983; Rubén Castillo, 1984—1986; Eleodoro Rodríguez, 1987—1988; Raúl Gómez, 1988—1992; Eleodoro Rodríguez, 1993— .

Union College (Claremont Union College)

UNION COLLEGE (Claremont Union College). See Helderberg College.

Union College (Nebraska)

UNION COLLEGE (Nebraska). A coeducational senior college, situated at Lincoln, Nebraska, supported by the Mid-America Union Conference. It is the oldest Seventh-day Adventist institution established as a college that still operates under the same name and on the same site. During the 1992—1993 school year the college cumulative enrollment, including summer school, was 716; the faculty, full-time and part-time teachers, numbered 73.

The institution confers six bachelor degrees: Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Arts in Theology, Bachelor of Music, Bachelor of Science, Bachelor of Science in Nursing, and Bachelor of Social Work. Majors are offered in 13 fields in the B.A. and 30 in the B.S. Associate degrees and minors are also offered. The library has more than 120,000 volumes.

Union has taken the lead in accreditation among Seventh-day Adventist colleges. In 1905 the college was accredited by the New York Board of Regents and in 1909 was recognized by the University of Nebraska, becoming the first accredited Seventh-day Adventist college. As late as 1924, according to a statement by the board of trustees, Union College was the only Adventist college accredited by the state in which it was located. It was also the first Seventh-day Adventist college to be recognized by the National Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education (NCATE), effective Sept. 1, 1963. Union College is accredited by the Council on Social Work Education, the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the National Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education, the National League for Nursing, and the National Accrediting Agency for Clinical Laboratory Sciences and is either approved by or is a member of numerous other associations and institutions.

History

History. Origin. Union College was founded by the General Conference because of a call for a school to serve the area between the Mississippi River and the Rocky Mountains. In the late 1880s local conferences of this area began to establish schools. In the spring of 1889 W. W. Prescott, General Conference educational secretary, proposed to representatives of the Wisconsin, Minnesota, Dakota, Iowa, and Nebraska conferences that they unite in building one strong college to serve the “northwest,” and at the same time urged at the Kansas Conference session that the conferences of the “southwest” (Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, and Texas) establish a similar school. As an amendment, Ellen G. White, who was present, urged that all of the conferences west of the Mississippi and east of the Rocky Mountains unite in supporting one strong school. Finally the southern and northern conferences in the area agreed upon this plan, and thus Union College was founded. The name Union, applied to the new college long before the existence of a union conference, came about because the institution was supported by a union of effort of the conferences of the trans-Mississippi region. The General Conference, supplying two fifths of the building fund, sent A. R. Henry as its financial agent and general manager of construction, and W. C. Sisley, who had built some of the Battle Creek institutional buildings, as the architect and builder.

Of several offers made by cities of the area, the locating committee accepted the proposal of businesspersons in Lincoln, Nebraska, who offered to donate land for a campus and an additional 230 acres (93 hectares) that could be divided into lots and sold to patrons who would be sure to form a town around the college. The income from the sale of lots, they pointed out, would pay for construction of the plant. This plan was adopted. Enough lots were sold on credit to finish paying for the college; on the basis of the anticipated payments the college was dedicated free from debt. Unfortunately, because of a severe financial panic that overtook the country in 1893, many of the lot buyers allowed the title to their land to revert to the college, thus leaving the institution short of the money. As a result, it was many years before the institution paid off the indebtedness thus acquired.

Ground was broken Apr. 10, 1890. On Sept. 30, 1891, 73 students presented themselves for registration. However, before the school year closed, 301 had enrolled. Because there were no academies and few high schools in the region to prepare students for college, only those who had transferred from other colleges, a mere handful, were of college grade.

The 22-acre (nine-hectare) campus, five miles (eight kilometers) from Lincoln, was situated on an eminence visible from long distances. (This circumstance prompted the name of College View for the growing town that soon became established around it.) The four original large brick buildings trimmed with limestone stood for 60 years before a replacement program was begun.

Since there were large numbers of non-English-speaking Seventh-day Adventists in the area served by the institution, it was planned to make the institution a multilanguage school, with the subjects taught in English, German, and the Scandinavian languages. A primary goal was to prepare students to speak fluently in their native tongue so that they could clearly convey their religious convictions throughout the world. Accordingly, the administration building housing the classrooms was divided: the first floor had two sections entirely separate from one another, each with its chapel. The floors above the first housed the third section, which contained the classrooms and chapel for the English-speaking students. The German and Scandinavian-speaking students also had separate accommodations and had their own dining rooms.

All religious exercises for the college and the surrounding village were held in the college building the first few years of the school's history, but in 1894 the General Conference built a large frame church building known as the College View Seventh-day Adventist Church. It was built in a fan-shape so that no one was far from the platform and yet it provided for a large congregation.

Toward the close of the 1890s influential church leaders launched a reform urging that the Bible be used as a textbook in all classes and that SDA colleges eliminate giving degrees. Union College avoided this extreme position by continuing to use standard texts and to grant degrees. For a number of years during the first quarter of the twentieth century Union was the only degree-granting SDA college.

Enrollment, which had reached a high of 607 (including preparatory) in 1893, fell off with the financial panic and a series of poor crop years until an all-time low of 278 was reached in 1897. Then, gradually, the attendance increased to 595 in 1908—1909. The establishment of independent German, Danish-Norwegian, and Swedish seminaries and the founding of conference academies brought another drop in enrollment to 284 in 1910—1911. As a result, the supporting conferences had to come to the aid of the floundering college with sizable appropriations. In time reasonable enrollments returned. The next low mark came in the Depression year of 1933—1934, with an enrollment of 287.

During the nineties, when enrollment was low, the board leased North Hall to the new Nebraska Sanitarium and in 1905 sold the building to that institution. In order to house the men, the college erected a frame building, East Hall, and finished attic rooms in the administration building for dormitory space. In 1920, when the sanitarium suspended business, the college regained possession of North Hall and made it into a women's dormitory.

In keeping with the spirit of foreign missions, which was early fostered, the class of 1906 gave as a class gift a device known as the Golden Cords. With some changes, it has remained fundamentally the same: The device consists of a picture of the clock tower flanked by maps of the hemispheres, representing the world field, on which golden cords are stretched out from the home base to mission areas. Each spring, at a solemn ceremony, a cord is hung for each former student or staff member who has gone into overseas mission service in the past year. A tip from the end of the cord is clipped, mounted on a certificate, and sent as a memento to the one for whom it was hung.

By 1993, 1,675 cords had been hung. Through the years Union College has been represented by a yearbook, Golden Cords (1917—), and by four periodicals: The Practical Educator (1898—1902), the Union College Messenger (1904), The Educational Messenger (1905—1928), and The Clock Tower (1928—).

Union College made a distinctive contribution in pioneering the training of youth for noncombatant military service in time of war. Such training, given first under the leadership of Everett Dick in 1933—1934, was later adopted by the church as a denominational program under the name Medical Cadet Corps.

The placement bureau, the first among SDA colleges, founded in 1934 under the direction of Everett Dick, grew into the office of guidance and counseling in 1936, and more recently has become known as the Office of Student Affairs. Union College was also the first Seventh-day Adventist school to offer a collegiate nursing program, instituted in 1947. Another first among SDA colleges was the offering of a course preparing for a career in social work, inaugurated in 1953—1954 under the direction of R. K. Nelson. In 1983 Union became the first institution of higher education in the United States to have a computer terminal in every dormitory room. In 1988 Union College donated its radio station, KUCV, to Nebraska Public Radio, which has continued to develop into a statewide public network.

Although Union College was operated primarily by the Central and Northern unions, for years the Southwestern Union teamed up with them in partial support of the institution. In 1915 new articles of incorporation made the Southwestern Union a full partner with the other two unions in the control of the college. In time, however, the Southwestern Union established a junior college, with the graduates taking the last two years at Union. In 1967 the Southwestern Union raised Southwestern Junior College to full senior college status, completely withdrawing its financial support and recalling its approximately 150 senior college students, thereby cutting the enrollment at Union College by that number. That, together with the general decline in college enrollment in the trans-Mississippi region, resulted in a dip in enrollment from the all-time high of 1,313 in 1968—1969.

Improved Plant. The founders built well; from the dedication of the institution until 1937—nearly a half century—no major building was constructed. Since that year a science building, gymnasium, music hall, industrial complex, and health science complex have been built, and three dormitories have replaced the original two. A new library was built and then part of the industrial complex was remodeled to enlarge the library further. A new administration-classroom building was built in 1975, and a new church was completed in 1978. The new church building, with the largest seating capacity of any church in Lincoln at that time, is reminiscent of the old in that it is fan-shaped so that the congregation, for a church of that size, is near the platform. The old church, greatly loved over the years, had stained glass windows. The new has a 180-foot (55-meter) stained glass window facing Lincoln, which depicts the story of redemption. Two large windows in the sanctuary portray the Second Advent and the story of Seventh-day Adventism. By means of this medium, the congregation is continually reminded of its mission.

Presidents: W. W. Prescott, 1891—1893;

J. W. Loughhead, 1893—1896; E. B. Miller, 1896—1897; N. W. Kauble, 1897—1898; W. T. Bland, 1898—1901; L. A. Hoopes, 1901—1904;

C. C. Lewis, 1904—1910; Frederick Griggs, 1910—1914; H. A. Morrison, 1914—1922; O. M. John, 1922—1924; W. W. Prescott, 1924—1925; Leo Thiel, 1925, 1928; P. L. Thompson, 1928—1931; M. L. Andreasen, 1931—1938; A. H. Rulkoetter, 1938—1942; E. E. Cossentine, 1942—1946; Robert W. Woods, 1946—1950; H. C. Hartman, 1950—1957; D. J. Bieber, 1957—1964; R. W. Fowler, 1964—1970; R. H. Brown, 1970—1973; M. O. Manley 1973—1980; Dean L. Hubbard, 1980—1984; Benjamin R. Wygal, 1985; John Wagner, 1986—1991; John G. Kerbs, 1991— .

Union Conference

UNION CONFERENCE. See Union.

Union Conference Record

UNION CONFERENCE RECORD. See Record.

Union Higher Education Center Association (UHEDA)

UNION HIGHER EDUCATION CENTER ASSOCIATION (UHEDA). See Union Adventist Educational Complex.

Union Mission

UNION MISSION. See Union.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS. A former federation of republics, organized in 1917 and disbanded in 1991. See Armenia; Azerbaijan; Belarus; Estonia; Euro-Asia Division; Georgia; Kazakhstan; Kyrgyzstan; Latvia; Lithuania; Moldova; Russia; Tajikistan; Trans-European Division; Turkmenistan; Ukraine; Uzbekistan.

Union Springs Academy

UNION SPRINGS ACADEMY. A coeducational boarding school on the senior high school level at Union Springs, New York, owned and operated by the New York Conference. The campus, overlooking one of the Finger Lakes, Cayuga, is on a 225-acre (90-hectare) farm on the edge of a small village and about 12 miles (20 kilometers) from Auburn, ¼ mile (.4 kilometer) from New York Route 90.

Union Springs Academy originated from the merger of Fernwood Academy and the Eastern New York Academy. Fernwood, first called Tunesassa School, began in 1906 as an “industrial school” situated in Tunesassa, with 12 pupils and C. L. Bowen as manager. In 1910 it became an intermediate school with 42 pupils. Five Indians from the nearby reservation attended, one of whom became active in church work. In 1920 the Western New York Conference raised Fernwood Academy at Tunesassa to a 12-grade school, and the Eastern New York Conference purchased a farm and buildings near Clinton, and started the Eastern New York Academy, with Leon Gardiner as principal, and E. E. Cossentine, Mrs. E. E. Cossentine, Mrs. Florence Booth Miller, and Mrs. Leon Gardiner as members of the faculty.

A fire destroyed one building at Fernwood Academy in 1921. Realizing the expense involved in rebuilding, the conference decided to look for a more suitable site, and purchased that same year for $5,000 the school property formerly occupied by the Society of Friends at Union Springs. This building had been erected by the Friends in 1858—1859 for their Oakwood Seminary, a school founded in 1795. The new academy also acquired the adjacent farm. Recognizing the advantages of having one school serve both conferences, the Eastern and Western New York conferences decided to unite at Union Springs the Eastern New York Academy, which had operated only one year, and Fernwood Academy. On Sept. 4, 1921, Union Springs Academy opened with about 94 students, six of them seniors who graduated the next spring. Claude A. Shull became principal, and William B. Higgins, Gerald Miles, Leon Gardiner, H. M. Fleming, Mrs. H. M. Fleming, Howard May, Miriam Gilbert, Ruth Blakney, Bernice Andrews, Janet Stone, Mrs. Ellis, and Mrs. Shull, faculty members.

A student industry, manufacturing produce crates, was operated from 1953 to 1958, then replaced by the Lake View Broom Factory in the same building. This building was destroyed by fire in 1969 and replaced by the present building in 1970.

A landmark passed when the original academy building was razed in 1961. The new administration building was begun in 1965 and the last phase of construction was completed in 1969.

Principals: C. A. Shull, 1921—1925; G. E. Miles, 1925—1926; L. G. Sevrens, 1926—1930;

C. S. Field, 1930—1931; K. A. Wright, 1931—1936; W. A. White, 1936—1937; V. H. Campbell, 1937—1940; E. A. Robertson, 1940—1944; Adam Rudy, 1944—1945; H. T. Johnson, 1945—1948; V. L. Bartlett, 1948—1951; R. M. Mote, 1951—1953; A. Orville Dunn, 1953—1954; M. E. Moore, 1954—1959; J. M. Davis, 1959—1963; F. S. Sanburn, 1963—1965; O. E. Torkelson, 1965—1970; N. E. Evans, 1970—1973; R. H. Hoffmann, 1973—1976; R. Hricz, 1976—1978; R. Trecartin, 1978—1981; C. Newmyer, 1981—1987; J. Thomas, 1987—1989; O. Roshak, 1989—1993; C. Castle, 1993— .

United Arab Emirates

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES. The former Trucial States, a group of British Protected States until 1971. It stretches along the southern shore of the Persian Gulf between Oman and Qatar, with a total area of about 32,300 square miles (83,600 square kilometers). Its predominantly Arab population (1994) is 2.8 million. It is rapidly developing into a top oil-producing state.

The United Arab Emirates is part of the Middle East Union of Seventh-day Adventists, which is directed by the General Conference. In 1987 a company was organized, made up of SDAs from India and the Philippines. In 1989 the company was organized into a church of about 60 members. In 1992 about 20 members were organized into a company in the Ras al Khaymah Emirate. In the capital, Abu Dhabi, a few Indian SDAs work as educational and medical personnel.

United Arab Republic

UNITED ARAB REPUBLIC. See Egypt, Arab Republic of.

United Kingdom

UNITED KINGDOM. See Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

United Provinces School for Boys

UNITED PROVINCES SCHOOL FOR BOYS. See Roorkee High School.

United Sabbath Day Adventists

UNITED SABBATH DAY ADVENTISTS. An offshoot led by J. K. Humphrey, pastor of a large Black Seventh-day Adventist congregation in the Harlem section of New York City.

The break came in 1929. Humphrey's ministerial credentials were suspended by the Greater New York Conference because of his deviation from denominational practice in promoting private real estate enterprise in his church. Humphrey and his supporters charged racial discrimination and neglect of Black church problems. Most of the congregation rallied to the call for separation.

For contemporary accounts of this defection, see Statement Regarding ... J. K. Humphrey (published by the General Conference), and "Attitude of the Church" (an unsigned pamphlet, without title page, stating the view of the Humphrey party).

Humphrey's organization, later comprising several congregations, took the name United Sabbath Day Adventist Church. At first merely schismatic, it later came to diverge somewhat in beliefs from the Seventh-day Adventist Church. After Humphrey's death membership declined. Many returned to the Seventh-day Adventist Church, and the Harlem church building was recovered.

United States

UNITED STATES. A federal republic with an area of 3.6 million square miles (9.4 million square kilometers) and a population (1994) of 260.7 million.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of the United States (which with the territory of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Canada and the Bermuda Conference comprises the North American Division) includes eight union conferences: Atlantic, Columbia, Lake, Mid-America, North Pacific, Pacific, Southern, and Southwestern. For the 49 conferences and missions, see the names listed under the headings of the respective unions. Statistics (1992) for the United States: churches, 4,261; members, 788,689; church or elementary schools, 997; ordained ministers, 3,139; licensed ministers, 441; teachers, 6,181. For statistics of the conferences and missions, see the article under each name.

Institutions

Institutions. In 1992 the Seventh-day Adventist Church operated 102 secondary and higher schools, 49 sanitariums and hospitals, nine nursing homes and retirement centers, five clinics, five publishing houses, one food company, and five old people's homes. See articles under the names of specific institutions.

History

History. For the history of Seventh-day Adventist work in the United States, see Seventh-day Adventist Church; also names of specific conferences.

United States in Prophecy

UNITED STATES IN PROPHECY. See Revelation, Interpretation of.

United States Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands

UNITED STATES TRUST TERRITORY OF THE PACIFIC ISLANDS. See Guam
and Micronesia.

Universidad Adventista de Centro America

UNIVERSIDAD ADVENTISTA DE CENTRO AMERICA. See Central American Adventist University.

Universidad Adventista de las Antillas

UNIVERSIDAD ADVENTISTA DE LAS ANTILLAS. See Antillian Adventist University.

Universidad Adventista del Plata

UNIVERSIDAD ADVENTISTA DEL PLATA. See River Plate Adventist University.

Universidad Adventista Dominica

UNIVERSIDAD ADVENTISTA DOMINICA. See Dominican Adventist University.

Universidad de Montemorelos

UNIVERSIDAD DE MONTEMORELOS. See Montemorelos University.

Universitas Advent Indonesia

UNIVERSITAS ADVENT INDONESIA. See Indonesia Union College.

Universitas Klabat

UNIVERSITAS KLABAT. See Mount Klabat College.

Universite Adventiste d'Afrique Centrale

UNIVERSITE ADVENTISTE D'AFRIQUE CENTRALE. See Adventist University of Central Africa.

Universite Adventiste d'Haiti

UNIVERSITE ADVENTISTE D'HAITI. See Haitian Adventist College.

University of Eastern Africa Baraton

UNIVERSITY OF EASTERN AFRICA BARATON. An institution of higher learning in Kenya, located on a 339-acre (135-hectare) tract, in the Nandi District, 245 miles (395 kilometers) from Nairobi, the capital city of Kenya. Its students come from Kenya, Uganda, Tanzania, Ethiopia, Zimbabwe, Malawi, Sierra Leone, Nigeria, Ghana, Zaire, Rwanda, Burundi, India, and the U.S.A. The university has about 55 full-time faculty members, who are also international.

The university offers 14 majors (agriculture, biology, business administration, home economics, English, geography, history, Kiswahili, mathematics, nursing, religion, technology, theology, and zoology) and 12 minors (agriculture, biology, business administration, chemistry, geography, English, history, home economics, Kiswahili, mathematics, religion, and technology). The academic programs continue to expand and master's programs in education, business administration, and theology were scheduled to begin in 1994. Although a full-fledged university, it still maintains close ties with Andrews University, to which it was affiliated until March 1991.

The institution has two dormitories (men's and women's); a students' center that also houses a cafeteria; a multipurpose auditorium; 45 faculty homes; married students' housing; and several temporary structures. In 1993 a technology building was constructed and an administration block was under construction. The university has a well-established and productive dairy farm. The Esther Wiggins Memorial Clinic on campus also serves the community—most of whom are 12 or more miles (20 or more kilometers) from a health institution.

History and Development

History and Development. The university was established (by an October 1978 action of the board of the Afro-Mideast Division) on a former Animal Husbandry Research Station granted the church by the Kenya government. Classes started on Jan. 28, 1980, with 20 students registered for different courses at then University College of Eastern Africa (UCEA). Most of the faculty commuted to the university from Eldoret, a town about 30 miles (about 50 kilometers) from Baraton, and moved on campus as housing became available. UCEA had its first graduation in June 1983 and became the University of Eastern Africa Baraton (UEAB) with the Mar. 28, 1991, charter from the government of Kenya. It is the first private university in Kenya to be officially recognized by the government. In 1993 UEAB had 730 students registered for various degree programs.

Principals: Percy Paul, 1980—1983; Svein Myklebust, 1983—1988; Roland McKenzie, 1988—1991 (became first vice-chancellor following charter, Mar. 28, 1991); Mishael Muze (vice-chancellor), 1991— .

University Printers

UNIVERSITY PRINTERS. One of the industrial departments of Andrews University, originally of Emmanuel Missionary College, established in 1901 to provide training facilities for students. For a while, however, it functioned as a publishing house under the name of Advocate Publishing Company (founded 1904), probably deriving this name from the periodical it issued (The Advocate of Christian Education). It is listed under this name in the 1909 Yearbook. From 1910 to 1923 it is listed as Emmanuel Missionary College Press, and afterward, until its name no longer appeared (ending in 1942), as the College Press. In 1973 the name was changed to University Printers. According to the Yearbook (issues 1920 to 1935), it was administered for a time by the Lake Union Conference committee. The press has been printing the Lake Union Herald since the paper's inception in 1908. The Andrews University Press, as it is now called, began a considerable expansion of publishing in 1979 with the appointment of a permanent director.

University School

UNIVERSITY SCHOOL. See Andrews University.

Upper Columbia Academy

UPPER COLUMBIA ACADEMY. An accredited coeducational boarding high school operated at Spangle, Washington, by the Upper Columbia Conference. The 1992—1993 enrollment was 270, with a faculty of 26.

History

History. At a church elders' institute held Dec. 2—5, 1920, the Upper Columbia Conference voted to purchase a hotel at Granger, Washington, for $14,000, to be used as a conference boarding academy. An additional $25,000 was raised to equip the school, and Yakima Valley Academy began its operation as a 12-grade school in 1921 with D. A. Ochs as the first principal.

By 1944 the academy at Granger, Washington, could no longer care for the secondary educational needs of the youth of the conference. In August of that year a special constituency meeting was held at Granger, and it was decided to move the school.

On June 18, 1945, Broadacres, the old Spokane County Farm, located at Spangle, Washington, was purchased under the direction of the conference president, F. A. Mote, for $100,000. The property consisted of approximately 300 acres (120 hectares) and 22 buildings, including supplies and equipment, all in good condition. On Sept. 10, 1945, C. L. Witzel became the first principal of Upper Columbia Academy, as it was then renamed.

A new music building was completed in 1962, a new industrial arts building and a new addition to the boys' dormitory in 1964, a new girls' dormitory in 1968, a new Harris Pine furniture factory in 1973, and a new church in 1974. In 1990 the Thunderbird Furniture Factory was added and a new health education complex was completed.

Principals: D. A. Ochs, 1921—1922; L. B. Losey, 1922—1925; H. E. Weaver, 1925—1927; F. E. Stratton, 1927—1929; R. L. Hubbs, 1929—1932; W. G. McCready, 1932—1936; C. A. Schutt, 1936—1939; O. E. Schnepfer, 1939—1945; C. L. Witzel, 1945—1946; W. L. Schoepflin, 1946—1952; E. E. Bietz, 1952—1955; J. V. Peters, 1955—1960; F. E. Schlehuber, 1960—1966; Harold Ochs, 1966—1968; J. D. Roberts, 1968—1969; L. R. Holmes, 1970—1974; E. W. Rau, 1974—1979; Ted Winn, 1979—1987; Larry Unterseher, 1987—1988; Herb Douglass, Jr., 1988—1992; Larry D. Marsh, 1992— .

Upper Columbia Conference

UPPER COLUMBIA CONFERENCE. The unit of church organization comprising the territory known as the “Inland Empire” in the eastern part of Washington and Oregon, and that portion of Idaho north of latitude 45° (except Lemhi County); Gilliam, Morrow, Umatilla, and Wheeler counties in Oregon; and that portion of Washington east of the Cascade Mountains (except that portion of Klickitat County west of the Klickitat River).

Statistics (1992): churches, 93; companies, 12; members, 19,718; church schools, 39 (including academies); ordained ministers, 96; credentialed ministers, 16; teachers, 113. Headquarters: 3715 South Grove Road, Spokane, Washington. The conference forms part of the North Pacific Union Conference.

Institutions

Institutions. Upper Columbia Academy; Walla Walla College; Walla Walla General Hospital; Walla Walla Valley Academy.

Local Churches-Idaho: Bonners Ferry, Clark Fork, Coeur d’Alene, Deary, Juliatta, Kamiah, Lewiston, Moscow (Moscow-Pullman), Orofino, Osburn, Post Falls, Priest River (Edgemere), St. Maries, Sandpoint, Spirit Lake, Troy, Weippe, Whitebird (Grangeville); Oregon: Athena (Blue Mountain Valley), Condon, Heppner, Hermiston, Irrigon, Milton-Freewater (Milton-Freewater, Stateline), Pendleton (Pendleton, Mission Native American), Pilot Rock; Washington: Brewster, Cashmere, Chelan, Cheney, Chewelah, Clarkston, Cle Elum, Colfax, College Place (College Place, Touchet, Umapine, Walla Walla College, Walla Walla Valley [Spanish]), Colville, Dayton, Deer Park, East Wenatchee, Ellensburg, Endicott, Ephrata, Evans (Inchelium), Fairfield, Farmington, Goldendale, Grand Coulee, Grandview, Granger, Ione, Kennewick, Leavenworth, Moses Lake, Newport (Newport, Diamond Lake), Northport, Omak, Oroville, Othello, Otis Orchards, Pasco (Country Haven, Ephesus, Riverview), Prosser, Quincy, Republic, Richland, Selah, Spangle (Upper Columbia Academy), Spokane (Central, Countryside, Linwood, South Hill, Valley), Sunnyside, Tonasket, Toppenish (Central Valley [Spanish]), Walla Walla (Eastgate, Northside, Walla Walla City), Wapato, Wenatchee, Yakima (Yakima, Fairview), Zillah.

Companies: Oregon: Hermiston (Spanish), Milton-Freewater (Milton [Spanish]); Washington: Brewster (Spanish, Twisp), College Place (Pendleton [Spanish]), Davenport, Grandview (Spanish), Othello (Spanish), Pasco (Spanish), Ritzville, Spokane (East Central), Tonasket (Spanish), Wenatchee (Spanish), Yakima (Spanish).

History

History. Early Evangelism in the Area. The Seventh-day Adventist faith was preached in the territory of the present Upper Columbia Conference as early as 1869 by Franklin Wood, a layperson. Only a year earlier he had left the Walla Walla valley, largely to get away from his SDA neighbor, Mrs. Augusta Moorehouse, who had talked to him about her beliefs. He rented a farm in California, not far from William Nichols, who invited him to attend SDA meetings in Windsor. Soon Wood accepted the SDA teachings. He immediately began sending SDA publications to his father-in-law, Stephen Maxson, in Walla Walla, who read them and passed them on to Seneca Costin, another son-in-law and a minister of the United Brethren. In his further eagerness to share his faith with his people, Wood returned to the Walla Walla valley after only nine months in California, bringing no cash, but a suitcase full of SDA publications. Teaching school during the next year to meet expenses, he gave lectures with the Bible and his charts wherever he could obtain a hearing. Soon there were 12 converts meeting each week in Walla Walla.

In 1871 the little group was increased by the addition of the William Nichols and Aaron Miller families, who moved to nearby Milton, Oregon. In 1872, while attending a camp meeting at Windsor, California, Nichols and Miller asked that a minister be sent to Walla Walla. However, it was not until two years later, on Apr. 23, 1874, that I. D. Van Horn came from California with a new 60-foot (18-meter) tent and began evangelistic meetings in Walla Walla as the first Seventh-day Adventist minister to visit in the Northwest. On May 17 he held a baptism and organized the first Seventh-day Adventist church in the Oregon and Washington territory, with a membership of 35.

A church building was erected on the tent site, a plot donated by Toussaint Chabat, one of the first converts. Upon its completion in February 1875, a series of meetings was held in it. On July 3, 1875, when the new building was dedicated, the membership stood at 75. The second church in the Upper Columbia territory was organized at Milton, Oregon, on Jan. 8, 1876, and during the same year a company was formed at Dayton, Washington.

During Oct. 25—29, 1877, the churches in Oregon and the Washington Territory, meeting in Walla Walla, organized the North Pacific Conference and a Tract and Mission Society, under the direction of J. N. Loughborough. Three of the five churches and more than half of the 200 members were in what is now the Upper Columbia Conference. The territory of the conference included all of Washington and Oregon.

Upper Columbia Conference Organized. In 1880 the eastern portion of the North Pacific Conference was separated and organized as the Upper Columbia Conference, comprising the portions of Washington and Oregon east of the Cascade Mountains and all of Idaho. G. W. Colcord was the first president, A. T. Jones, secretary, and William Nichols, treasurer. In 1886 Montana was added to this conference, but separated as the Montana Conference in 1898. The Upper Columbia Tract Society, organized 1898, included not only the conference territory but also British Columbia, Canada, until the latter was separated in 1902, becoming the British Columbia Conference. In 1901 the Upper Columbia Conference became a member of the Pacific Union Conference. Then in 1906, when that union was divided, it became a part of the North Pacific Union Conference, which included at that time the British Columbia, Western Oregon, Western Washington, Upper Columbia, and Montana conferences, and the Alaska and Hawaii missions. In 1907 the Upper Columbia Conference was divided and the Southern Idaho Conference was formed, embracing all of Idaho south of latitude 45° north and the counties of Wallowa, Union, Baker, and Malheur in eastern Oregon. From time to time minor boundary revisions have taken place.

The work of the conference developed slowly. By 1884 there were only 180 church members, and the total tithe amounted to $1,400. However, the work gained momentum. In 1908 there were 30 churches with 1,550 members, a tithe of $22,307, and 52 workers; 172 persons were baptized. That year also saw the first division of the conference into districts, each under an ordained minister. In 1909 five new churches and 180 converts were added; in 1911 the conference had 2,020 members.

Educational and Medical Institutions. The first church school opened at Walla Walla in 1881 with Mrs. M. E. Beck as teacher. However, it was soon closed by a typhoid epidemic. A second school was also forced to close because of adverse circumstances. In 1887 Milton Academy, at Milton, Oregon, was established. This school, which at one time had an enrollment of 150 students, operated for four years. In 1890 land was purchased in Kettle Falls, Washington, for a boarding school (Kettle Falls Academy) that was opened in 1897 and was operated about seven years. Being the only institution in its area that offered studies above the elementary school, it was attended by both SDA and non-SDA students. The need for a college in the Northwest led in 1891 to the decision to establish Walla Walla College, which opened at College Place, Washington, in December 1892. Milton Academy closed in March 1892.

The conference established intermediate schools at Wenatchee and Lower Naches in Washington, and in Viola, Idaho, in 1908. The Wenatchee school lasted only one year; the others continued for some time. In 1908 a ranch of 180 acres (75 hectares) near Viola, Idaho, was purchased for $10,000 on which the Thatuna intermediate boarding school was established. Financial problems forced the schools at Thatuna and Lower Naches to close by 1915; hence for several years, until the founding of the Yakima Valley Academy, which operated from 1921 to 1945, the only secondary school in the conference was at Walla Walla College.

The conference made several attempts during its formative years to operate hospitals or sanitariums. One institution opened in Spokane about 1892 and closed in 1905 because of adverse circumstances, climaxed by a fire that destroyed the building. The North Yakima Sanitarium Benevolent Association that began in 1905 disappeared from the conference record by 1915. A third medical institution, established in 1905, is still operating and is known today as the Walla Walla General Hospital.

Conference headquarters at first were at Walla Walla, later at College Place. The advisability of a move was discussed at almost every conference session for a number of years. A 1914 vote to establish headquarters at Pasco, Washington, was never carried out. For a time the Upper Columbia Conference shared office space with the North Pacific Union Conference on the campus of Walla Walla College. In 1921 the office building in College Place was sold and a property bought at 817 W. Nora Avenue, Spokane, Washington, where the conference headquarters remained until the move in 1948. In 1978 the conference office was moved to its present location near the Spokane International Airport.

Later Developments. By 1940 the conference membership increased to 5,944. In 1945 there were 23 ordained ministers, 56 churches, and a membership of about 7,000, which rose to 9,325 by 1950, with 33 ordained ministers and 64 churches. The total reached 10,288, with 46 ordained ministers and 69 churches, by the end of 1955. In 1960 there were 10,637 members, with 50 ordained ministers and 68 churches. In 1974 the membership had climbed to 14,000. As of December 31, 1993, the conference membership stood at 19,718, organized into 105 churches and companies.

In 1940 the conference provided a permanent MV summer camp by purchasing the YWCA camp on Hayden Lake, Idaho, for $1,800. In 1989 an additional 360 acres (145 hectares) of forestland was purchased. The Tyrolean-style buildings and property were worth $2.5 million in 1993.

In 1944 the overcrowded Yakima Valley Academy at Granger, Washington, was relocated at Spangle, Washington, and named the Upper Columbia Academy. A 20-acre (eight-hectare) tract at College Place, Washington, was acquired in 1962 for a new day academy in that area. Enrollment exceeded 500 in 1993. The conference operates a number of 10-grade schools with a total attendance of 1,814 students.

Recent years have seen major improvements in both organizational procedures and physical plants. The public evangelism program has been accelerated, school curriculums have been upgraded, stewardship education has been emphasized, lay participation in conference affairs has been enlarged, lay activities programs have enrolled thousands of members on a continuous witnessing basis, community health education programs are now regular features throughout the conference, and a growing literature evangelism program has necessitated special follow-up procedures. A conference secretary has been added to the officer staff to help carry the executive load.

During the late 1980s increasing emphasis was placed on using media for the spread of the gospel. KGTS on the campus of Walla Walla College and KEEH-FM in the Spokane area have wide coverage. An additional radio station (KSOH) operates in Yakima. Blue Mountain Television operates three low-power stations in the Walla Walla area.

Major school plant improvements at Upper Columbia Academy and elsewhere have kept pace with the growing requirements of Christian education. Several congregations have outgrown old facilities and have built new sanctuaries or expanded existing ones. Most members are in close proximity to a house of worship. The Adventist Book Center has expanded its services including the opening of a store in College Place. Use of Camp MiVoden, the conference youth camp, is almost constant during much of the year by young people and other groups.

Presidents: W. A. Colcord, 1880—1884;

J. N. Loughborough, 1884—1885; H. W. Decker, 1885—1892; R. S. Donnell, 1892—1898; G. W. Reaser, 1898—1901; A. J. Breed, 1901—1906; G. E. Langdon, 1906—1911; W. A. Westworth, 1911—1912; P. A. Hanson, 1912—1915; C. W. Flaiz, 1915; C. A. Burman, 1915—1916; J. J. Nethery, 1916—1920; J. S. Rouse, 1920—1925; E. F. Peterson, 1925—1930; M. L. Rice, 1930—1934; C. A. Scriven, 1934—1939; L. E. Esteb, 1939—1945; F. A. Mote, 1945—1948; C. L. Bond, 1949—1957; C. M. Bunker, 1957—1964; R. C. Remboldt, 1964—1974; R. D. Fearing, 1974—1980; Don G. Reynolds, 1980—1985; Jere D. Patzer, 1985— .

Upper Ganges Section

UPPER GANGES SECTION. See India; Southern Asia Division.

Upper Magdalena Conference

UPPER MAGDALENA CONFERENCE. See Colombia; Inter-American Division.

Upper Myanmar Mission

UPPER MYANMAR MISSION. See Far Eastern Division; Myanmar.

Upper Nile Press

UPPER NILE PRESS. A publishing house with a printing plant, established in 1986, seven miles (11 kilometers) east of Kampala, the capital city of Uganda, by the old East African Union Mission just before Uganda became a union mission of its own. The house serves the four fields and one mission of the Union territory with 17 million people speaking a number of languages.

The plant was established to serve the needs of a growing church in the country. The beginnings were and still are simple. One new offset printing machine was acquired with assistance from Eastern Africa Division and the General Conference. A secondhand press and other typographical equipment secured from the U.S.A. with assistance from the General Conference and other donors were installed in one building of 2,520 square feet (235 square meters). Later an old Pearl Press was donated by Pacific Press Publishing Association.

The press issues the Sabbath school quarterly in the Luganda, Luyira, Lunyoro/Lutoro, and Runyankore/Rukiga languages; all forms needed by the churches, schools, and missions; the manuals of religious instruction, hymnbooks, and tracts for evangelistic work in all Uganda languages, including English. The press now employs five full-time and four part-time workers.

Managers: Ted Proud, 1986—1987; V. Moores, 1987—1988; D. Mercill, 1989—1991; Jay Thomas, 1992—1994; Balam Kirya, 1994— .

Upper Volta

UPPER VOLTA. See Burkina Faso.

Upper Zaire Field

UPPER ZAIRE FIELD. See Africa-Indian Ocean Division; Zaire.

Ural Conference

URAL CONFERENCE. See Euro-Asia Division; Russia.

Urquhart, Edward James

URQUHART, EDWARD JAMES (1883—1956). Editor and administrator in Korea and the Philippines. As a young man he engaged in the building and contracting business in California. Later, entering the ministry, he began to preach in British Columbia about 1911. In 1914 he returned to California and pastored the church at Chico until 1916, when he was sent to Korea as an evangelist. In the course of 20 years in Korea he administered several local missions and served as acting superintendent of the Korean Union Mission from 1925 to 1929. From 1919 to about 1930 he edited the Korean Signs of the Times. In 1936 he was called to the Philippine Publishing House as an editor. During World War II he was interned in the Philippine Islands, and retired soon after his release.

Uruguay

URUGUAY. A republic on the southeast coast of South America, bounded on the northeast by Brazil, on the west by the Uruguay River, which separates it from Argentina, and on the south by the estuary of the Río de la Plata and the Atlantic Ocean; it has an area of 68,037 square miles (176,215 square kilometers) and a population (1994) of 3.1 million. Ninety percent of the people are of European descent, chiefly Spanish and Italian, with a sprinkling of Brazilians, Portuguese, Germans, English, and Americans. It has the highest percentage of people of French descent in Latin America, mostly of Waldensian origin. Ten percent are Blacks and Indians, with mixtures of White in both of these. More than half of the people are Roman Catholics, but there is complete religious freedom, church and state being separate. Protestants are a small minority. The official language is Spanish, but a high percentage of the population speak Portuguese as well. The topography of the country represents a transition from the flat pampas of Argentina to the hilly uplands of Brazil, the southern two thirds being rolling plains, the northern third, hills. The climate is temperate. Sheep and cattle raising are the chief basis of the economy.

Historical Background

Historical Background. The territory that is now Uruguay was inhabited in pre-Columbian times by the warlike Churrúas Indians. The region was discovered by the Spanish explorer Juan Diaz de Solis in 1516. Solis and a landing party were massacred by the Churrúas the same year, after which no attempts were made to settle in the region for nearly a century. In 1624 Jesuit and Franciscan missionaries began colonization.

Uruguay was the subject of a long dispute between Spain and Portugal. In 1726, this dispute was settled finally in favor of Spain. In this year Bruno Mauricio de Zabala, the Spanish governor of Buenos Aires, founded the fortified city of Montevideo, and the region was placed firmly under the viceroyalty of Peru. When Spain formed the viceroyalty of the Rio de la Plata in 1776 the region was transferred to it and remained subject to it until the Hispano-American wars of independence, except for a brief period of occupation by the British during the Napoleonic wars.

The struggle for independence from Spain began in 1810 under the patriot José Gervasio Artigas, and ended in 1828, when Brazil and Argentina laid aside their rival claims to Uruguay and recognized her independence. Shortly after this (1830), the Colorado (progressive) and Blanco (conservative) parties, which have dominated Uruguayan politics ever since, were founded. The period from 1830 to 1903 was marked by civil strife. In 1865 the Colorado Party was able to gain support from both Argentina and Brazil and thus to establish itself firmly in control of the country. Paraguay attempted to intervene in behalf of the Blanco Party but was defeated in the War of the Triple Alliance (Argentina-Brazil-Uruguay).

Domination of the country by the Colorado Party lasted for the next 93 years (1865—1958). Civil strife continued throughout the first half of this period, but with the election of President José Batlle y Ordóñez in 1903, Uruguay began a period of increasing political stability that continues to the present time. In 1958 Uruguay came under the control of the Blanco Party in an orderly transition for the first time in its history. President J. M. Bordaberry, backed by the armed forces, dissolved Congress in 1973. All political activity has been forbidden since. During the period from 1974 to 1993, Uruguay recovered its democratic institutions and enjoys free political activity.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Uruguay constitutes the Uruguay Mission, in the Austral Union Conference, which in turn is part of the South American Division. Statistics (1992) for Uruguay: churches, 60; members, 6,729; church or elementary schools, 7; ordained ministers, 13; licensed ministers, 4; teachers, 6. Uruguay Mission headquarters are at Montevideo, Uruguay.

Institutions

Institutions. South American Division Health Food Company (Productos Frutigran); Uruguay Adventist Academy.

Seventh-day Adventist Work

Seventh-day Adventist Work. Beginnings. According to some accounts, the first SDA in Uruguay was Mrs. Juan Rivoir, who came to that country in 1890 and who, four years before her arrival with her husband, had listened to sermons by Ellen White in Piedmont, Italy. The first SDA colporteurs to visit Uruguay were A. B. Stauffer, E. W. Snyder, and C. A. Nowlen, in December 1891 (Snyder, quoted in Home Missionary 4:46, February 1892).

Reporting in the April issue of the same magazine (4:91, 1892), Nowlen and Snyder wrote from Buenos Aires: “After taking a survey of that field [Montevideo], we concluded that the limited English population would not warrant us in settling there at the present; accordingly, we at once made preparations to come to this city [Buenos Aires].” Early in 1893 Stauffer and Snyder returned to Uruguay to do canvassing work, and were joined a little later by Lionel Brooking, a young Englishman from Buenos Aires who had recently become an SDA colporteur. While Stauffer worked among the German-speaking Swiss colonists, and Brooking among the French-speaking Waldensian colonists, Snyder worked for the English-speaking people of Montevideo. Among the first in Uruguay to become interested in the SDA faith was “John [M.]McCarthy, the superintendent of the ‘Seamen’s Mission,’ . . . in Montevideo” (Review and Herald 70:278, May 2, 1893). McCarthy, who had come from Argentina to Uruguay late in 1892, was one of Snyder’s “old subscribers from Buenos Ayres [sic]” (ibid.). Later he became an SDA minister in Uruguay (ibid. 72:652, Oct. 8, 1895; Home Missionary 7:270, December 1895).

As early as August 1893 two families of German-Swiss were reported as interested in Seventh-day Adventist teachings (Review and Herald 70:532, Aug. 22, 1893; General Conference Bulletin, Mar. 4, 1895, pp. 461, 462). Shortly after this a German-Swiss woman in Montevideo bought a book from Snyder, and accepted the SDA faith when McCarthy held evangelistic meetings there (Review and Herald 71:758, Dec. 4, 1894; Home Missionary 7:269, December 1894). She united with the Buenos Aires church in the latter part of 1894 (Review and Herald 71:805, Dec. 25, 1894) and apparently was the first Uruguayan settler to become an SDA member. Through her efforts another German-Swiss woman, also from Montevideo, began keeping the Sabbath before the end of that year (ibid. 72:54, Jan. 22, 1895).

On July 26, 1895, the first SDA Bible instructor, Lucy Post, arrived from the United States in Nueva Palmira, Uruguay, to study with those who had become interested in SDA teachings (ibid. 69:651, Oct. 18, 1892; 72:652, Oct. 8, 1895; 72:795, Dec. 10, 1895). Three weeks after her arrival, two members of her brother's family at Nueva Palmira began to keep the Sabbath, and on Aug. 31, 1895, a Sabbath school meeting was held with 12 in attendance (ibid. 72:796, Dec. 10, 1895). On Oct. 19 of the same year Jean Vuilleumier, a Swiss SDA minister speaking French and German, who arrived in Argentina from the United States the first part of October, came to Uruguay to help Lucy Post and to hold meetings "among [the] Swiss, French, and German people" of Nueva Palmira (ibid. 73:236, Apr. 14, 1896). Early in 1896 eight persons, who became interested through Miss Post, joined the Buenos Aires church (ibid. 73:187, Mar. 4, 1895; Missionary Magazine 10:89, March 1898).

About the same time that Vuilleumier was holding meetings in Nueva Palmira, F. H. Westphal, president of the South American Mission, and John McCarthy held meetings among the Waldenses. From the Waldensian colony Westphal went on to the Swiss colony of Nueva Helvecia, where he held meetings and aroused considerable interest (Home Missionary 8:89, April 1896; The Missionary Magazine 10:88, March 1898). From among these interested ones, 18 of whom were baptized late in 1896, Westphal on the day of baptism organized the first Seventh-day Adventist church in Uruguay (Review and Herald 74:89, Feb. 9, 1897; 74:507, Aug. 10, 1897). Apparently the first Sabbath school in Montevideo was organized late in 1897 (ibid. 74:794, Dec. 14, 1897).

Early Organization. On Mar. 21, 1906, the South American Mission recommended that "Uruguay be constituted an organized Mission" (Revista Adventista 6:2, 3, April 1906). At the time there were 48 SDA members in Uruguay. This recommendation was carried into effect the same year, and John McCarthy was made superintendent of the new mission. Ten years later, in the Uruguay Mission there were 150 members. After another decade membership nearly doubled to 287, but the most significant growth in membership took place between 1927 and 1937, at the end of which time there were 802 members. By the end of the next decade, 1947, membership stood at 1,329, and in 1957 there were 2,204 members. In 1992 the membership was 6,729. In 1950 the headquarters of the South American Division, formerly situated at Buenos Aires, were transferred to Montevideo, Uruguay.

Educational Work. The first Seventh-day Adventist school in Uruguay was organized in 1908 in Nueva Helvecia colony in the home of Julio Ernst, with Otto Heydeker as teacher. Uruguay Academy (now Uruguay Adventist Academy), situated at Progreso, was founded in 1944.

Medical Work. In 1909 two nurses, Meda Kerr and Francisca Brockman, were sent from the United States to begin medical work in Uruguay. A short time later they were joined by Armando Hammerly and his wife, originally from Switzerland, who, prior to coming to Uruguay, were nurses in Argentina. Their work did much to counteract prejudice against Seventh-day Adventists. A Healthful Living Center was established in 1994.

Radio Work. The first SDA radio programs in Uruguay were broadcast by A. R. Sherman in 1925. A radio department was established in 1949 for religious broadcasts.

Uruguay Adventist Academy

URUGUAY ADVENTIST ACADEMY (Instituto Adventista del Uruguay). A coeducational institution of secondary level, situated in the Department of Canelones on National Route no. 5, 20 miles (32 kilometers) from Montevideo, the capital of Uruguay. The institution is owned by the Uruguay Mission, and the board is composed of members whose term is two years. It is supported by a constituency numbering about 6,700. Its 302 students (1993) come chiefly from Seventh-day Adventist homes in Uruguay. The school staff consists of 27 teachers, 15 industrial employees, and eight administrators. A primary school is also connected with the institution.

The academy was established in 1943 by Henry Westphal, president of the Uruguay Mission, on property with a plantation of fruit trees and a large house that was used as an administration building and girls' dormitory during 1944. New buildings erected were of reinforced concrete and brick. A water tower and reservoir and an administration building, a part of which was used as a boys' dormitory until 1947, when the boys' dormitory was completed, were built in 1944. In 1950 a new two-story girls' dormitory containing the kitchen and dining room was finished. A third floor was added in 1974. By 1955 the chapel had been completed. Also, existing industrial buildings for the established industries were enlarged, a barn was constructed, and a building for the Frutigran products (Productos Frutigran, a food factory owned by the academy) was erected. In 1950 and 1973 additional land was bought, bringing the total to about 155 acres (63 hectares), a good part of which is fruit orchards.

The school magazine, Horizontes, has been published since June 1946.

From the time of its founding, conventions and meetings have been held at the academy. In the summer of 1949—1950 the SDA Theological Seminary extension course was held there, attended by some 100 workers from the South American Division.

The academy courses are similar to the official courses of the country plus classes in religious instruction and other subjects that are part of the educational program of Seventh-day Adventists. In 1954 application was made for official recognition, and in 1955 the academy received accreditation from the Consejo Nacional de Enseñanza Secundaria y Preparatoria. In 1993 the academy had an enrollment of 157 and a faculty and staff of 38.

Principals: T. W. Steen, 1944—1945; I. M. Vacquer, 1946—1947; Samuel Alberro, 1948; José Tabuenca, 1949—1954; José Bernhardt, 1955; David Rhys, 1956—1960; I. A. Gerometta, 1961—1965; Adolfo Hugo, 1966—1972; Ricardo Cardinali, 1973—1976; Orlando Ciuffardi, 1977; Luis Schulz, 1978—1983; I. A. Gerometta, 1984; Néstor Sand, 1985—1987; Gustavo Laco, 1988—1991; Juan Carlos Bentancor, 1992— .

Uruguay Mission

URUGUAY MISSION. See South American Division; Uruguay.

Utah

UTAH. See Nevada-Utah Conference.

Utimbaru Station

UTIMBARU STATION. See Tanzania.

Uzbekistan

UZBEKISTAN. An Asian country with an area of 172,700 square miles (447,293 square kilometers) and a population (1994) of 22.6 million. It is bordered by Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tadjikistan, Afghanistan, and Turkmenistan. The Russian military conquest of Uzbekistan began in the nineteenth century. The country became a Soviet republic in 1925. Uzbekistan declared independence on Aug. 29, 1991, and became an independent republic when the Soviet Union disbanded on Dec. 26, 1991.

Seventh-day Adventist Work

Seventh-day Adventist Work. Exact information about the beginnings of Seventh-day Adventist work in Uzbekistan is not known.

F. F. Remfert from Tashkent was a delegate to the sixth All-Union Seventh-day Adventist Congress, which indicates that he represented Adventist churches or groups in that area at that time. However, the repressions of the 1930s destroyed not only the local SDA churches but members' families as well.

In 1955 two families in the village of Stalino began to keep the Sabbath—the Kyrill Polischyuk and Trofim Zhivotov families. In 1957 the first baptism took place there.

N. Kadetskaya, a member of that group, still lives in Tashkent. Soon after Polischyuk and Zhivotov were imprisoned, the latter died.

In 1957 K. A. Korolenko began work in Tashkent, assisted by I. L. Stepanov. Korolenko was arrested in 1964 and spent eight years in prison. He died two years after his discharge.

In 1962 the Laluev family moved from Taldy-Kurgan to Tashkent. Their father, who had been in prison three times for his faith, died there at the age of 73 in 1962. After that, work in Tashkent was led by D. P. Kulakov, A. F. Schtele, and A. E. Fris. In 1993 there were four churches, meeting in different parts of the city. Uzbekistan has six local churches and is part of the Central Asia Conference in the Southern Union Conference of the Euro-Asia Division.

Vacation Bible School

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL. A five-or 10-day school-type daily program for children conducted as an evangelistic enterprise under the supervision of the Sabbath school during the summer vacation period. The program is centered on Bible lessons and Bible stories, quizzes, gospel songs, supervised games, arts, and handicrafts and is conducted for children from 4 to 12 years of age.

A few schools were held by Seventh-day Adventist churches in the late 1940s. The Autumn Council of 1953 recommended that the Sabbath School, Educational, and Missionary Volunteer departments collaborate in preparing lesson material, teaching aids, craft and game instruction, and a program for 10 weekday mornings. These were published and first made available to the field in the vacation season of 1955.

The Sabbath School Advisory Committee of 1958 recommended conference financial assistance up to 50 percent of the cost of lesson materials and craft supplies purchased through the Book and Bible Houses.

Enrollment in Vacation Bible Schools has steadily increased. In 1960, 62,728 children were enrolled. By 1970 the number increased to 178,596. Ten years later there were 260,347 children involved. This number increased to 383,935 in 1992. It is estimated that more than 65 percent of these are guests of Sabbath school members. About two thirds of the schools are conducted outside the North American Division. Facts reveal that in specific instances Vacation Bible Schools and effective follow-up provided a certain climate to gain decisions for Christ and church membership when other methods had failed. In 1989, 7,608 baptisms were reported that resulted from Vacation Bible School evangelism.

In 1974 a motion picture film entitled VBS Is Its Own Reward was produced, giving the philosophy of VBS. In 1987 and 1988 a set of three 22-minute videos was prepared by the Church Ministries Department, which explained the VBS program and materials needed.

Vacation Bible School materials are available for a three-year cycle for children in three divisions: kindergarten, primary, and junior. They are written for five days, and have materials so they can be expanded to 10. These materials include a Vacation Bible School Manual, Program Helps, Teacher's Guides, take-home materials, and a variety of theme devices, nature materials, illustrated music, health aids, advertising aids, and other miscellaneous supplies.

Vailoa Laymen's Training School

VAILOA LAYMEN'S TRAINING SCHOOL. A former educational institution established at Vailoa, Saluafata, 14 miles (23 kilometers) east along the coast from Apia on the island of Upolu in the central Pacific. Offering two or three years of training in local church activities and evangelism, the program proved popular with the participants—mainly young married couples. Classes in practical areas were also conducted for wives. Conducted by staff and students, village evangelistic series yielded many converts. Some graduates entered ministerial service because of a shortage of field workers.

The school began in 1967 and closed in 1986.

Principals: Fereti Puni, 1967—1974; Tesese Tasi, 1974—1975; Ta'ala Papafofo, 1975—1977; Aileone Sefelino, 1978—1979; Tautua Lavea, 1980—1984; Kanela Alefaio, 1985—1986.

Valley Grande Academy

VALLEY GRANDE ACADEMY. A coeducational day school on the senior high school level, with elementary grades also, situated at Weslaco, Texas, six miles (nine kilometers) north of the border of Mexico and 60 miles (100 kilometers) from the Gulf of Mexico in the Rio Grande Valley, serving nine churches.

Prior to 1934 several scattered church schools operated in the valley, but in that year a centrally located valley school was opened at Pharr with Lee Carter as principal, teaching grades 7—10, and Mrs. Alna Grant teaching grades 1—6. Carter drove his car more than 50 miles (80 kilometers) a day transporting children, and J. T. Smith, an ardent believer in Christian education, came from Hargill, bringing the children from the north.

Finally the goal of an approved, centrally located academy was reached, and its doors were opened in the fall of 1937 at its present site, on a plot of ground given by C. H. Cotton. Two new GMC buses served both ends of the valley. Clyde Bushnell and his wife taught the secondary grades, and Mary Wofford and Mrs. Alna Grant the elementary grades. In the summer of 1938 an adjoining tract of land was purchased through the negotiations of Earl Clark and Dr. J. L. DeWitt, and again the patrons responded with labor and money to erect a church school building.

Between 1943 and 1950 the growing school acquired an auditorium housing a nonprofit school cafeteria, a vocational building and garage, a new Ford bus, and needed equipment.

The Seventh-day Adventist medical families of the valley contributed heavily to the educational program. Dr. Earl Reed and his wife taught Spanish classes—Mrs. Reed for nine years. Dr. Herbert Westphal bought several hundred dollars' worth of equipment, constructed a building, and taught the chemistry class. In 1951 Fannie Kellar, wife of Dr. Robert J. Kellar, taught chemistry and used her salary to equip the home economics room.

In 1958 a modern four-room grade school building was built, largely through the efforts of Dr. Duane B. Mock. That same year the academy became fully accredited by the Seventh-day Adventist Board of Regents. Later laboratory and woodworking equipment was added, and the library was remodeled. The faculty in 1962—1963 consisted of four secondary and four elementary teachers. The annual budget exceeded $50,000.

During the school year of 1961—1962 the four buses that transport the students from the entire valley area traveled almost 46,000 miles (75,000 kilometers).

July 1965 marked the beginning of a complete new boarding school program. The girls' dormitory and the auditorium were under construction, with plans for the second dormitory and the administration building to be erected in 1966.

On June 21, 1972, consolidation of the two Texas boarding academies was voted by the executive committee of the conference. This action was taken in order to consolidate the large expenditures involved in operating two small academies in the Texas Conference. Valley Grande Academy was selected as the boarding school for the state of Texas.

Valley Grande Academy development continued by remodeling the home economics and art building, music hall, industrial arts building, and student center. A new cafeteria, science laboratory, and junior Olympic-sized swimming pool were added to the facilities.

The academy was accepted in the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools in 1969 and was fully accredited by the General Conference Board of Regents in 1974.

The 1990s brought some significant changes. The curriculum was reworked to upgrade the academics as well as to promote vocational opportunities for the students. In 1991 a state-approved nurses' aide program was inaugurated. On Sept. 14, 1992, the Texas State Nurses Examining Board approved Valley Grande Academy as the first high school in Texas to have a licensed vocational nursing program.

In 1991 the school set up 22 academic and vocational track programs, thus giving students a broader educational background. Valley Grande Manor, a nearby nursing and convalescent home, designed a scholarship program that provides six financial scholarships of $1,000 for students with high scholastics and four work scholarships of $1,000 each for selected students to do work training in specific areas.

Valley Grande Manor also provided funds to renovate portions of the maintenance buildings in order to provide housing for the nursing program. The oldest building has been renovated to accommodate the administration offices.

In 1992 an English as a second language and special education program was put in place. The year 1993 was a particularly active one at Valley Grande. The dining room was refurbished and includes a large outside covered patio. A principal's training program was put in place with the participation of Andrews University and La Sierra University. A correspondence independent study program was initiated for freshmen doing home study. Enrollment during the 1992—1993 school year was 129.

Principals: Lee Carter, 1934—1936; Clyde G. Bushnell, 1936—1940; E. O. Westermeyer, 1940—1941; Carl Franz, 1941—1943; H. Eugene Sample, 1943—1945; A. D. Kaelin, 1945—1946; Ross Rice, 1946—1947; Cecil D. Garrett, 1947—1951; John Jensma, 1951—1952; A. R. Tucker, 1952—1957; Clifford A. Ortner, 1957—1960; Floyd W. Eccles, 1960—1964; Clarence Newton, 1964—1965; Edwin D. McGhee, 1965—1966; W. P. Thurber, 1966—1967; Gordon R. deLeon, 1967—1969; Robert LeBard, 1969—1972; Arlo A. Krueger, 1972—1977; LeRoy Steck, 1977—1979; Paul Rouse, 1979—1983; Royce Spalding, 1983—1986; Gene Brewer, 1986—1987; John Ward, 1987—1989; John Read, 1989—1991; Andrew Leonie, 1991— .

Valley Grande Manor

VALLEY GRANDE MANOR. A 60-bed nursing and convalescent home situated at 1212 South Bridge Avenue, Weslaco, Texas. Established in 1968, the facility is owned and operated by the Texas Conference of Seventh-day Adventists. In 1992 the home was remodeled and presently accommodates 147 residents requiring intermediate and skilled nursing care. The facility employs 130 full- and part-time personnel. Volume of business done in fiscal year 1992 exceeded $3 million.

Administrators: Duane A. Tucker, 1968—1973; Gary C. Whitworth, 1973—1975; David Tucker, 1975—1978; Betty Lofton, 1978—1986; Diane Butler, 1986—1989; Melvin Justin, 1989—1991; Sylvia L. Williams, 1991— .

Valley of the Angels Hospital

VALLEY OF THE ANGELS HOSPITAL (Hospital Adventista de Valle de Angeles). A 65-bed institution established in 1973 at a mountain location 17 miles (27 kilometers) from Tegucigalpa in Honduras.

In 1974 Frank McNeil arrived in Honduras. During that year a 113,000-gallon (428,000-liter) reservoir was constructed by volunteers under the direction of Ron McBroom. In 1976 a public health ministry was sponsored by a German foundation and conducted by Iris Hayden, a nurse. In 1983 a church seating 300 and a church school were built by Maranatha.

In 1994 the facility included business and doctors' offices, a chaplaincy, a pharmacy, a senior citizens' wing, a School of Nursing, kitchen, bakery, laundry, and maintenance and cleaning departments. There are several productive gardens from which produce, along with bakery goods, is sold every Sunday. Services include emergency room, surgery, preventive medicine, physical therapy, laboratory, X-ray, and pharmacy. Ambulance service is available.

Administrators: Ron McBroom, 1973—1983; Iszo Zelaya, 1983—1985; Danny Jones, 1985—1987; Oscar Palacios, 1987—1989; Eneida de Jurado, 1989—1991; Daniel Castillo, 1991—1994; Raimundo Garcia, 1994— .

Valley View College

VALLEY VIEW COLLEGE. A Seventh-day Adventist coeducational institution, offering a two-year junior college program. It opened on Oct. 31, 1983, at Adentan, Accra, Ghana, with 16 students as Adventist Missionary College. In January 1989 it was relocated at its present site, Oyibi, a town northeast of Accra, Ghana's capital city. It was renamed Valley View College. The site is 476 acres (193 hectares) in area and was acquired on a 99-year lease agreement.

Valley View College (VVC) is owned and operated by the West African Union Mission of Seventh-day Adventists, which is part of the Africa-Indian Ocean Division. It basically serves the seven fields in the union, two conferences, and five missions.

The college offers a liberal arts education course for the first two years toward the bachelor's degree in theology and business, after which the students join the SDA work force or transfer to sister senior colleges to complete their B.A. programs. In addition to these courses, VVC runs a precollege one-year course leading to the American General Education Development (GED) examination. Students who pass the GED test are then admitted to college.

Along with the students, the faculty is international, although Ghana supplies the bulk of both. During the 1992—1993 session the student population averaged about 120, with a full-time faculty of 10.

The major physical facilities on campus are a men's dormitory, a ladies' dormitory, administration-library complex, a classroom complex (yet to be completed fully), a chapel-cafeteria block, and one faculty home. More faculty homes are planned for the next academic year.

Farming is a major occupation on the campus. Corn or maize, pineapple, peanuts, tomatoes, and okra are among the main crops cultivated. Water is supplied by rain and water tankers from Accra, pending the eventual pipe-borne water supply in the master plan. Electricity from the public system is already on campus.

Presidents: Walton S. Whaley, 1983—1987; C. A. Mensah (acting), 1988; Donald O. Eichner, 1989—1991; Francis Chase, 1992; Roland Joachim, 1993— .

Van Horn, Isaac Doren

VAN HORN, ISAAC DOREN (1834—1910). Evangelist. While teaching school in Michigan, he was influenced by Joseph Bates to become a Seventh-day Adventist. He began preaching in 1863, and was ordained the following year. From 1865 to 1868 he was treasurer of the General Conference. In 1865 he married Adelia P. Patten (1839—1922), who assisted Ellen White in preparing materials for publication, and who from 1864 to 1867 was editor of the Youth's Instructor. She was actively associated with her husband in the evangelistic work.

In 1873 Van Horn went to California. In 1874, responding to requests for ministerial help from SDA members in the Walla Walla Valley, he went to Washington and established a church in Walla Walla. Among his converts during his meetings in Walla Walla was Sergeant A. T. Jones, later a prominent SDA minister and author. Van Horn also preached in Oregon, being the first Seventh-day Adventist minister to work there.

On his return to Michigan, Van Horn preached at camp meetings and among the churches. He served as president of the Michigan Conference from 1888 to 1891. From then until 1898 he traveled extensively in Eastern Canada and the Eastern states. Returning to Battle Creek in 1898, he was engaged mostly in church work in that city and in Michigan. In 1907 he suffered from sunstroke and was incapacitated until the time of his death.

Van-Isle Academy

VAN-ISLE ACADEMY. See British Columbia Conference.

Vanua Levu Intermediate School

VANUA LEVU INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL. See Vatuvonu Vocational Training School.

Vanuatu (formerly New Hebrides)

VANUATU (formerly New Hebrides). A group of islands stretching from northwest to southeast for 550 miles (900 kilometers) between south latitude 13° and 21° and east longitude 166° and 170°. They have a land area of 5,700 square miles (14,800 square kilometers). The population is 170,000 (1994). More than 90 percent are Melanesians. Asians, Europeans, and Polynesians make up the rest.

Discovered as early as 1606 by Pedro Fernandes de Quieros, the Spanish explorer, the island group was settled by British and French in the latter half of the nineteenth century. These early settlers had an unsavory reputation for lawlessness and “blackbirding” (the kidnapping of natives to be sold as slaves). Since 1906 the islands have been administered by the Anglo-French condominium. Independence was granted in 1980. The chief exports are fish, copra, meat, timber, cocoa, and coffee.

The indigenous inhabitants are mostly Melanesians, with a strong admixture of Polynesians in some islands. They speak many languages and dialects, but Bislama is the common language.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Vanuatu, including Banks Islands, constitutes the Vanuatu Mission in the Western Pacific Union Mission, which in turn is in the South Pacific Division. Statistics (1993) for the Vanuatu Mission: churches, 48; members, 9,404; church or elementary schools, 26; ordained ministers, 21; licensed ministers, 11; teachers, 33. Headquarters: Vila.

Institutions

Institutions. Aore Adventist Academy.

Seventh-day Adventist Work

Seventh-day Adventist Work. Beginning. The first Seventh-day Adventist missionaries to work in the New Hebrides were C. H. Parker and his wife, who arrived there from the Victoria-Tasmania Conference Aug. 11, 1912. They settled first in Port-Vila, the capital, but were asked by the government to move into a more needy and primitive area. After a tour of several islands with E. S. Butz, it was decided to settle on Atchin, famed for its notorious cannibals. The SDAs were the first missionaries to live there. Norman Wiles, appointed to New Hebrides in 1914, served with his wife on Atchin and among the Big Nambus of Malekula until his death from blackwater fever on May 5, 1920.

A. G. Stewart and his wife were appointed in 1915 and served until 1923. They built the first church and worked for seven years before the first convert was baptized. Others serving during these early days were J. Ross James, Ratu Jope Laweloa, D. Nicholson, and W. D. Smith.

In the 1920s, as more missionaries were appointed, the work was established on Santo and at several stations on Ambrym. Wherever the missionaries went they established small dispensaries and schools. Hymns were translated and small books and tracts were printed in several languages. Small launches were provided for transportation among the islands. In 1928 the mission was reorganized as the New Hebrides Mission.

More Recent Developments. At the beginning of 1949, with the reorganization of the mission fields within the Australasian Division, the New Hebrides Mission became part of the Central Pacific Union Mission. At that time the membership was about 450.

A further reorganization of the mission field took place on Apr. 1, 1972. At this time the New Hebrides Mission became part of the newly formed Western Pacific Union Mission.

A small fleet of four ships is operated by the mission, most of which maintain radio contact either with the headquarters or with the government radio station.

In 1961 a hospital made possible by a Thirteenth Sabbath Offering overflow, was dedicated on the island of Aore. A Fijian medical practitioner, Joeli Taoi, was placed in charge, with Losalini Tuitabu, a Fijian-trained nurse, as assistant.

A branch school of the Voice of Prophecy, established in 1961, enrolls students from many of the more than 80 islands.

Although C. H. Parker spent a short time in Vila in 1912, mission work was not well established in the capital for many years. As a result of public evangelism in the late sixties, a large number joined the church and a representative meeting place was dedicated in 1969.

To aid and supplement the small evangelistic work force, a laity training school was established at Redcliffe, Aoba, in 1970. Today several of these individuals, with basic training in evangelism, are effectively carrying responsibility in the organized work.

Since the entry of Christian missions to the area, various groups have tried without success to break down the wall of resistance and to enter the last bastion of heathenism in this group. This area, covering the major part of inland Santo, was breached in 1973 by the persistence of Enos Falau. Increasing numbers of these people are showing interest in the work and teachings of the church.

Vanuatu Mission

VANUATU MISSION. See South Pacific Division; Vanuatu.

Vatican City

VATICAN CITY. A tiny sovereign state (area, 108.7 acres [45 hectares]) within the city of Rome, a monarchy ruled by the pope as absolute sovereign. It is also the headquarters of the Roman Catholic Church. The state of Vatican City was created on Feb. 11, 1929, by the Lateran Treaty between the Italian government and the Holy See. The population in 1994 was 811.

After 1870, when the last of the territorial possessions of the Papacy had been taken over by the newly unified state of Italy (though an annual payment and the right of extraterritoriality over the Vatican and the papal palaces was offered), the popes refused all agreement with the Italian government, and considered themselves “prisoners” of the Vatican. Not until 1929 was this breach healed (see SB, Nos. 1169, 1170). The treaties concluded made the pope sovereign over Vatican City, which embraces chiefly the area of the Vatican (the pope’s official residence and headquarters), St. Peter’s Basilica and square, and the adjacent buildings and grounds. All adult males are either clerics or persons employed by the Catholic Church or its ministers. Consequently there are in Vatican City no members of any church other than the Roman Catholic Church. The ambassadors of other states accredited with the Vatican reside not in Vatican City, but in the city of Rome.

Vatuvonu Vocational Training Centre

VATUVONU VOCATIONAL TRAINING CENTRE. A coeducational boarding school operated by the Fiji Mission, situated on land leased by the Fiji Mission in 1931, in Buca Bay, on Vanua Levu Island, to establish a boarding school and a district headquarters. Classrooms, dormitories, and teachers' homes were erected in 1932, under the leadership of G. Branster, the district director, assisted by H. R. Steed.

The school began operation in 1933, under L. V. Wilkinson, the first headmaster, and was at first listed in the Yearbook as Vanua Levu Intermediate School. An enrollment of 64 Fijian boys and girls followed a regular elementary school curriculum, with instruction mainly in the Fijian language. After completion of this curriculum, selected students would be given training as ministers and teachers. The students cultivated their own gardens to provide food for the school. School income was supplemented by the sale of copra, produced by the students from a small coconut plantation on the school estate. In 1937 the training of primary teachers for the Fiji Mission was begun.

In 1941, when Fulton Missionary College was established in a more central location in Fiji, training classes were transferred to it, leaving only the eight years of elementary classes at Vatuvonu. In recent years junior secondary school classes have been added and now the majority of boarding students are receiving an education at the grades 7—10 level. The school is still largely self-supporting. Both students and teachers work in the school gardens each afternoon during the week.

For several years a number of Indian children were taught in a separate section of the school, but as the use of the English language became more general throughout the Fiji Islands, all basic instruction was given in English. This made it possible for the school to accept students regardless of language or race.

The enrollment steadily increased to a peak of more than 250, including Micronesians and Polynesians from the nearby islands of Rabi and Kioa. In the 1960s, new buildings of permanent materials replaced existing structures as the school grew. They included a new kitchen and dining room, a concrete classroom and office block, and new teachers' houses. In 1972 a new manual arts block was completed, and in 1975 a new primary school was completed. Dining room and kitchen facilities have been improved and enlarged.

Currently functioning as a vocational school, the purpose of Vatuvonu is to prepare young people for the practical trades.

Principals: P. J. McGruddy, 1976—1977; R. M. Ferguson, 1977—1979; N. Tausere, 1980—1983; S. Basa, 1983—1984; T. Cabe, 1984—1987; M. Tuiwawa, 1987—1988; P. Senikau, 1988—1990; S. Bekei, 1990—1994; H. Poulter, 1994— .

Vaucher, Alfred-Felix

VAUCHER, ALFRED-FELIX (1887—1993). Evangelist, educator, author. A Swiss citizen born in the Waldensian valleys of northern Italy, he was the grandson of Catherine Revel, possibly the first person in Europe to accept the Seventh-day Adventist message and observe the Sabbath. Baptized in 1900, he had already preached more than 30 times by the age of 15.

His personal notebooks testify that he started in 1901 a lifelong habit of diligent Bible study. A voracious reader, he had the gift of rapidly locating in thousands of books the essential items that he used in his publications or in the classroom. His attendance at a six-month Bible school in Paris organized by B. G. Wilkinson in 1902 marked the end of his formal education. Painfully aware of his lack of proper training, he would spend one night out of two studying during many years of his youth. Fluent in French and Italian, he also learned English and could understand Spanish and German, and studied Greek and knew some Hebrew.

In 1903 he worked with C. T. Everson in Rome as a translator, literature evangelist, and teacher of French. He then served as an evangelist in central Italy and from 1907 to 1910 preached in Switzerland.

In 1910 he married Emma Rochat. After three more years as evangelist in Italy, he served in France as a pastor, editor of Signes des Temps, conference president, and union secretary until 1920, at which time he asked to be a teacher. After one year as principal and Bible teacher of the school located in Gland, Switzerland, he began his long teaching career at the institution opened in 1921 in Collonges, France, where at one time or another he taught most of the Bible courses.

During his long career he served as chaplain at La Lignière (Lake Geneva Sanitarium) and briefly as conference president in Switzerland, after which time he returned to Collonges, where he was principal and Bible teacher until his retirement in 1951.

His name has been synonymous with excellence in teaching and thorough scholarship for generations of Seventh-day Adventists in Southern Europe.

Vega Baja Adventist Academy

VEGA BAJA ADVENTIST ACADEMY. See Regional North Adventist Academy.

Vegetarian Cuisine Instructor's Program, The

VEGETARIAN CUISINE INSTRUCTOR'S PROGRAM, THE. A program supervised by the General Conference Health and Temperance Department for the purpose of preparing individuals in the Seventh-day Adventist churches and institutions to conduct cooking schools for their communities and their churches that will give a more accurate picture of the Seventh-day Adventist health message and lead people to a knowledge of a better way of life. It requires 30 hours spent in training, and it is preferred that only those thus prepared be authorized to teach classes in home nutrition for the church and community.

The syllabus was prepared jointly by the General Conference Health and Temperance Department and Nutrition Council, the Loma Linda University School of Allied Health Professions and School of Public Health, and the Loma Linda Medical Center Nutritional Services. It is recommended that local conferences and institutions sponsor Vegetarian Cuisine Instructor's classes.

Vegetarianism

VEGETARIANISM. See Diet.

Vejlefjordskolen

VEJLEFJORDSKOLEN. See Danish Junior College.

Velez Sarsfield Adventist Academy

VELEZ SARSFIELD ADVENTIST ACADEMY (Instituto Adventista Velez Sarsfield). A secondary school belonging to the Central Argentine Conference. It is located in the city of Cordoba in the province of the same name. The school offers a commercial course that lasts five years, plus a common secondary course that offers a major in biology. In 1993 only the first two years of this course were available. There were 207 students and 32 teachers in the institution.

The school began on the elementary level in 1983. Secondary courses were added in 1984. The first graduation was in 1988. At present the library has 2,200 volumes.

Principals: Jorge Freyre, 1984—1987; Néstor Sand, 1988—1990; Humberto Lavooy, 1991— .

Venden, Daniel E.

VENDEN, DANIEL E. (1899—1973). Evangelist and administrator. He was born in Wisconsin and attended Columbia and Laurelwood academies and Walla Walla College, graduating in 1923. He married Nellie Edna Schnepfer and they accepted a call to Columbia Academy, where he taught and served as dean of boys and later became principal for a period of two years. In 1926 he became MV secretary of the Oregon Conference. Four years later he and his brother Melvin formed a team called the Venden Brothers, Gospel Singers and Evangelists. They held meetings in the cities of Oregon and in New York City, Philadelphia, and some of the large cities of Michigan. In 1943 he became pastor of the College View church in Lincoln, Nebraska, and a year later was called as president of the conference, where he served until 1950. At that time he again joined with his brother for meetings in San Francisco and other cities in California and Arizona. Beginning in 1955, he served for 10 years as president of the Central California Conference.

Venezuela

VENEZUELA. A republic situated on the north coast of South America, bounded on the east by Guyana, on the north by the Caribbean Sea, on the west by Colombia, and on the south by Brazil. It has an area of 352,143 square miles (912,050 square kilometers) and a population (1994) of more than 20 million. The inhabitants of Venezuela have descended from three racial stocks: European, Black, and Indian. Approximately 69 percent of the population is mixed (Spanish and Indian); 20 percent are of European extraction (such as Spanish, Portuguese, French, Austrian); 9 percent are Black, and about 2 percent are pure Indian. More than 90 percent of the population is nominally Roman Catholic, though Muslims, Jews, and Protestants are granted liberty.

Venezuela, roughly triangular in shape, may be divided into three topographical areas: (1) the mountainous area of the north and northwest, (2) the lowlands of the Orinoco River, and (3) the Venezuela portion of the Guiana highlands. The mountains of the northern part of the country are part of the Andes Range and consist of parallel chains of mountains running roughly north and northwest, with fertile valleys between, which are intensively farmed. The lowlands of the Orinoco consist of a vast alluvial plain drained by the Orinoco and its tributaries and are covered by grass and forests. The Guiana highlands consist of a high plateau, in which is the highest known waterfall in the world—Angel Falls, 3,212 feet (1,000 meters) high.

The climate of Venezuela is largely tropical, the year being divided into two seasons, the rainy season from about April to about November and the dry season from about November to about April.

The economy is one of the strongest in Latin America, Venezuela being one of the few countries of the world with a budgetary surplus. About half of the country's population is engaged in agriculture. Smaller segments of the population engage in oil and iron mining, forestry, and other pursuits.

Historical Background

Historical Background. Venezuela was the first part of the American mainland sighted by Columbus on his third voyage in 1498. In 1499 Alonzo de Ojeda, a Spaniard, possibly accompanied by Amerigo Vespucci, for whom the New World was named, entered the gulf of Maracaibo, and seeing the Indian villages built on piles over the water reminiscent of Venice, called the place Venezuela ("Little Venice"). The first settlement on the American mainland by Europeans (Spaniards) was made in 1520 at Cumana by Gonzalo de Ocampo. Diego de Losada and other Spaniards pushed inland and fought the Teques and other Indian tribes.

In 1528 Charles V, emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, turned western Venezuela over to the Welsers of Augsburg, but in 1546 the contract with the Welsers was canceled and Venezuela came under Spanish rule again. This arrangement continued until 1717, when Venezuela became part of the viceroyalty of Granada. During the seventeenth century, English, French, and Dutch pirates attacked the Venezuelan coast, which was known to the English pirates as the Spanish Main.

The first important move toward independence was led by Francisco Miranda in 1806, but failed. However, as head of a junta he declared independence on July 5, 1811, but independence was short-lived, ending about a year later, when he surrendered to the Spanish army. The struggle for independence continued under Simón Bolívar, a member of Miranda's staff, who escaped.

Independence was achieved in 1823, when the last Spanish stronghold capitulated. In 1829 Venezuela separated from the confederation known as Gran Colombia (comprising what is now Venezuela, Colombia, and Ecuador) and set up its own government under José Antonio Páez. A long internal struggle that followed Bolívar's death in 1830 continued until recent years. At the present time (1993), the country is progressing under a democratic government.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Venezuela is part of the Venezuela-Antilles Union Mission within the Inter-American Division and is divided into two conferences and two missions. Statistics (1992) for Venezuela: churches, 219; members, 55,185; church or elementary schools, 34; ordained ministers, 76; licensed ministers, 46; teachers, 374.

Statistics (1992) for the conferences and missions—Central Venezuela Conference: churches, 48; members, 15,358; church or elementary schools, 6; ordained ministers, 20; licensed ministers, 15; teachers, 66. Headquarters: Caracas. East Venezuela Mission: churches, 53; members, 13,591; church or elementary schools, 5; ordained ministers, 17; licensed ministers, 11; teachers, 65. Headquarters: Maturín. West Central Venezuela Conference: churches, 67; members, 13,776; church or elementary schools, 14; ordained ministers, 19; licensed ministers, 11; teachers, 138. Headquarters: Barquisimeto. West Venezuelan Mission: churches, 51; members, 12,104; church or elementary schools, 7; ordained ministers, 14; licensed ministers, 8; teachers, 61. Headquarters: Maracaibo.

Institutions

Institutions. Barquisimeto Adventist Clinic; Richard Greenidge Academy; Venezuelan Adventist Ecclesiastical University.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. Beginnings. The Adventist message was introduced into Venezuela about the beginning of the twentieth century, when unclaimed, unaddressed packages of Seventh-day Adventist publications were left at Venezuelan docks by trading ships that stopped along the basin of the Caribbean Sea. The extent of their influence is not known.

In December 1907 B. E. Connerly, apparently the first SDA minister to visit Venezuela, spent several months visiting the country and distributing SDA publications. He reported visiting several Indian villages besides various towns along the Orinoco River and urged that “this year [1908] . . . not pass before we have a representative here” (Review and Herald 85:15, Apr. 9, 1908). He concluded with the following appeal: “I found many persons with whom the Spirit of the Lord is working. I readily sold all the books that I had with me, and took subscriptions for El Centinela in all the towns, and distributed many tracts” (ibid.).

However, his hopes were not fulfilled until 1910. On Aug. 1, 1910, F. G. Lane and his wife arrived in La Guaira, the port city of Caracas. They were accompanied by R. E. Greenidge (Greenage), who was to open treatment rooms in Caracas, and thus start the medical work. After they had spent some time getting their luggage through customs, they journeyed by train to Caracas (ibid. 87:15, 16, Oct. 20, 1910). The Lanes began their work by holding evangelistic meetings, illustrating the lectures on the prophecies of Daniel with charts.

The first convert, Manuel Corro, was a carpenter who furnished the lumber for pews needed for the meeting hall. Reporting the story of how Corro became an SDA, Mrs. Lane wrote: “We had been here four months when one day a man came with some lumber. On passing through the house, his eyes fell upon the old prophetic chart, which we had hanging in a conspicuous place. He inquired, ‘What do these things mean?’ Elder Lane at once made an attempt, in broken Spanish, to explain to him, reading from the Spanish Bible.

“The man listened attentively, and, saying very little, went away. About two hours later he returned, bringing with him a second man to hear the story. My husband again explained as fully as possible the wonderful truths of God’s Word, impressing upon them the importance of studying to know for themselves. They then left, expressing their thanks for what they had heard. The following morning the second man returned with a third, who was anxious to see the wonderful chart, and hear the story” (ibid. 88:11, Feb. 8, 1911).

Corro, his mother, and nine others composed the first group to be baptized into the Seventh-day Adventist Church. They were baptized in 1911 in the Upper Anauro River, in the area known today as Cotiza, by Lane. The second baptism took place on Feb. 10, 1912. Reporting on SDA work in Venezuela at this time, U. Bender, an SDA minister who was visiting Venezuela, said: “Sabbath, February 10, seven candidates were baptized in a quiet pool of a mountain brook. This makes eighteen in all whom Elder Lane has baptized in Venezuela.

“A room fitted up for a chapel is used by the company for a meeting-place. Here we held services nearly every night. Elder Lane interpreted for me, and we had a good, profitable time. . . .

“Not only in Caracas are these [there?] interested ones, but from small villages miles away to the south people have sent word for the pastor to come to visit them. . . .

“Brother Greenage [Greenidge] and wife are making their living by giving treatments, and Sister Samuels conducts a school for the children” (ibid. 89:16, Apr. 11, 1912).

By 1915 the Lanes had left Venezuela and S. A. Oberg and his wife had taken over leadership of the work. A short time later Mrs. Oberg reported in the Review and Herald (92:11) of Feb. 25, 1915: “Thanks to the faithfulness of Brother and Sister R. E. Greenidge, our self-supporting medical missionaries here, in calling them together for worship, nearly all were in attendance [at the first meeting after the Obergs arrived].”

Soon after the arrival of the Obergs, persecution broke out. The evangelistic meetings were disturbed by missiles thrown through the windows of the meeting house, and when this failed to discourage the missionaries, pressure was brought to bear on the landlord, who expelled them from their rented meeting place (ibid.). Only a few months later, Mrs. Oberg contracted a tropical disease and was compelled to leave the country, but after a period of rest and treatment she was able to return to Venezuela (ibid. 92:14, Apr. 8, 1915). In spite of adverse circumstances, Oberg declared that the SDA message was “here to stay” (ibid. 90:10, 11, Sept. 2, 1915).

On Feb. 2, 1917, W. E. Baxter and his wife arrived in Caracas, where they found 10 faithful members. First attempts to secure a hall for holding meetings were unsuccessful, because of opposition from the established church, but after a time a hall was rented (ibid. 96:24, 25, July 10, 1919).

At the close of 1918 Baxter wrote: “[Venezuela has] now one ordained minister, one missionary secretary, and three canvassers. . . . The canvassers have done good work. Brother R. E. Greenidge began work in April, and in eight months has sold and delivered $1,500 worth of books. In August [1918], Rafael López and Angel Ojeda arrived from Puerto Rico, and their combined deliveries for three months amounted to a little more than $1,800, thus making our book sales for this brief period more than $3,300, gold. We are glad to see these truth-filled books going into the hands of the people and believe the seed thus sown will yield a harvest of souls. There are many inquiring about the truth and are desirous of studying, not only in Caracas where we recently baptized a promising young man, and where many others are studying, but in other parts as well” (SDA Yearbook [1919], pp. 257, 258).

The first colporteur institute in Venezuela was held in the city of Caracas from May 9 to 28, 1919. C. E. Knight, the superintendent of the East Caribbean missions, was present at this institute and assisted in promoting the colporteur work (Review and Herald 96:29, Sept. 18, 1919).

G. D. Raff served as the mission publishing leader from 1917 until he was succeeded by B. E. Wagner in 1921 or 1922. The colporteurs not only sold books but also gave medical aid whenever there were opportunities to do so. Sometimes they walked, at other times they rode muleback through muddy plains and almost impassable mountain roads, transporting their luggage and boxes of books to seemingly inaccessible regions. One colporteur, Rafael López, was murdered May 15, 1922, while traveling muleback on a deserted mountain road in El Cobre, state of Táchira, in western Venezuela.

From 1911 to 1919 Venezuela was part of the South Caribbean Conference. In 1919 it was organized into a separate mission, with W. E. Baxter as director and treasurer. The one church in Caracas had 16 members. The next year saw marked progress in the new mission. The D. D. Fitch and Byrd Bullard families arrived in Caracas to assist in the work, the Bullards taking over the burden of the office management, and the Fitches, with the help of the Bullards, conducting a daily Bible school, which attracted many young people to the SDA church. Three young Spanish ladies, Amelia Correa, Clara Luisa Robayna, and Blanca Orta, who were trained in this school, became Bible instructors. Several young men, among them Carlos Alberto Robayna, Juan Porras, Alejandro Zamaro, Alberto Acosta, Rafael Fleitas, Julio García, Pedro Ramón González, Teodoro Rodríguez Vázquez, who also began Bible training about that time, later became SDA workers in Venezuela.

In 1921 several families in widely separated areas began the observance of the Sabbath as the result of reading literature or receiving studies from colporteurs. This work extended to the interior—to the plains of Guárico and Apure, and to Barquisimeto and San Cristóbal in the Andes Mountains. As a result of the colporteur work of Rafael López, Baxter baptized 21 converts at Camaguán, in the state of Guárico, on Apr. 22, 1921, and organized a church. Among those baptized were José Antonio Lamas, who was a Lebanese businessman, and Julio García, both of whom became workers in Venezuela. In early 1922 an institution known as the Camaguán Training School was opened in Camaguán under the leadership of Richard Greenidge and his wife. This school, situated on the Portuguesa River in the Venezuelan plains, provided Christian education for a generation of SDA young people, many of whom became denominational workers. In 1935 Greenidge died in the United States, and for a time his son Luis directed the school. He was followed by Juan Porras, and then Lowell Johnston. The school was closed about 1937 or 1938.

In 1936 a church school was organized in Caracas and still operates under the name of Richard Greenidge School. José Lamas donated the land for the Venezuela Secondary School (Colegio Secundario Venezolano), which was opened Oct. 1, 1962, in El Limón, Maracay.

In 1927 the Venezuela Mission was transferred from the Caribbean Union Mission to the newly organized Colombia-Venezuela Union Mission, comprising Venezuela, Colombia, and the Netherlands Antilles. In 1950, during the administration of Charles R. Beeler, the Venezuela Mission was divided into two missions: East Venezuela Mission, with headquarters in Caracas; and West Venezuela Mission, with headquarters in Barquisimeto. At the close of 1952, the two missions reported a combined membership of 1,031, distributed among 11 churches. By the end of 1956, the two missions had a combined membership of 1,858 and 22 churches. Since then, the work in Venezuela has made excellent progress. As a result of this, in 1989 it was organized as the Venezuela-Antilles Union Mission. In 1992 the West Venezuela Conference was divided into two fields.

On Oct. 12, 1940, the Caracas Adventist Dispensary was opened as an institution of the East Venezuela Mission. Medical work is also carried on at Barquisimeto.

In 1963 the educational work in Venezuela was represented by the Venezuela Secondary School (Instituto Vocacional de Venezuela), situated at Nirgua, Venezuela, about 200 miles (320 kilometers) west of Caracas, which offered work on the high school level—bachillerato. It was upgraded in 1966 with new and modern facilities including dormitories, classroom building, and an orange farm on 125 acres (50 hectares) of flat land. The institution has become part of the Venezuelan Adventist Ecclesiástical University, which offers a B.A. in theology and an A.A. in business administration and in computer. The school is operated by the Venezuela-Antilles Union.

Venezuela-Antilles Union Mission

VENEZUELA-ANTILLES UNION MISSION. See Inter-American Division; Netherlands Antilles; Venezuela.

Venezuela Vocational Institute

VENEZUELA VOCATIONAL INSTITUTE. See Venezuela; Venezuelan Adventist Ecclesiastical University.

Venezuelan Adventist Ecclesiastical University

VENEZUELAN ADVENTIST ECCLESIASTICAL UNIVERSITY (Instituto Universitario Eclesiástico Adventista). A boarding college and secondary school located near Nirgua, Venezuela, 145 miles (235 kilometers) west of Caracas. Founded in El Limón, a suburb of Maracay, on Sept. 30, 1963, and later transferred to Nirgua and inaugurated Oct. 23, 1966. The school is located on 132 acres (55 hectares) in a valley at 2,500 feet (750 meters) above sea level. It is fully accredited on the elementary and secondary levels by the Venezuelan government; the secondary school has grown into the Instituto Universitario Eclesiástico Adventista, operating under the direction of the Venezuela-Antilles Union. The industries include a bakery, a printshop, and a farm that has 35,000 fruit-bearing orange trees. The secondary and college student enrollment during the 1992—1993 school year was 550, under the direction of 30 teachers.

Principals/Presidents: C. E. Schmidt, 1966—1969; H. Hernandez, 1969—1974; M. A. Lopez, 1974—1979; G. Garrido, 1979—1983; I. Omana, 1983—1985; G. Florez, 1985—1989; G. Bracho, 1989—1994; F. Zabala, 1994— .

Vermont

VERMONT. See Northeastern Conference; Northern New England Conference.

Vespers

VESPERS. See Services, Church.

Vials, Seven

VIALS, SEVEN. See Plagues, Seven Last.

Vibrant Life

VIBRANT LIFE (1885— ; 1885—1891, as Pacific Health Journal and Temperance Advocate; January 1892—June 1904, as Pacific Health Journal; June–December 1915, as Health and Temperance; January 1916—August 1981, as Life and Health; September 1981—December 1984, as Your Life and Health; absorbed Health 1948; bimonthly; RH; 1994 circulation 27,000).

Subtitled “A Magazine for Healthful Living,” it is a health magazine that promotes an improved quality of life through emphasis on proper nutrition and exercise, mental, emotional, and spiritual health, and positive family relationships. Its focus is disease prevention and longevity. Its aim is similar to that of the first Seventh-day Adventist health journal, the Health Reformer, as set forth in its first issue, 20 years earlier: “[It is] our ardent desire to do all that lies in our power to instruct and benefit the people in relation to the right method of living. . . .

“It shall be our great object to lay before our readers facts of vital importance in relation to the health reform, and aim to instruct the people how to avoid sickness, or if sick, how to regain their health, and that without poisons. . . .

“Sickness has come to be the ruling condition of mankind, and health the exception; and a better state of things cannot be expected until the laws of life and health are better understood and obeyed” (1:8, August 1866).

Vibrant Life began in 1885 as a bimonthly, the Pacific Health Journal and Temperance Advocate (monthly from 1888 on). It had been suggested in 1884 by the newly opened health institution called the Rural Health Retreat (now the St. Helena Hospital and Health Center) as a joint venture with the Pacific Press. It was for many years published for the sanitarium by the Pacific Press in Oakland.

In August 1901 the Pacific Health Journal was announced as “the health organ of the Pacific Union Conference,” and with the September number the headquarters were transferred to San Francisco. Financial responsibility was retained by the California Medical Missionary and Benevolent Association, which had been named in the editorial box since April 1899. In March 1904 the Pacific Union Conference voted to transfer their health journal to the Review and Herald Publishing Association: “Whereas, There is need of a low-priced, popular health journal, on which all our people can unite in giving a large circulation; and—

“Whereas, It should bear such a general name, and be published in such a place, as will make it a representative of the whole field; therefore—

“7. We recommend, (a) That our brethren at Washington, D.C., be invited to publish such a journal, and that we pledge to it our hearty support; and (b) that the Pacific Health Journal be offered to the Review and Herald, of Washington, D.C., and that they be invited to change its name and make-up as they may deem necessary to accomplish the purpose mentioned above” (Review and Herald 81:17, May 12, 1904).

The Review and Herald, announcing the transfer, beginning with the July number, printed the following statement, to appear in the final (June) number of the Health Journal: “It is the purpose of the new publishers to make the magazine a worthy exponent of the true principles of health and temperance reform in their broadest application to the physical and spiritual welfare of the people. We intend to make the instruction simple and practical, dealing with those questions which enter so largely into the common experiences of the home life, seeking to stimulate the desire for the better way of living, and to impart as much help as possible in the application of right principles” (81:5, May 19, 1904).

Thus the Pacific Health Journal moved to Washington, D.C., and came out in July 1904 as Life and Health, which name it retained, with the exception of the period from June to December 1915, when it was called Health and Temperance.

A general medical council of the North American Division held in Kansas City Aug. 22—25, 1961, recommended: “1. Designation of Life and Health as the official magazine for Medical Missionary Day.

“2. Assignment of a portion of the Medical Missionary Day offering for Life and Health subscriptions to be sent as the pastor’s or church’s gift to community leaders, physicians, dentists, schools, libraries and hospitals, and

“3. Encouragement to our own church members, physicians, dentists, and medical and educational institutions to subscribe to Life and Health.”

In July 1972 major changes were made in Life and Health. Both the format and the journalistic approach were altered in order to appeal more directly to the non-SDA reader and thus enlarge the magazine’s potential as a missionary journal. Even more emphasis was given to prevention, and feature articles were referenced with documentation from scientific sources. Several special issues on prevention were published.

Since the January 1985 issue, when the name was changed to Vibrant Life, the magazine has been published bimonthly. A yearlong pilot program indicated the magazine should be directed toward Seventh-day Adventist Church members, encouraging them to use it as a witnessing tool.

In 1987 the staff was expanded to include senior editors in the areas of exercise and fitness, nutrition, substance abuse, family and general medicine, respectively. This new direction resulted in Vibrant Life being used as an outreach journal by chaplains in SDA hospitals. A partnership was formed in 1987 between Vibrant Life and the Christian Lifestyle Magazine television program whereby the journal would be considered by the television program as its official print medium, and would be promoted on television stations nationwide. The magazine is also sold by literature evangelists.

In 1991 Vibrant Life was repositioned to appeal to younger, non-SDA readers (age 35 and over), in order to expand the magazine’s potential as a missionary journal. Columns and special features on self-improvement, women, family, and overcoming personal obstacles were added.

A braille edition of Life and Health, composed mostly of extracts from the ink print edition, was published by the Christian Record Braille Foundation, Lincoln, Nebraska, first issued in 1952 and continued until 1982. Its circulation of about 6,000 extended outside the United States and Canada to about 80 other countries.

Editors: J. H. Waggoner, 1885—1887; J. N. Loughborough, 1887—1890; W. P. Burke, M.D., 1891—1892; M. C. Wilcox, 1892; W. H. Maxson, M.D., 1892—1897; A.

J. Sanderson, M.D., 1897—1899; G. H. Heald, M.D., 1899—1917; H. W. Miller, M.D., February 1917—June 1919; L. A. Hansen, 1919—1933; A. W. Truman, 1933—1935; L. A. Hansen, 1936; Francis D. Nichol, 1937—1946; J. Wayne McFarland, M.D., 1946—1949; J. DeWitt Fox, M.D., 1949—1972; M. G. Hardinge, M.D., 1972—1975; Don Hawley, 1975—1977; Leo Van Dolson, 1978—1979; Joyce McClintock, 1979—1981; Robert S. Smith (acting), 1981—1982; Thomas A. Davis (acting), 1982—1984; Ralph Blodgett, 1984—1988; Raymond H. Woolsey, 1988—1991; Barbara Jackson-Hall, 1991—1995; Larry R. Becker, 1995— .

Editors of the Braille Edition: C. W. Degering, 1952—1960; C. G. Cross, 1960—1964; B. Y. Baughman, 1964—1965; R. A. Gibson, 1965—1971; Richard Kaiser, 1971—1973; C. G. Cross, 1973—1974; Richard Kaiser, 1974—1982.

Vicente Suarez Institute

VICENTE SUAREZ INSTITUTE (Instituto Vicente Suarez). A multilevel educational institution located in the industrial city of Monterrey, in the state of Nuevo Leon, Mexico. The school operates at the kindergarten, elementary, secondary, and preparatory levels. It is owned and operated by the Northeast Mexican Conference.

In September of 1961 it began as an elementary church school with four teachers. Official registration of the school was granted in March 1962. The kindergarten division received its official registration in February 1976. The secondary school was officially registered in October 1975, and the preparatory level was registered by the Universidad Autónoma de Nuevo Leon in June of 1978.

At present the institution operates with a total of 333 students at all levels.

Principals: B. Torres, 1980—1981; H. E. Voth, 1981—1982; B. Torres, 1982—1984; A. Soto, 1985—1994; F. Porras, 1994— .

Victor Ampuero Matta Adventist Academy

VICTOR AMPUERO MATTA ADVENTIST ACADEMY (Instituto Adventista Victor Ampuero Matta). A school located in the city and province of Mendoza, belonging to the Central Argentine Conference. It was begun as an elementary school in 1988; the secondary courses were added in February of 1993.

The school offers its students a commercial course that lasts five years. In 1993 there were 136 students served by 25 teachers.

At present the library has 2,100 books.

Principals: Esther Gaibar, 1988—1991; Raúl Pérez, 1991—1993; Eduardo Maiorov, 1993— .

Victorian Conference

VICTORIAN CONFERENCE. See Australia; South Pacific Division.

Victory Lake Nursing Home

VICTORY LAKE NURSING HOME. A 120-bed extended care facility located three miles (five kilometers) east of Hyde Park, New York, on property adjacent to the Northeastern Conference campgrounds. The home is modern in every detail and operates in compliance with regulations set forth by the New York State Department of Health. It is an affiliate of the Northeastern Conference Nursing Home Corporation.

Victory Lake employs a total of 130 persons, including four physicians and 39 licensed and registered nurses. The institution offers a high level of geriatric care, including physical, speech, and recreation therapy. High priority is given to special diets.

For many years the constituency of the Northeastern Conference felt concern with the plight of the aged and the possibilities of helping to solve this problem. The late R. T. Hudson, former president of the Northeastern Conference, took the first steps toward positive action by leading out in organizing a committee of sponsors for the project and directing the legal arm of the conference to the problem.

On Nov. 14, 1967, under the leadership of G. R. Earle, the number of sponsors was increased from 13 to 15, and these became the board of directors of the Northeastern Conference Nursing Home Corporation.

Earle and Stennett Brooks, who was treasurer, arranged for funds to be made available to the nursing home corporation for the construction of the Victory Lake Nursing Center. The facility cost $3.7 million and was completed in August 1970. Victory Lake opened its doors to receive its first patients Jan. 6, 1971.

Administrators: Theodore Cantrell, 1969—1970; Everett Alexander, 1971; George Pelote, 1971—1986; Robert Farrow, 1986— .

Vie et Santé Institute

VIE ET SANTÉ INSTITUTE. See Algeria.

Vietnam

VIETNAM. A Socialist republic in Southeast Asia situated on the eastern side of the Indochina Peninsula. The territory of Vietnam was formerly a single country comprising Tonkin, Annam, and Cochin China, the history of which can be traced to the beginning of the Christian Era. Several times in its history this country was tributary to China; then, in the second half of the nineteenth century, it became a part of the French colonial possessions in Indochina.

During World War II it declared itself a republic, but return of the French after the war led to hostilities with the pro-Communist republican government and caused eventual division of the country in 1954 into two independent parts approximately along the seventeenth degree north latitude. It was officially reunited on July 2, 1976. The republic of Vietnam comprises an area of 127,330 square miles (330,000 square kilometers) and contains a population (1994) of 73 million.

The majority of the people of Vietnam are ethnically related to the Chinese. There are significant numbers of Cambodians in the south, and Tay, Muong, Thai, Nung, and Meo groups in the north, as well as other tribal peoples largely concentrated in the highlands of central Vietnam. Vietnamese speak a tonal language similar to Chinese, from which they derive about one third of their vocabulary. Vietnamese was formerly written with Chinese characters, but now it is written with Latin script. Through the influence of the Chinese the religion of the majority of the people is a conglomeration of Confucianism, Taoism, Mahayama Buddhism, and animism. There is a sizable Roman Catholic following, which has resulted from the activities of the French and Portuguese missionaries since the late sixteenth century. When the country was divided in 1954, many Roman Catholics moved to the south, where they now number more than 1.5 million, and, along with Buddhists, they exercise considerable political influence. The strongest Protestant organization is the Christian and Missionary Alliance, with 100,000 members. In the north, and since 1975, in the south, Communist influence in society affects adversely religious activity.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Vietnam constitutes the Vietnam Mission in the Southeast Asia Union, which in turn is in the Far Eastern Division. At present the work is confined to the southern area. Statistics (1993) for Vietnam: churches, 6; house churches, 24; members, 4,440; ordained ministers, 4. Headquarters: Ho Chi Minh City.

Institutions

Institutions. Saigon Adventist Hospital; Saigon Adventist School; Vietnam Adventist Publishing House.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. This territory of Vietnam was visited in the early 1920s by R. M. Milne and K. O. Tan, colporteur leaders from the South China Union, but the work was not established until 1929, when R. H. Wentland arrived in Saigon. At that time there was only one Seventh-day Adventist in the country, Louis Julien, a Frenchman.

While studying the Vietnamese language Wentland translated five tracts on the subjects of the Second Advent and the Sabbath, which were printed with the funds donated by E. W. Farnsworth, who had become keenly interested in this field. Strict religious censorship at that time required every copy to bear the stamp of approval by the minister of religion. As a result of these tracts the work was opened up in Tourane (now Da Nang).

Later an ordained minister of another Christian mission in Tourane, Tran Xuan Phan, and 30 of his members joined the Seventh-day Adventist Church, also through reading these tracts. Soon a church was organized there.

Late in 1929 F. L. Pickett arrived in Saigon and was located in Phnom Penh, Cambodia, early in 1930 by the help of Wentland. Because it was forbidden to do any type of missionary work in Cambodia, Pickett evangelized on the frontier between Cochin, China, and Cambodia, and a little church was built and a church of 32 Cambodian members was organized in Tinh Bien, about 80 miles (130 kilometers) from Chau Doc.

In 1937 the Seventh-day Adventist mission was organized with five churches and about 250 members, with F. L. Pickett as its first president. Six months later Pickett died and R. H. Wentland was made president of the mission. On Sept. 1, 1937, R. H. Howlett arrived to establish a training school in Saigon; this school began what became the Vietnam Adventist Publishing House. In August 1941, because of the approaching war, the American missionaries were evacuated.

During World War II Robert Bentz, who had come from France shortly before, was in charge of the work. The workers who were left were supported by income from the maternity home operated by Mrs. Bentz in Cholon and from the sales of small health books printed by the Viet Nam Press. In the spring of 1947 E. H. Wallace, L. G. Storz, and R. A. Figuhr, with their families, went to Vietnam as the first American missionaries to work in that country after the war.

In 1948 the Voice of Prophecy work began with a correspondence school, and in 1954 radiobroadcasting was launched on a regular basis from a station at Dalat, with Le Huu as the speaker. In 1952 the mission received permission from the government to open a medical institution. With the help of a $2,500 gift from the Bangkok Sanitarium and Hospital (Thailand) and other gifts from Vietnamese and American friends of SDA work, a small hospital was opened at Saigon in 1955. It carried the name Binh-Vien Co-doc (Saigon Adventist Hospital).

SDA work in Vietnam came to an abrupt end in late 1975. The Saigon Adventist Hospital, the Vietnam Adventist Publishing House, and all the 16 schools were taken by the government. The church work, although somewhat restricted, has been going on all these years. Every year there are about 100—150 baptisms. For more than 10 years no official contact was made between the Vietnam Mission and the Southeast Asia Union Mission. In August 1988 G. C. Johnson, president of the Southeast Asia Union Mission, paid a visit to Ho Chi Minh City (formerly Saigon) as a member of the ADRA team. He was able to meet the leaders and members of the church and worship with them on Sabbath. Since then regular contacts have been made between the mission and the union. In 1993 an ADRA office was established in Hanoi.

Vietnam Adventist Publishing House

VIETNAM ADVENTIST PUBLISHING HOUSE (Thòi-Triệu Ân-Quán) A publishing organization with its own printing plant at Saigon, operated by the Southeast Asia Union until April 1975. It published Seventh-day Adventist books and the senior Sabbath school lesson quarterlies.

The press was established in 1939 under the direction of R. H. Howlett, then principal of the École Biblique (later called the Vietnam Adventist Training School), and printing was at first done in the kitchen of the school. Howlett taught printing to the students of his school. The first machine, a secondhand French press, was installed with the assistance of Lyman Bowers, manager of the Malayan Signs Press (now known as the Southeast Asia Publishing House) in Singapore, who spent three months in Saigon. An unsuccessful attempt was made to fabricate a typesetting machine using the linotype matrices then owned by the Malayan Signs Press in Singapore, the house where previous to this all Vietnamese publications had been issued. A monotype purchased in Paris in 1939 never reached Vietnam because of the war and eventually was turned over to the SDA press near Paris. One of the first workers at the Vietnam Press, Ly Ba Hoi, was still with the institution in 1963, serving as a bookkeeper.

Except for a period of a few months, the Vietnam Adventist Publishing House remained in operation during the war years, 1941 to 1945, its sales providing the funds for the school and the mission.

In 1948 the press was moved to larger quarters near the mission offices. In 1951 a new building, covering an area of 3,000 square feet (280 square meters), was erected with funds allocated from a Thirteenth Sabbath Offering overflow, and Le Cong Giao, who was trained at Southeast Asia Union College and at the Southeast Asia Publishing House, was appointed manager. While he served in the army, from 1953 to 1957, Ly Ba Hoi served as acting manager.

The Vietnam Adventist Publishing House, variously listed in the Yearbook as Indo-China Press, Indo-China Signs Press, Vietnam Signs Press, and Vietnam Publishing House, received several appropriations from the General Conference Publishing Rehabilitation Fund, which made possible the acquisition of a Yoda cylinder press (1951), a Miehle vertical press (1961), a giant Heidelberg cylinder press (1963), a Solna offset press (1963), a Heidelberg offset press, a rounder and backer machine as well as a Martini book thread-sewing machine, and an ATF offset press model Profiteer 25-1. While this was not the largest press in Saigon, it was the best equipped for producing books and was the only press that processed the complete book. A staff of 25 boosted production to the maximum in order to supply materials for the 85 full-time literature evangelists who worked in Vietnam.

Managers: Pham-Thien, 1948—1951; Le Cong Giao, 1951—1954; Ly Ba Hoi, 1954—1957; Le Cong Giao, 1957—1975.

Vietnam Mission

VIETNAM MISSION. See Far Eastern Division; Vietnam.

Vigilant Missionary Society

VIGILANT MISSIONARY SOCIETY. The forerunner of, and later the women's auxiliary to, the Tract and Missionary Society; originally composed of women who conducted lay evangelism through personal visits and by writing letters and mailing out reading matter. See Tract and Missionary Societies.

Villanueva, Regino Acosta

VILLANUEVA, REGINO ACOSTA (1889—1948). Filipino editor, translator, and administrator. His formal education was confined to the elementary school training he received at Tagudin and Manila. He had a natural gift for writing, and two years after his conversion from Roman Catholicism and his baptism in 1920 (which was brought about through reading Ellen White's Great Controversy, purchased while working in the city of Baguio), he began working at the Philippine Publishing House as translator into the Ilocano dialect. His major work was the translation of The Great Controversy. While translation was his main duty, he also served as an associate editor at the publishing house and as its secretary-treasurer from 1937 to 1941.

He was prominent in the councils of the church and served on the executive committee of the Philippine Union Mission for many years. To his credit as a Christian worker lies the establishment of the church at Tagudin. He was married to Agapita Laminosa in 1914.

Vincent Hill School

VINCENT HILL SCHOOL. A former coeducational boarding school on the senior high school level, with an American curriculum, operated by the Southern Asia Division at Mussoorie, India, in the foothills of the Himalayas (elevation 6,500 feet [2,000 meters]) 150 miles (250 kilometers) north of Delhi. The student enrollment of about 100 was made up mainly of children of the workers from the United States, Canada, and Australia.

The school was founded in 1911 as Mussoorie Intermediate School, with Edith Bruce as principal, on a 23-acre (nine-hectare) property known as Annfield, which had been purchased by the India Mission in 1907. Throughout the years it was known as Annfield School, Mussoorie Primary and Intermediate School, and Mussoorie Primary and Middle English School. When the need for larger facilities arose, an estate of 46 acres (20 hectares) was purchased in 1919 on a side of Vincent Hill in Mussoorie, and the Annfield school property was sold in 1920. During 1921, classes were conducted in rented buildings. In 1922 Vincent Hill School, offering 12 grades, opened on the new site with an enrollment of 80 students. In the mid-1920s, the school became a junior college. Consequently, it became known as Vincent Hill School and Junior College and later Vincent Hill College. In 1951 the junior college work was discontinued. Until 1955 the high school curriculum prepared students for the Cambridge Senior School Leaving Certificate, but in that year the American Unit system curriculum was introduced.

From this point onward, the school was to serve the overseas missionary community in the main, whereas heretofore it had also been popular among domiciled Europeans and Anglo-Indians of the church community.

At the end of 1969, however, the school was closed and the property sold. This was because the government's policy on granting entry visas restricted the entry of qualified personnel who might serve as teachers. Second, for the same reason the clientele gradually diminished in members, making it, under those circumstances, impossible to have a well-balanced educational program. Therefore, the Southern Asia Division voted to join with the Far Eastern Division to operate Far Eastern Academy in Singapore and to send children of missionary parents there.

Principals: Mrs. Edith Bruce, 1911—1913; G. F. Furnival, 1914—1919; T. D. Rowe, 1920—1921; A. J. Olson, 1922—1927; I. F. Blue, 1927—1930; D. W. McKinley (acting), 1931; I. F. Blue, 1932—1939; R. A. Garner, 1939—1942; C. A. Schutt, 1943—1945; H. T. Terry, 1946—1947; R. E. Rice (acting), 1948; W. C. Mackett, 1948—1952; M. O. Manley, 1952—1955; H. H. Mattison (acting), 1956; M. O. Manley, 1957—1962; W. G. Jensen, 1962—1964; A. W. Matheson, 1964—1967; I. D. Higgins, 1967—1969.

Virgin Birth

VIRGIN BIRTH. The doctrine that Jesus was miraculously conceived by a mother who was a virgin, through the power of the Holy Ghost, thus accomplishing the incarnation of Deity in humanity. Seventh-day Adventists accept the virgin birth of Jesus as a literal, historical fact. The means by which the Incarnation was effected is a divine mystery (see 1 Tim. 3:16).

The doctrine of the virgin birth rests on the explicit declarations of the Gospel writers. They affirm that Mary conceived by the power of the Holy Spirit (Matt. 1:18, 20; Luke 1:35), not by Joseph (Matt. 1:20), and that Mary was a virgin at the time (v. 23) and remained so at least until after the birth of Jesus (v. 25).

The characterizations of Jesus as the “son of Joseph” (John 1:45) and “the carpenter’s son” (Matt. 13:55), and of Joseph and Mary as His “father and mother” or “parents” (Luke 2:41, 48), are descriptive of the practical, legal relationship that existed subsequent to His birth, not the manner of conception.

That the early Christian belief in the virgin birth was widespread is indicated in early second-century references by Ignatius of Antioch (Ephesians 7:2; 18:2; 19:1; Smyrnaeans 1:1), by Justin Martyr (Apology 1:31, 46, 63), and others. SDAs teach that “apart from the virgin birth there could be no true incarnation” (SDACom 5:285). SDAs do not share Roman Catholic belief in the perpetual virginity of Mary, primarily because of the wording of Matt. 1:25 (ibid. 286), but they acknowledge also a complete lack of evidence that she bore other children.

SDA publications have consistently and emphatically stood for the historical reality of the virgin birth. An article entitled “The Virgin Birth” in the Review and Herald for June 2, 1904 (81:9), attacked the higher critical denial of the virgin birth and pointed out that this denial vitiates entirely the power of Christ to save man from sin. As to the union of divinity with humanity in Christ, see SDACom 5:917.

Virgin Islands (British; United States)

VIRGIN ISLANDS (British; United States). Colonial possessions of the United States and the United Kingdom, forming a part of the curving chain of the Greater and Lesser Antilles separating the Caribbean Sea and the Atlantic Ocean, immediately east of Puerto Rico. Of the more than 90 islands and cays making up the American and British Virgin Islands, only four have any size or population of importance. Of these, three—St. Thomas, St. John, and St. Croix—belong to the United States, and one, Tortola, belongs to the United Kingdom. All are mountainous and of volcanic origin. The total area of the four inhabited islands is about 190 square miles (500 square kilometers), and the estimated population (1992), 112,000, most being of Black descent. After these islands were discovered by Columbus, various nations, such as France, England, Spain, Holland, and Denmark, sought their control. St. Croix, St. John, and St. Thomas, which had been held by Denmark, were purchased by the United States in 1917.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The Virgin Islands form a part of the territory of the North Caribbean Conference, a part of the Caribbean Union Conference, which in turn is within the Inter-American Division. Statistics (1993) for Virgin Islands: churches, 20; members, 2,306; ordained ministers, 8. Headquarters for the North Caribbean Conference: St. Croix, U.S.V.I.

Institutions

Institutions. St. Croix Seventh-day Adventist Secondary School; St. Thomas-St. John Seventh-day Adventist Secondary School.

Seventh-day Adventist Work

Seventh-day Adventist Work. The beginnings of Seventh-day Adventist work in the Virgin Islands can be traced to 1900, when A. Palmquist, a self-supporting missionary, arrived in St. Thomas selling SDA publications. In 1901 he visited other islands in the group. Soon afterward a Sabbath school was established in a private home on St. Thomas. In 1901 A. J. Haysmer and his wife came to St. Thomas, visited from house to house, and held evangelistic meetings in a rented hall and in a tent. This resulted in the baptism of eight persons. L. E. Wellman came next, and under his leadership the first church building in St. Thomas was erected in 1905. In 1908 a primary school was opened.

H.C.J. Walleker and James M. Matthews started the work in St. Croix and St. John in 1908 and 1909. After a series of tent meetings in St. Croix, they baptized 40 persons, and in the town of Christiansted organized the first Seventh-day Adventist church on this island. In 1924 D. C. Babcock and C. G. van Putten preached in a tent in the town of Frederiksted, and soon a second church was established. In the 1930s laymen came over from Puerto Rico and worked among the Spanish-speaking people. As a result, by 1963 there was a Spanish church of about 100 members on St. Croix.

In 1902 the work on the British island of Tortola was pioneered by Lee Wellman. At the village of Sea Cow Bay the first Seventh-day Adventist church was organized and a frame building was erected, which later was destroyed by a hurricane. Later, at Road Town, the capital, evangelistic meetings held in a hall and a tent resulted in the baptism of several families and the organization of a church. In 1932 C. G. van Putten organized a congregation of 27 members and directed the building of a church at Carrott Bay. In 1949 F. A. Sebro held a series of meetings and baptized five converts at East End.

For a number of years the work in the Virgin Islands was administered by the Puerto Rico Mission. In 1925, when the Leeward Islands Conference was organized, the Virgin Islands were assigned to it. In 1945 the islands became part of the Leeward Islands Mission, and in 1960 the East Caribbean Conference.

The erection of a large two-story school building on St. Thomas and of large church buildings on St. Croix marked the progress of SDA work in the late 1960s and early 1970s. In 1976 the islands became part of the newly formed North Caribbean Conference, with St. Croix as the headquarters.

Virginia

VIRGINIA. See Allegheny East Conference; Allegheny West Conference; Chesapeake Conference; Potomac Conference.

Virginia Conference

VIRGINIA CONFERENCE. See Potomac Conference.

Visions

VISIONS. To Seventh-day Adventists the question of visions has a unique interest because they hold that Ellen G. White received visions from God. In her earlier experience the visions more often occurred during her waking hours, varying in duration from a few minutes to nearly four hours. At such times much was revealed to her. She received her first vision during waking hours in Portland, Maine, in December 1844 (see 1T 58—61). Her last open vision occurred in a public assembly on the Portland, Oregon, campground in June 1884 (see General Conference Bulletin [1893], pp. 19, 20). At the same time, all through this period and continuing on until Mar. 3, 1915 (see Review and Herald 92:24, Mar. 25, 1915; 92:3, Apr. 15, 1915; MYP 287), Mrs. White received visions, or prophetic dreams, in the hours of the night.

A number of Ellen White's visions during waking hours were accompanied by physical phenomena, numerous eyewitness accounts of which have been widely published. The first indication of the vision was usually an animated exclamation of "Glory!" or "Glory to God!" often repeated two or three times. At this juncture Mrs. White lost all consciousness of her surroundings. While president of the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, George I. Butler, in 1874, gave a contemporary eyewitness account of such visions: "They generally, but not always, occur in the midst of earnest seasons of religious interest while the Spirit of God is specially present. . . . The time Mrs. White is in this condition has varied from fifteen minutes to one hundred and eighty. During this time the heart and pulse continue to beat, the eyes are always wide open, and seem to be gazing at some far-distant object, and are never fixed on any person or thing in the room. They are always directed upward. They exhibit a pleasant expression. . . .

"While she is in vision, her breathing entirely ceases. No breath ever escapes her nostrils or lips when in this condition. This has been proved by many witnesses, among them physicians of skill, and themselves unbelievers in the visions, on some occasions being appointed by a public congregation for the purpose. . . . When she goes into this condition, there is no appearance of swooning or faintness, her face retains its natural color, and the blood circulates as usual. Often she loses her strength temporarily and reclines or sits; but at other times she stands up. She moves her arms gracefully, and often her face is lighted up with radiance as though the glory of Heaven rested upon her. She is utterly unconscious of every thing going on around her, while she is in vision, having no knowledge whatever of what is said and done in her presence. . . .

"Calm, dignified, and impressive, her very appearance strikes the beholder with reverence and solemnity. There is nothing fanatical in her appearance. When she comes out of this condition she speaks and writes from time to time what she had seen while in vision, . . . for many things have thus been related which it was impossible for her to know in any other way" (Review and Herald 43:201, June 9, 1874).

On several occasions, while in vision, Ellen White lifted and held a large family Bible on the outstretched hand for extended periods of time, at least on two occasions repeating various verses from it. One weighing 18 pounds she held for nearly a half hour. This has been testified to by many and competent witnesses.

Neither Ellen White nor those around her could induce, prevent, or interfere with a vision. These experiences never left her worn or spent; on the contrary they refreshed her. There were times when she experienced physical healing in connection with a vision. In 1868 James White reported that, between 1844 and that time, Mrs. White had had between 100 and 200 such visions.

Seventh-day Adventists do not cite any physical manifestations as unanswerable proof that God gave visions to Ellen White. The supernatural physical manifestations that accompanied the visions appear to have been simply a means of engendering confidence; they were secondary, not primary, proof. They occurred mostly in her earlier years before it was possible to judge her experience by the fruits of her lifework (cf. Matt. 7:15, 16, 20). SDAs can now see the results in the richness of her personal religious experience, in the elevated spiritual experience of men and women who accept and follow her counsels, and in the progress of the church as it followed her counsels.

In the experience of Ellen White, visions in the night were much more frequent than the visions accompanied by the physical phenomena and were usually less comprehensive in content and scope. All through her life experience it was not uncommon for her to have visions while she was praying (TM 461), or even while she was writing or engaged in public address.

Often it seemed that the information imparted to her was gained through the ordinary organs of sense, such as seeing and hearing. In her introduction to The Great Controversy she refers to “the scenes of the past and the future” that passed before her, and tells of being “permitted to behold the working, in different ages, of the great controversy” (pp. xi, x).

On this point Ellen White’s experience was like that of the biblical prophets. “In the case of visions the scenery passed before their mind, something like a panoramic view of a landscape, gradually unfolding, in symbolical imagery, forms of glory or of gloom; accompanied with actions of a corresponding character, not unfrequently exhibiting, as in actual occurrence, the future and distant events” (Cyclopaedia of Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical Literature, vol. 8, p. 648).

The impressions made upon her mind were deep and lasting, enabling her to recognize months or years later a voice previously heard in vision or to identify persons seen in the vision.

Ellen White wrote in 1860: “As inquiries are frequently made as to my state in vision, and after I come out, I would say that when the Lord sees fit to give a vision, I am taken into the presence of Jesus and the angels, and am entirely lost to earthly things. I can see no farther than the angel directs me. My attention is often directed to scenes transpiring upon earth.

“At times I am carried far ahead into the future and shown what is to take place. Then again I am shown things as they have occurred in the past.

“After I come out of vision I do not at once remember all that I have seen, and the matter is not so clear before me until I write, then the scene rises before me as was presented in vision, and I can write with freedom. Sometimes the things which I have seen are hid from me after I come out of vision, and I cannot call them to mind until I am brought before a company where that vision applies, then the things which I have seen come to my mind with force. I am just as dependent upon the Spirit of the Lord in relating or writing a vision, as in having the vision. It is impossible for me to call up things which have been shown me unless the Lord brings them before me at the time that He is pleased to have me relate or write them” (2SG 292, 293).

Some years later Ellen White remarked: “Although I am as dependent upon the Spirit of the Lord in writing my views as I am in receiving them, yet the words I employ in describing what I have seen are my own” (Review and Herald 30:260, Oct. 8, 1867).

“I have all faith in God. I know the perfection of His government. He works at my right hand and at my left. While I am writing out important matter, He is beside me, helping me. He lays out my work before me, and when I am puzzled for a fit word with which to express my thought, He brings it clearly and distinctly to my mind. I feel that every time I ask, even while I am still speaking, He responds, ‘Here am I’” (letter 127, 1902).

Visitor

VISITOR. See Columbia Union Visitor.

Viva Radiante

VIVA RADIANTE. See Christian Record Services, Inc.

Vitória Adventist Hospital

VITÓRIA ADVENTIST HOSPITAL (Hospital Adventista de Vitória). An institution established on Mar. 4, 1982, in Vila Velha, Brazil. The hospital has 13 beds distributed in five apartments, two nurses, a surgery center with two fully equipped surgery rooms for general surgery, orthopedics, and gynecology. It also offers services in X-ray, clinical laboratory, digestive endoscopy, ultrasound, and physiotherapy. There are 42 employees. The chapel is located in the center of the hospital. During the morning worship, when all employees gather to seek divine guidance for another day and to study God's Word, many patients are impressed by the singing that reaches them "as pleasant aroma from heaven."

Medical Directors: Daniel José dos Reis, 1982—1987; Gilead dos Reis Bergmann, 1987— .

Administrators: Floriano Guilherme Keller, 1982—1983; Gastão Quintino de Oliveira, 1983—1985; Elias Harley de Andrade, 1986—1987; Dourivan Dantas Dias, 1988—1989; Joaquim de Oliveira, 1990— .

Vocational Honors (Merits)

VOCATIONAL HONORS (MERITS). See Pathfinder Honors.

Voice of Hope Media Center

VOICE OF HOPE MEDIA CENTER. A media center established in 1992 and located at Tula in the Russian Federation.

Directors: Peter M. Kulakov, 1992—1994; D. D. Rebard, 1994— .

Voice of Prophecy

VOICE OF PROPHECY. A religious ministry that includes a daily and weekly radio-broadcast and Bible correspondence school with headquarters in Newbury Park, California (located 50 miles [80 kilometers] northwest of Los Angeles), serving North America, and having affiliated radio programs and correspondence schools in many countries. A General Conference institution, it is supported mainly by direct contributions.

Early Broadcasts. The Voice of Prophecy program was originated by its speaker, H.M.S. Richards, heir to a long line of preaching ancestry. After several years' experience in evangelism, he made his debut on radio in the late 1920s in central California. Later, in southern California, he was occasionally invited to conduct a daily 15-minute devotional period over KNX in Los Angeles. Most of this radio time was donated by stations as a free public service. At the time Richards was holding evangelistic tabernacle meetings throughout the Los Angeles area, with Henry de Fluiter assisting him in advertising and as a singing evangelist. In the early 1930s, convinced that the gospel could be preached to millions by radio, and encouraged by his friends, Harold Young and Glenn Luther, Richards set out to establish a regular broadcast. One evening in his evangelistic tabernacle he suggested that some in the audience might have old jewelry or other valuables—or money—that they would be willing to contribute toward a radio fund. The next evening, and on subsequent evenings for seven years, his “radio pocket” was filled with gifts, the sale of which, along with some appropriations from Seventh-day Adventist conference organizations, financed the broadcasts. Thus an enterprise was established that was to grow until it operated with an annual budget of several million dollars in the United States alone.

At the end of the first week of broadcasting, it was obvious that secretarial help would be needed. Providentially, Betty Canon, a public stenographer in Hollywood, was impressed to offer her services free one day a week. Soon she was needed full-time, and was paid at the end of each day from money received through the daily mail. A makeshift office for her was set up in a renovated lean-to chicken house at the back of the Richards garage. Within two years the Tabernacle of the Air was receiving $10,000 annually from interested listeners.

In 1936 the Tabernacle of the Air was joined by a male quartet, the Lone Star Four, consisting of three brothers, Louis, Waldo, and Wesley Crane, and Raymond Turner. In 1937 the Pacific Union Conference assumed sponsorship of the broadcast over the Don Lee network, with stations along the West Coast. The name of the broadcast was then changed to the Voice of Prophecy, and that of the quartet to the King's Heralds. In 1947 contralto soloist Del Delker was added to the staff.

Coast-to-Coast Broadcast; Correspondence Schools. In 1941 the General Conference at the Autumn Council took action to make the Voice of Prophecy a national broadcast.

On Jan. 4, 1942, the announcer, Fordyce Detamore, called out the greeting, “Hello, America!” over 89 stations of the Mutual Broadcasting System, thus beginning the first coast-to-coast SDA radiobroadcast. Appointed in 1943, an annual Voice of Prophecy Day, in October, brings offerings from Seventh-day Adventist churches throughout North America.

In February 1942, after only one month of nationwide broadcasting, the Voice of Prophecy Bible Correspondence School was inaugurated, and developed by Detamore. (On the origin of the correspondence method, see Bible Correspondence Schools.) In the first month more than 2,000 listeners were enrolled. The first Bible course was soon followed by one in braille for the sight-impaired, a junior course for boys and girls, and other courses in Spanish, German, and other languages.

Worldwide Growth. The rapid growth of the Voice of Prophecy and its affiliates can be seen in some of the advances reported in the Voice of Prophecy News, which was begun by Detamore as a monthly magazine in December 1942.

1942—225 Mutual network stations; 223,828 letters received.

1943—relocation of headquarters at 805-811 East Broadway, in Glendale.

1946—85,000 active students in English Bible courses, with 32,000 graduates; Glendale staff increased to 120.

1947—608 stations, including Europe's 200,000-watt Radio Luxembourg, broadcasting in six languages; Bible schools in India, Japan, and Korea.

1949—on American Broadcasting Company (ABC) network also; Bible schools in Thailand and Indonesia.

1950—new headquarters office and studio, at 1500 East Chevy Chase Drive.

1952—operating 69 Bible correspondence schools and broadcasting over more than 700 stations around the world.

1956—a third network of 91 stations of the National Broadcasting Company (NBC).

1960—four six-month series of 30-minute daily broadcasts developed by H.M.S. Richards, to be aired where sponsored by local churches.

H.M.S. Richards, Jr., joined his father as associate speaker of the Voice of Prophecy July 1, 1969, with H.M.S. Richards becoming founder-speaker emeritus. Dr. Richards continued to have an active part in radiobroadcasting and meeting appointments until 1982. His continuous radio ministry spanned 52 years.

Moving to computer in 1969 under the leadership of Alvin Munson, manager, made possible more effective handling of the hundreds of thousands of names of interested people, and contributed to better follow-up methods in guiding listeners and Bible school students to a final decision for Christ.

A new ministry for youth, the Way Out, was developed in 1969 through the encouragement of the Voice of Prophecy Committee of Lay Counselors, and was directed by Douglas Pond. The Way Out ministry included hang-ups on youth concerns and a Bible course for youth in their own vernacular. Materials from Way Out were used extensively in evangelistic meetings, at fairs, in schools and colleges of many denominations, and in prisons.

The Voice of Prophecy Evangelistic Association was organized in 1969 with Gordon Henderson as director. The evangelistic staff included L. B. Baker, Curtis Bradford, Fordyce Detamore, Dan Guild, Stanley Harris, Bill Hoffman, Roger Holley, Joe Melashenko, and Byron Spears, evangelists; Dick LaJoie and Emil and Ruth Moldrik, singing evangelists; and Norm Nelson, organist.

In December of 1971 H.M.S. Richards, Jr., began a series of daily 15-minute broadcasts. Most of North America is now covered by these daily broadcasts.

The thirtieth anniversary of the Voice of Prophecy coast-to-coast broadcast and of the Bible correspondence schoolwork came early in 1972. By that time 10,000 to 12,000 letters were being handled each week at the Glendale headquarters, and there were 175 full-time and several part-time employees, operating an efficient recording studio; a complete printing plant; and a modern computerized filing system.

Looking to the future financial needs of the ministry, Ithiel Gillis, former treasurer and manager, began the Trust Services Department in 1972. Within a few years deferred gifts through annuities, trusts, and wills generated 10 to 15 percent of the annual budget.

October 1973 marked the beginning of "WATS Month," when listeners were invited to phone a toll-free number and request the special offers and Bible courses. Each year the month-long event results in four to eight times the usual number of mail-in requests.

During 1973 the Voice of Prophecy began to develop a number of 30-second to five-minute broadcasts aimed particularly at the secular person and others who would seldom listen to a full-length religious broadcast. Radio stations donated millions of dollars' worth of free time each year and aired these as a public service.

In 1974 Kenneth Richards joined the VOP ministry as a researcher and writer for the broadcast. Later he was named producer and announcer, and in 1986 he became associate speaker.

In 1978 the Voice of Prophecy headquarters were moved from Glendale to a new Adventist Media Center campus in Newbury Park, California. It shares the facilities with other Adventist media ministries.

During the 1980s the Voice of Prophecy was one of the first gospel radio programs to be transmitted to stations and directly into homes via satellite (1983); the satellite network was used to beam a live call-in radiobroadcast, Let's Talk, across North America (1985); and H.M.S. Richards, Jr., was host for a series of VOP video programs designed for closed-circuit hospital television (1985).

In 1989 Lonnie Melashenko began serving as announcer. He joined the staff as associate director-speaker in May 1991 and was appointed director-speaker on Jan. 1, 1993. H.M.S. Richards, Jr., now serves as speaker emeritus.

Those who have served as announcers include H. M. Blunden, H.M.J. Richards (father of the original speaker), F. W. Detamore, D. A. Delafield, E. R. Walde, D. L. Olsen, J. O. Iversen, H. L. Calkins, H.M.S. Richards, Jr., Kenneth Richards, Dick Duerksen, and Lonnie Melashenko.

Managers of the Voice of Prophecy have included H. M. Blunden, C. C. Mattison, Fordyce Detamore, H. H. Hicks, J. B. Johnson, W. E. Atkins, Ithiel E. Gillis, Alvin Munson, Daniel Guild, James Hayward, and Glen Bobst, Jr.

Foreign Language Broadcasts. La Voz de la Esperanza. As World War II engulfed Europe and the Pacific, VOP programs began airing in South America. La Voz de la Esperanza, for Spanish-speaking people, was begun in 1942 by Braulio Perez Marcio, who was speaker for the program for 30 years and became founder-speaker emeritus on Jan. 1, 1974, a few months before his death. Sermons by Milton Peverini, the present director-speaker, carry the good news to millions of persons in North America, Inter-America, South America, and Spain.

The Portuguese Voice of Prophecy was launched by R. M. Rabello in 1943 on 17 radio stations in Brazil. Within a few years the number of stations reached 300. In the first 50 years of VOP work there, more than 200,000 members were added to the Seventh-day Adventist Church through the radio and Bible schoolwork. One third of Seventh-day Adventist church members in Brazil trace their baptism to the Voice of Prophecy.

Australia began using transcriptions of the American programs in 1943; broadcasts were later produced there. When the first commercial radio station went on the air in Manila in 1946, the VOP was among its first programs. In Japan Paul Eldridge began a VOP school in 1947 and was the first speaker for VOP radiobroadcasts there in 1952. In Europe, in 1947 the VOP bought time on Radio Luxembourg for the English broadcast and soon added programs in Danish, Dutch, French, German, and Italian.

As radiobroadcasting opportunities opened around the world, other affiliated programs of the Voice of Prophecy began, using 36 languages and heard on more than 1,000 stations outside North America. Some used the name Voice of Prophecy, while others were known as the Voice of Hope. Several speakers recorded their programs at the VOP studios in California: David Lin, Chinese; Nick Germanis, Greek; and Tom Holiday, Navajo.

In 1962 Russian and Ukrainian broadcasts, produced at U.S. headquarters by Boris Kositsin and Nicholas Ilchuk, respectively, were beamed into the USSR from Europe.

Shortwave stations of the Adventist World Radio (AWR) network transmit the English program produced in North America, as well as VOP broadcasts in many languages.

The King's Heralds and Del Delker, contralto, are internationally known and loved as they sing in English, Navajo, Spanish, Portuguese, French, German, Russian, Ukrainian, Japanese, Chinese, Korean, Vietnamese, Indonesian, Pidgin, Fijian, Samoan, Tagalog, Ilocano, Cebuano, Arabic, and Swahili.

Around the world 150 Bible correspondence schools offer courses in some 80 languages and dialects. In some countries where religious broadcasting cannot be carried on, the Voice of Prophecy Bible correspondence courses are publicized through newspapers or other media. In North America, Bible courses are available in 30 languages besides English.

Three-Way Outreach. Reaching contemporary society with the message of salvation and the good news of Christ's soon coming remains the goal of the Voice of Prophecy. Three basic means are used to accomplish this: radiobroadcasts, Bible courses, and evangelistic meetings.

The radio programs make Bible doctrines relevant to the felt needs of people today. In order to financially undergird the broadcast beyond donations received directly from listeners, a Network Associates plan was initiated in the 1990s. Businesses and churches receive advertising announcements at the end of each day's program they sponsor.

The Bible correspondence school remains the foundation for follow-up. In its first 50 years (1942—1992), more than 2 million people in the United States and Canada enrolled in VOP courses. Of those who enroll, about 50 percent graduate, and about 50 percent of the graduates are baptized. A survey taken during the 1980s indicated two thirds of those enrolled in the adult courses are under age 36. Besides continuing to use enrollment cards and sample lessons to get students started, the school offers a Tele-Contact plan whereby church members can systematically dial numbers in a telephone directory and invite persons to take a Bible course.

The Bible school sends names of students to pastors for follow-up when there is a definite commitment to keeping the Sabbath at the end of the course. In addition, pastors and evangelists may request the names of all students and other persons who have requested materials from the broadcast.

Beginning in 1993, evangelists affiliated with the new Adventist Evangelistic Association have held Voice of Prophecy crusades in many cities. VOP speakers and other staff members continue to hold evangelistic series, as well as weekend reaping meetings called Harvest Festivals, in the United States and Canada. Several VOP staff have also conducted campaigns in countries such as the Philippines, Russia, Ukraine, and Brazil.

Voice of Prophecy News

VOICE OF PROPHECY NEWS. A four-color, 32-page quarterly. Circulation, 42,000. Includes radio sermons, photo features, and news about the Voice of Prophecy. Sent free to Voice of Prophecy listeners. Published by the Voice of Prophecy, Box 2525, Newbury Park, California 91319.

Voice of Truth (Millerite)

VOICE OF TRUTH [1]. A Millerite paper published at Rochester, New York, beginning in 1844 (superseding Glad Tidings, 1843), edited by Joseph Marsh. It was renamed the Advent Harbinger in 1847 and Advent Harbinger and Bible Advocate in 1849, and the Prophetic Expositor in 1854. Extracts from the Voice of Truth and the Advent Harbinger are printed, either approvingly or in controversy with Marsh or Crosier, in some of the early Adventist periodicals (Present Truth 1:49, March 1850; Advent Review 1 [no. 1]:10, 11, August 1850; etc; Review and Herald, 2:57, 60, 61, Dec. 9, 1851; 2:81, Feb. 3, 1852; etc.).

Voice of Truth (Seventh-day Adventist)

VOICE OF TRUTH [2 (Seventh-day Adventist)] (1875—?; Central Seventh-day Adventist Pub. Assn.). A short-lived pioneer Seventh-day Adventist evangelistic magazine. It was planned to contain reprints from the Review and Herald, the Health Reformer, and the Youth's Instructor (see True Missionary 1:92, 96, December 1874).

Voice of Youth

VOICE OF YOUTH. See “Share Your Faith.”

Vojvodina

VOJVODINA. See Yugoslavia.

Volga Conference

VOLGA CONFERENCE. See Euro-Asia Division; Russia.

Volga-Vyatskaya Conference

VOLGA-VYATSKAYA CONFERENCE. See Euro-Asia Division; Russia.

Vollmer, Alfred

VOLLMER, ALFRED (1891—1961). Manager of the Seventh-day Adventist publishing house in Germany. He attended Friedensau Missionary Seminary (1905—1907) and began his denominational service as a secretary there in 1907. Several months later, in 1908, he joined the staff of the Hamburg Publishing House as a proofreader. In May 1915 he married Anna Wendt. Later he served as manager of the house (1924—1950) and as the principal partner of Vollmer and Bentlin KG, a firm holding in trust the Hamburg house (see Hamburg Publishing House).

Vollmer and Bentlin Kg

VOLLMER AND BENTLIN KG. See Hamburg Publishing House.

Voss, Howard H.

VOSS, HOWARD H. (1923—1992). Minister, departmental secretary, administrator. He was born at Darrow, Oklahoma, and was educated at Southwestern Junior College (now Southwestern College) and La Sierra Adventist College. He married Thelma Jean Nix in 1945 and was ordained to the gospel ministry in 1953.

His first denominational service, beginning in 1948, was in education as dean of men at Oak Park Academy in Iowa for one year, and then as principal of the Houston, Texas, intermediate school for one year. For the following three years he pastored in the Wyoming Conference, then served as a departmental secretary for three years in the same field.

From 1963 to 1975 he was in departmental leadership positions in the Minnesota, Arkansas-Louisiana, and Oregon conferences, as well as the Central Union Conference.

Voss served as president of the Nebraska Conference, then as director of trust services for a year and director of lay activities for a year in the Mid-America Union Conference. He was general manager and then president of Christian Record Braille Services from 1983 until his retirement in August 1985.

Votaw, Heber H.

VOTAW, HEBER H. (1881—1962). Missionary in Burma, religious liberty secretary, editor. He was educated at Mount Vernon Academy, and in 1903 married Carolyn Harding, the sister of Warren G. Harding (United States president, 1921—1923). After serving in the Ohio Conference in ministerial work for a year, he became the first Seventh-day Adventist missionary in Burma (1905—1914). On returning to the United States, he was in pastoral work in Ohio for a year, taught at what is now Columbia Union College for two years, and in 1917 entered government service.

In 1925 he became service manager for the Washington Sanitarium and Hospital (now Washington Adventist Hospital) for a year, then became associate secretary of the Religious Liberty Department of the General Conference (1926—1941), and secretary from 1941 to 1950. He edited Liberty magazine (1942—1954), helped to revise the American State Papers and Related Documents on Freedom in Religion, and authored Your Freedom and Mine.

Voth, David

VOTH, DAVID (1875—1968). Chaplain, evangelist, administrator, pastor. He was a native of South Dakota and a graduate of Union College. He served the church for two years in South Dakota and then took nurse's training in Battle Creek. After his marriage to Albertina Boo, the couple accepted a call to Switzerland, where he became chaplain of Basel Sanitarium. Later he worked as an evangelist in Germany until ill health forced his return to the homeland.

In Oklahoma he engaged in conference work and then served as president of the conference for four years. This was followed by evangelistic work in Chicago and Colorado and a five-year term as president of the North Texas Conference.

He was called to the Pacific Union as home missionary secretary, which position he held for 11 years, until he was elected president of the Central California Conference. Later he served in the same capacity in the Southern California Conference. His final service to the church was as pastor of the Azusa, California, church. He retired at 76 years of age after serving the denomination for 50 years.

Voz de la Esperanza

VOZ DE LA ESPERANZA. See Argentina Radio; Voice of Prophecy.

Vredenoord

VREDENOORD. See Netherlands Old People's Home.

Vuilleumier, Albert Frederic

VUILLEUMIER, ALBERT FREDERIC (1835—1923). Charter member and elder of the first Seventh-day Adventist church in Europe, evangelist. A citizen of the village of Tramelan, Switzerland, he accepted SDA beliefs through the preaching of M. B. Czechowski about 1867 and became one of the founders of L'Evangile Eternel publishing house (established at Saint-Blaise, Switzerland, by Czechowski) and an elder of the church groups organized in Tramelan, Chaux-de-Fonds, and in the Val de Travers. After Czechowski left Switzerland, Vuilleumier discovered the address of the Review and Herald publishing house, and in 1868 he made the first contact between the Swiss SDA groups and the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists. In 1884 he entered the service of the Swiss Conference, and was ordained in 1886. He worked as colporteur and evangelist in Switzerland, southern France, Italy, and Algeria. In 1896 he retired from active service and came to America to be near his children, but in 1904 returned to Switzerland and worked in watchmaking, his former trade, for a while.

Vuilleumier, Jean

VUILLEUMIER, JEAN (1864—1956). Editor, evangelist, and teacher. He was born at Tramelan, Switzerland, a son of Albert Vuilleumier, one of the early Seventh-day Adventist believers in Europe. Early he determined to devote his life to missionary service, and was baptized in his middle teens. At the age of 19, in 1883, he began his service in the publishing field at the Basel Publishing House, working as secretary, mailing clerk, proofreader, typesetter, translator, and eventually assistant editor of Les Signes des Temps (“The Signs of the Times”). In 1890 he went to the United States, where at first he translated for the International Tract Society and taught Bible in Battle Creek. Later he engaged in evangelistic work in New England. In 1895 he joined the pioneer Seventh-day Adventist workers in South America, where his knowledge of several languages helped greatly in preaching to the cosmopolitan population. He also edited a Spanish missionary paper, El Faro (“Lighthouse”). At the turn of the century he returned to Europe and served as evangelist, translator, editor of Le Messager de la Prophetie (“The Messenger of Prophecy”) and Les Signes des Temps, Bible teacher, and director of the Latin Union School. In 1911 he was called to help in the SDA work among the French-speaking people of Canada, and spent six years in evangelistic work in Quebec and two years in Ontario as the head of the French Department of the Eastern Canadian Missionary Seminary. After World War I he returned to Europe and edited Les Signes des Temps and Revue Adventiste until his retirement in 1932, after nearly 50 years of service. He spent his last years in his native country of Switzerland and was buried at Gland, Switzerland.

Vydavatelstvi a Nakladatelstvi Advent-Orion

VYDAVATELSTVI A NAKLADATELSTVI ADVENT-ORION. See Czecho-Slovakian Publishing House.

W

Waggoner, Ellet J.

WAGGONER, ELLET J. (1855—1916). Editor, minister, physician. He was born in Baraboo, Wisconsin, attended Battle Creek College in the earliest years of the institution, and obtained a medical degree from the Bellevue Medical College, New York City. He served on the staff of the Battle Creek Sanitarium for a few years. However, since his heart was in evangelism, he left the practice of medicine and entered the ministry. In 1884 he worked at Pacific Press as assistant editor of the Signs of the Times under the tutelage of his father, J. H. Waggoner, the editor in chief. Two years later (1886) he and A. T. Jones became editors of the paper. This post Waggoner held until May 1891.

In 1888 he and A. T. Jones gave a memorable series of sermons on righteousness by faith in the General Conference session in Minneapolis, and specialized in preaching on that subject for several years thereafter.

In the spring of 1892 he arrived in England with his family to become the editor of Present Truth. In the winter of 1899—1900 he and W. W. Prescott conducted a training school for workers in England. He was first president of the South England Conference (1902). In the summer of 1902 he returned to the United States. Afterward he served briefly on the staff of Emmanuel Missionary College.

Because of domestic difficulties that led to divorce and remarriage, he became separated from denominational employment some time after his return from England. The last six years of his life were spent in teaching in Battle Creek College (the later school of that name, under Dr. J. H. Kellogg's management).

Waggoner, Joseph Harvey

WAGGONER, JOSEPH HARVEY (1820—1889). Evangelist, editor, author. He attended school for only six months, but was indefatigable in private study. In 1851, when he first heard what became the Seventh-day Adventist teaching, he was joint editor and publisher of a political paper in Baraboo, Wisconsin. Formerly a Baptist, he became an Adventist in 1852 after a period of independent study. Immediately he began propagating his new faith through evangelism and through writing for the church paper.

He wrote several doctrinal books: The Law of God: Testimony of Both Testaments (1854), The Nature and Tendency of Modern Spiritualism (1857), and The Kingdom of God: A Refutation of the Age-to-Come (1859), all dealing with prominent problems of the day. After his ordination he traveled extensively throughout the United States. In evangelistic work in Iowa in 1858 and again in 1866, he strengthened the churches after the Marion Party crisis.

In 1881 Waggoner succeeded James White in the editorship of the Signs of the Times and contributed much to the growth and influence of that weekly. Church-state relations being a prominent issue at this time, Waggoner was asked to edit a paper to be called the American Sentinel. The first issue, prepared in 1885, was largely from his pen.

Waggoner had been keenly interested in health questions, since on the day he became an Adventist he had thrown his plug of tobacco into the stove. In 1885, mainly through his own efforts, he brought out the Pacific Health Journal, of which he was the editor.

He was a member of the conference called in 1860, amid considerable opposition, to consider forming a legal church organization. Waggoner had misgivings, but was finally satisfied that there should be some kind of organization. He was one of a committee of three that recommended the name “Seventh-day Adventist” for the church.

In 1868 Waggoner was one of the speakers at the first Seventh-day Adventist camp meeting, held at Wright, Michigan. In the same year he published in The Atonement his clear convictions on the doctrine of righteousness by faith. Younger men were influenced by his teaching, including his son, E. J. Waggoner, and A. T. Jones, who were prominent in preaching on that subject in 1888.

In 1886 Waggoner was sent to Europe to aid in the establishing of the new work there. He became editor in chief of the German and French semi-monthlies, contributed regularly to other periodicals, and wrote From Eden to Eden, completed just before his death. In 1887 he attended the first Seventh-day Adventist camp meeting in Europe, at Moss, Norway.

Waggoner was an eloquent speaker, a good editor, and a most industrious worker. He wrote with clarity and precision.

Wah Nam Sam Yuk Syiu Yuen

WAH NAM SAM YUK SYIU YUEN. See Hong Kong Adventist College.

Waiamae Academy

WAIAMAE ACADEMY. See Maluku Academy.

Wake Island

WAKE ISLAND. See Far Eastern Division.

Walderly Academy

WALDERLY ACADEMY. See Wisconsin Conference.

Waldfriede Hospital

WALDFRIEDE HOSPITAL. See Berlin Hospital.

Waldpark Hohenfichte Retreat

WALDPARK HOHENFICHTE RETREAT (Erholungsheim Waldpark). A church retreat situated at the northern edge of the Erzgebirge (mountains on the border between Saxony and Czechoslovakia) in the valley of the Great Loessnitz, about 13 miles (21 kilometers) east of the industrial city of Karl-Marx-Stadt (formerly Chemnitz).

The property, including about 2.4 acres (one hectare) of land, was purchased in 1951 and developed by labor, material, and financial contributions of the members of the church and the union.

This retreat, which belongs to the North German Union Conference, serves as a meeting place for spiritual uplift and physical relaxation. It provides facilities for 45 guests (20 rooms and 45 beds) since its enlargement by the purchase of additional property and the building of a wooden barracks for camping.

The facilities are used for ministerial retreats, church workers' institutes, youth meetings, musical groups, and recreational outings.

Waldvogel, Isolina Avelino

WALDVOGEL, ISOLINA AVELINO (1892—1980). Translator and editor at Brazil Publishing House from 1923 to 1965. Following a series of meetings in Rio de Janeiro in 1915, Isolina was baptized by Emmanuel Ehlers. She attended the Adventist Seminary (presently Brazil College) at the urging of the pastor who baptized her and who was then teaching at the school. She graduated with the first class in 1922 with a degree in teaching. The next year she married a classmate, Luiz Waldvogel. After teaching church school for one year, she was invited to join the editorial staff at Brazil Publishing House as a translator, working with English, French, Italian, and Spanish. She did much of her work at home so that she could care for her daughter. Altogether she translated 28 books, the majority written by Ellen White, including The Desire of Ages. She also wrote several hymns, both words and music, for children and a book of poetry, Oferenda (“Offering”). She was a promoter of Christian education and also active in community service, serving as Dorcas leader for many years.

Wales

WALES. See Great Britain and Northern Ireland; Trans-European Division.

Walker Memorial Medical Center

WALKER MEMORIAL MEDICAL CENTER. A 201-bed general acute care medical center with campuses in Avon Park, Lake Placid, and Wauchula, Florida, owned and operated by Adventist Health System/Sunbelt Health Care Corporation.

Prior to opening as a hospital on Jan. 6, 1948, the Spanish-style structure on the shores of Lake Lillian had been a resort hotel in the 1920s, and an Air Force training center during World War II. After the war Avon Park residents appealed to the Highlands County Commission to establish an area hospital. In 1946 an agreement was reached with the Orlando-based Florida Sanitarium and Benevolent Association to convert the hotel into a hospital.

In June 1947 the U.S. War Assets Administration gave the Highlands Lake Hotel and its surrounding property to the association with the provision that $150,000 needed to convert the hotel into the hospital be raised by Oct. 1, 1947.

Charles H. Walker, well known in the Florida citrus industry for more than 40 years, organized a fund-raising campaign. Two months after the campaign began, and only days after the Oct. 1 deadline, Walker suddenly died of a heart attack. The hospital was named in his honor.

The hospital opened a nine-bed satellite emergency center in Lake Placid in 1982, and in 1989 built a 50-bed medical center on that site. Walker expanded in 1993 with the acquisition of ancillary services at Heartland Professional Plaza in Sebring, and purchased the 50-bed hospital in Wauchula, in nearby Hardee County. Also in 1993 plans were begun to replace the Avon Park facility.

Presidents: H. M. Baldwin, 1947—1957; A. L. Lynd, 1958—1965; G. Walper, 1965—1971; J. F. McClellan, 1972—1979; William Sager, 1979—1991; Samuel Leonor, 1991— .

Walla Walla College

WALLA WALLA COLLEGE. A coeducational liberal arts college founded in 1892 by the Seventh-day Adventists of the Pacific Northwest, operated by the North Pacific Union Conference, and situated at College Place, three miles (five kilometers) from Walla Walla, Washington.

The enrollment at Walla Walla College in 1992 stood at 1,733 students registered for classes. The summer session attracts more than 520 students, including church school and academy teachers from throughout the union who return each year to work on advanced degrees and teacher certification. More than 13,330 students have graduated from Walla Walla College.

The faculty numbers 121 full-time instructors, with 15 administrators and directors of academic support areas. With two modern campuses and a complex of major industries, the facilities have a net worth of $70 million. The 55-acre (22-hectare) main campus contains more than 30 buildings. The library holdings number 164,000 volumes and many valuable periodicals. The Marine Biological Station is situated on a 40-acre (16-hectare) campus overlooking the Pacific Ocean, approximately 10 miles (16 kilometers) west of Anacortes, Washington, and provides a unique place for students from WWC, as well as many other colleges, to study not only marine biology but also all aspects of biology as found in the Pacific Northwest. A large research building was completed in 1975 that provides exceptional classroom and laboratory facilities.

The college, with its industries, including a prize-winning dairy herd, provides excellent work opportunities for students who now earn a combined total income of nearly $2.2 million annually.

Walla Walla College has 17 instructional departments and four schools that include engineering, theology, nursing, and graduate studies, and is accredited as an institution of higher learning by the Northwest Association of Secondary and Higher Schools, the Association of Seventh-day Adventist Colleges and Secondary Schools, the Washington State Board of Education, the Engineers' Council for Professional Development, Inc., the National Association of Schools of Music, and the Department of Baccalaureate and Higher Degree Programs of the National League for Nursing.

The college offers Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science degrees in 33 fields of study, in addition to Bachelor of Music and Bachelor of Science in Business Administration degrees; and the denomination's only School of Engineering, which offers a Bachelor of Science in Engineering degree in three fields—electrical, mechanical, and civil. Students not wishing to enroll in a four-year program may choose from four two-year associate degree programs or two, one-year certificate programs. Graduate students may earn Master of Arts degrees in education, Master of Education degrees, Master of Science degrees in biology, and Master of Social Work degrees.

Major publications of Walla Walla College include The Collegian (the weekly newspaper), the Mountain Ash (the yearbook), the Mask (the student and faculty portrait booklet), the quarterly College Bulletin, and Westwind (the quarterly alumni magazine). A profusely illustrated 400-page history of the college, titled 60 Years of Progress, was published in 1952, written by chemistry professor Claude Thurston. The centennial history of the college, Bold Venture: A History of Walla Walla College, by Terrie Dopp Aamodt, was published in 1992.

History. Seventh-day Adventist members had entered the Pacific Northwest by 1870, and during the following decade the denomination became firmly established there. During the 1880s an elementary church school was opened (in Portland, Oregon) and two academies were founded (at Portland and Milton, Oregon). Both academies were closed within a few years, however, in order to make possible one strong central institution near Walla Walla, Washington.

Authorization for the new educational institution, to be known as Walla Walla College, was given by the General Conference and the conferences in the Pacific Northwest during 1891. The constituency of only 1,551 members assumed responsibility for the initial cost, which was estimated at $53,250. A college building was constructed during the following summer, and the new school opened officially on Dec. 7, 1892, with 10 teachers and approximately 100 students of all ages, from the primary grades through the college.

The infant institution immediately faced serious financial problems resulting from a local crop failure and the nationwide financial panic of 1893. However, Edward A. Sutherland, the first principal, met every problem with vigor, and he laid a strong foundation for the future of the college during the five years he served as principal and president. A central steam-heating system replaced stoves; electric lights supplanted kerosene lamps; and a more adequate supply of water was provided. The basic educational offerings included scientific, classical, and biblical curricula; several vocational courses soon were added, as well as a short course for older students planning to enter the gospel ministry. The first graduating class, consisting of three members, received diplomas in May 1896.

Five presidents followed in quick succession between 1897 and 1905. During this time the scholastic quality of the college declined, primarily because of greater emphasis on vocational training and the introduction of short courses. Continuing financial deficits and several epidemics led the constituency to consider the feasibility of reducing the college to a 12-grade school or moving it to another location.

Instead of closing its doors, Walla Walla College, under the leadership of Marion E. Cady, president from 1905 to 1911, expanded its scholastic offerings by introduction of four-year curricula. The result of this decision was an increased enrollment and the conferring of baccalaureate degrees. School administrators gave special attention to strengthening the teacher education program and added summer school offerings and provided for teacher institutes. During the Cady administration the college prospered, enrollment doubled, heavy institutional debts were liquidated, and eight buildings were either constructed or enlarged.

Development of the college continued at an accelerated pace after Ernest C. Kellogg became president in 1911. His emphasis on high standards of scholarship led to the recognition of the college preparatory department by the University of Washington in 1912, a clearer definition of college entrance and graduation requirements, a reorganization of the instructional departments, and the appointment of more qualified teachers. Student activities were encouraged. A Student Association was inaugurated, a yearbook published, and a monthly magazine was issued (which became a weekly newspaper eight years later). An alumni association was also organized in 1917. Emphasis on the duty and privilege of service to others led an increasing number of students to volunteer as missionaries in various parts of the world.

In 1917 Walter I. Smith began a 13-year administration characterized by steady progress. His leadership was ably seconded by Frank W. Peterson, who served as business manager from 1913 to 1947 through the administrations of five presidents. The academy was separated administratively from the college; the professional preparation of college teachers was markedly improved; the first two years of college work were approved by the University of Washington in 1922; vocational instruction was given increased educational validity; additional college-owned industries were started; and several new buildings were erected. By the end of the Smith administration in 1930, the college enrollment had increased to 433.

During the 1930s Walla Walla College continued to strengthen and expand its educational program despite a major economic depression, a serious flood, and a costly fire. The faculty grew in number and in professional status, the Northwest Association of Secondary and Higher Schools granted accreditation—initially as a junior college in 1932, during the administration of John E. Weaver, and three years later as a senior college, during the administration of William M. Landeen. In 1939 the four-year elementary course was also approved by the state of Washington. The college changed from the semester to the quarter system; separate academy and summer-session graduations were inaugurated; and student participation in the total life of the college was greatly expanded. By 1940 the college enrollment had increased to 595, and the construction of several buildings had brought the net worth of the college up to $400,000.

The 17-year administration of George W. Bowers, the longest presidential term on record in any SDA college, began in 1938. Such continuity, coupled with the long services of C. A. Scriven, who was a member of the board of trustees from 1934 and its chairman from 1947 to 1964, greatly contributed to the welfare of the college. Problems resulting from financial inflation and from an enrollment that dropped to 561 during World War II, and then more than doubled to 1,143 within two years after the close of the war, were met successfully. The campus development program resulted in several major buildings and an increase in the net worth of the college to $2.8 million. Practically every department experienced an expansion of faculty personnel and instructional facilities. A School of Nursing was organized in 1946; a Department of Engineering was added in 1947; and graduate work was inaugurated in biology (1949) and in education (1950).

Percy W. Christian, who had been a member of the faculty from 1933 to 1943, returned as president from 1955 to 1964. During those years the college experienced further substantial progress. The enrollment increased from 1,106 to 1,550, and the number of teachers holding doctoral degrees rose from 13 to 20. Five major buildings were constructed, and the net worth grew to more than $5.1 million. Intensified fund-raising activities resulted in contributions of more than $225,000 from business and industry, and the alumni association participated more actively in the development of the college. The first complete institutional self-evaluation study was reported in two volumes of approximately 200 pages each; and the Northwest Association of Secondary and Higher Schools granted continued accreditation to the college in 1962.

William H. Shephard came to Walla Walla College as president in July 1964. During his administration faculty expansion continued; he provided study leaves for faculty, encouraging many more teachers to finish the Ph.D. and other terminal degrees. He continued the building program begun by Christian, and during his administration, four instructional complexes were added.

Robert L. Reynolds succeeded Shephard as president in 1968. He oversaw the completion of three new educational structures and began a vigorous fund-raising campaign to aid the college in its proposed 10-year expansion program. Under his leadership a systematic approach to an overall physical plant master plan of the campus was initiated. Reynolds increased the number and quality of the academic programs of the college. He worked closely with the Board of Higher Education to develop the School of Engineering as the denomination's center for engineering education and expanded the Marine Biological Station program and facilities. He did much to promote and initiate WWC alumni chapters throughout the country thus increasing the scholarship and development fund.

When N. Clifford Sorensen became president in 1976, single-quarter enrollment topped 2,000 for the first time. New facilities were completed for the Technology Department and the School of Nursing in Portland. The Sociology and Social Work Department was accredited. The college also entered into an affiliation agreement with Southeast Asia Union College in Singapore. A multiyear Title III grant expanded the Counseling Center and Teaching Learning Center and established the Career Development Center. The Havstad Alumni Center opened in 1981.

When H. J. Bergman became president in 1985, the college industries were transferred into a separate, for-profit corporation and the college began an endowment program in 1987. A master's degree program in social work began in 1988. Later that year new Business Department facilities were created in the Winter Education Complex.

Niels-Erik Andreasen became president in 1990. The close of the centennial celebration in 1992 was greeted with news of a complimentary reaccreditation report. The early 1990s also saw the development of new chemistry teaching facilities and a major addition to Kretschmar Hall to house the expanding engineering program.

Presidents: W. W. Prescott, 1892—1894; Edward A. Sutherland, 1894—1897; Emmett J. Hibbard, 1897—1898; Walter R. Sutherland, 1898—1900; E. L. Stewart, 1900—1902; Charles C. Lewis, 1902—1904; Joseph L. Kay, 1904—1905; Marion E. Cady, 1905—1911; Ernest C. Kellogg, 1911—1917; Walter I. Smith, 1917—1930; John E. Weaver, 1930—1933; William M. Landeen, 1933—1938; George W. Bowers, 1938—1955; Percy W. Christian, 1955—1964; William H. Shephard, 1964—1968; Robert L. Reynolds, 1968—1976; N. C. Sorensen, 1976—1985; H. J. Bergman, 1985—1990; Niels-Erik Andreasen, 1990—1994; William G. Nelson, 1994— .

Walla Walla General Hospital

WALLA WALLA GENERAL HOSPITAL. A 72-bed institution in Walla Walla Washington, owned by Adventist Health System/West. It has a staff of 85 physicians and employs more than 115 registered nurses and approximately 10 licensed practical nurses.

The hospital cooperates with Walla Walla College in the preparation of nurses at the B.S. level and with the Walla Walla Community College in preparing associate degree nurses and practical nurses.

Medical work in the area began in 1899 when Isaac A. Dunlap, M.D., and his wife, a trained nurse, opened treatment rooms at Walla Walla College. In 1903 they built a small sanitarium, operating it in connection with the college, and offering a one-year nurse's training course for seven years. During this time 34 nurses received diplomas.

During the school year 1905—1906 the Upper Columbia Conference set up the Walla Walla Sanitarium with Dr. Dunlap as medical superintendent and C. M. Christiansen as manager. At first it operated in part of the men's dormitory, but because of crowded conditions it moved to a building that stood on the site of the present college library. The building was enlarged three times by 1919.

In 1931 the conference bought the fully equipped Walla Walla General Hospital, which had been built five years earlier at a cost of $200,000 raised by community subscription. The cost to the conference was $75,000 plus $20,000 indebtedness. The old sanitarium building was sold to the college. H. G. Burden, M.D., was appointed the first Seventh-day Adventist medical director, and Laura May Miller, M.D., president of the medical staff.

The hospital was enlarged by a new wing housing a modern maternity section (1959), and a chapel, kitchen, and dining room (1963). In 1977 the hospital was moved to its new, modern facility on South Second Street in Walla Walla. It has an active health education program, and thriving maternity, outpatient, emergency, and surgical services. The hospital's mission statement reflects both its heritage of service and its vision for the future: "Restoring peace, restoring hope, restoring health-to do this as Christ did is our mission."

Administrators: P. W. Ochs (also manager of the Walla Walla Sanitarium in College Place, 1923—1931), 1931—1939; W. F. Johnson, 1939—1942; E. S. Humann, 1942—1945; V. L. Sanders, 1945—1946; W. E. Guthrie, 1946—1951; L. E. Hubbs, 1951—1964; I. E. Burke, 1964—1970; I. A. Dailey, 1970—1973; R. L. Sackett, 1973—1977; Tom Werner, 1977—1981; Jerry Pogue, 1981—1983; Rodney T. Applegate, 1983— .

Walla Walla Valley Academy

WALLA WALLA VALLEY ACADEMY. A coeducational day school on the senior high school level at College Place, Washington, with a 1992—1993 enrollment of 223 and a faculty of 16. In 1964 it was separated from the administration of Walla Walla College and moved to a beautiful new campus to be administered under the direction of local churches.

Principals: S. W. Young, 1964—1967; G. W. Davis, 1967—1971; L. E. Poole, 1971—1982; Walter Meske, 1982—1984; Alan Hurlbert, 1984—1991; J. Reise, 1991—1992; John Deming, 1992— .

Wallis Archipelago

WALLIS ARCHIPELAGO. Two groups of islands (the Wallis and Futuna islands) belonging to France and administered by New Caledonia, situated in the Southwest Pacific about 250 miles (400 kilometers) west of Samoa Islands, having a combined land area of 106 square miles (275 square kilometers) and an estimated population (1988) of about 15,400.

The islands are mostly fertile, and almost all tropical fruits and vegetables grow in profusion. The economy is based on the export of copra and trochus shells.

The inhabitants were almost wholly converted to Roman Catholicism in the nineteenth century by missionaries who were earlier expelled from Tahiti. Large numbers of Wallisians have gone to the New Hebrides and New Caledonia islands to obtain work for a time. They have had favorable contacts with the Seventh-day Adventist mission, returning to their homes with Seventh-day Adventist publications in the French language. The Voice of Hope broadcasts from both New Caledonia and Tahiti are also well received. There is now a regular air service from New Caledonia, which makes it possible for the New Caledonia mission president to foster the future growth of SDA work there. In fact, many contacts are made with young Wallisians working in Noumea.

The territory of the Wallis and Futuna group is under the New Caledonia Mission in the Western Pacific Union Mission, which in turn is a part of the South Pacific Division.

Walsh, Mary

WALSH, MARY (1893—1988). Evangelist, preacher, pastor, Bible worker. Born in England, she went to the United States in 1914 when she was 22 years of age. She read herself into the Seventh-day Adventist Church and became an accomplished speaker, particularly at camp meetings.

She received a ministerial license during the 1930s and served as pastor of the Hartford, Connecticut, church. In the 1950s she moved to California, where she worked and wrote the book The Wine of Roman Babylon. She was elected Woman of the Year at the Association of Adventist Women national convention at Andrews University in 1984 when she was 91 years of age.

Walther, Daniel

WALTHER, DANIEL (1902—1985). Educator, administrator. Born in Algeria, he served as publishing director in Switzerland; as a teacher and president of Seminaire Adventiste du Saleve in Collonges, France; as history teacher and academic dean at Southern College in Tennessee; and as chair of the Church History Department of the Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary in Washington, D.C., and in Berrien Springs, Michigan. After officially retiring, he served as president of Solusi College in Africa and as history teacher at Helderberg College in South Africa. He passed to his rest in Collegedale, Tennessee.

Wangerin, Rufus Conrad

WANGERIN, RUFUS CONRAD (1883—1917). Missionary in Korea. Joining the Seventh-day Adventist Church in his seventeenth year, he prepared himself for the ministry by serving as a colporteur and Bible instructor in Wisconsin (1905—1909). In 1909 he and his bride of four months, née Theodora Scharffenberg, went to Korea and for seven years pioneered Seventh-day Adventist work in southern Korea until his failing health caused their return to the United States. He died soon afterward at the age of 33 years, but his wife returned to Korea and served the church in that country for many years.

War Service Commission

WAR SERVICE COMMISSION. See Adventist Chaplaincy Ministries

Warburton Hospital

WARBURTON HOSPITAL. A 50-bed hospital and 62-bed live-in health-care center situated at Warburton, 50 miles (77 kilometers) east of Melbourne, Australia. It is owned by the Trans-Australian Union Conference and is operated by a board of management that includes representatives from the local and union conferences and from the South Pacific Division. A staff of 120 includes a chief executive officer, hospital manager, director of medical services, Health Care Centre director, director of nursing, physiotherapists, and a radiologist. Visiting specialists include consultant physicians, obstetrician-gynecologist, podiatrist, and general surgeon.

Warburton Sanitarium Home began operating in August 1910 out of the converted home of W. D. Salisbury. It provided accommodation for five patients and offered a “good wholesome diet, massage, and hydrotherapy.” The first medical superintendent, Dr. Howard James, provided medical, surgical, and obstetric services.

As its reputation spread, the home soon became too small. Therefore the institution was moved to its present site in 1912, where it was promoted as the “Victorian Home of Health.” Additions to the home of east and west wings in the 1930s led to its becoming the current Medical Centre. The institution became known from its early days as Warburton Sanitarium. In 1912 the now beautiful trees in the hospital grounds were planted by A. W. Anderson, then editor of the Signs Publishing Company as well as manager of the sanitarium.

A hospital building was added in 1923 and then replaced by a weatherboard section in 1950. This hospital wing was refurnished and extended to 11 beds in 1954. The name Warburton Hydro and Hospital was in use from 1936 to 1947. To many, it was affectionately known as “the Hydro.” Further brick extensions were added in 1972, bringing the capacity to 29 beds. In 1980 a further extension added six more beds, bringing the capacity to 35 beds.

In 1952 the business office was built above the reception area to accommodate the office staff and manager. With the emphasis on rehabilitation, the physiotherapy and hydrotherapy wing was completed in 1959. From 1947 to 1976 the institution was called Warburton Sanitarium and Hospital.

The four-story Barkley Bell wing was completed in 1962, made possible by a generous donation from a regular guest of that name. This building continues to provide guest accommodation in the Health Care Centre. The name of the institution was changed to Warburton Health Care Centre and Hospital in 1976.

With an increasing emphasis on health education, the Health Promotion wing was opened in 1978, providing a lecture room, offices, gymnasium, and heated swimming pool. In 1979 an alcohol recovery program was started, and in 1986 the Alcohol Recovery Unit was completed, adding a much-needed facility. Today this unit is used for alcohol and chemical dependency programs. In 1989 extensive upgrading and refurbishing were completed in the older Health Care Centre buildings and the Barkley Bell wing.

In 1992 the name was again changed to simply Warburton Hospital, with the Warburton Health Care Centre becoming a division of the hospital. Also, 1992 saw the commencement of a $5 million expansion project, increasing the hospital beds to 50 and including a new three-story wing to house a 25-bed medical, surgical, and obstetric ward with all rooms complete with en suite facilities; a high dependency unit; two birthing rooms comfortably furnished and complete with en suites and spa; expanded radiology and pathology facilities; 24-hour emergency department; a modern operating suite and day surgery facilities; specialist consulting rooms; and hospital administration offices. Patient rooms have been designed to take full advantage of spectacular views of the Warburton valley.

The Warburton Health Care Centre section of the facility continues to maintain its high standard of health promotion and lifestyle programs for those seeking to lose weight, stop smoking, manage stress, or to simply rest, relax, and enjoy the best in vegetarian cuisine and hydrotherapy/massage.

Medical Superintendents: W. Howard James, 1912—1931; T. A. Sherwin, 1931—1945; B. H. Reynolds, 1945—1949; C. T. Hammond, 1949—1950; G.H.A. McLaren, 1950—1953; C. H. Palmer, 1953—1959; W. R. Chapman, 1959—1961; G.H.A. McLaren, 1962—1965; B. C. Robbie, 1965—1967; E. G. Thrift, 1968—1988; Acting Administrator: E. C. Currow, 1988—1989; Chief Executive Officers: T. Martin Strahan, 1989—1992; Donald E. Bain, 1993— .

Warren, Luther

WARREN, LUTHER (1864—1940). Evangelist, youth leader. At the age of 14, in 1879, he with his friend, Harry Fenner, organized at Hazelton, Michigan, one of the first Seventh-day Adventist young people's societies. His formal education was limited—one year at Battle Creek College—but he was an insatiable reader, keenly interested in the development of church schools. With his appointment in 1888 as a tentmaster in Michigan began an evangelistic career that took him to many centers throughout North America. He powerfully influenced the lives of thousands of young people in schools and churches where he conducted revivals. Mary Boucher has written a biography on Warren under the title Luther Warren (Review and Herald, 1959).

Warren, Merritt Connick

WARREN, MERRITT CONNICK (1890—1970). Missionary to the Far East. A native of Iowa, he was one of the first students to attend Pacific Union College. He and his wife, Wilma Lane Landis Warren, were the first foreign missionaries from that school. After their marriage in 1913, they were sent to China, where they labored as pioneers for 36 years in the west, central, and northwest sections. Elder Warren estimated that he walked a total of 25,000 miles (40,000 kilometers), carrying with him portions of the Scriptures, which he read as he walked, thus completing the reading of the Bible each year.

Later the Warrens served for six years in the Philippines and for five years in Taiwan, where they had charge of the Voice of Prophecy.

Washburn, Harry Allen

WASHBURN, HARRY ALLEN (1872—1952). Educator. After his graduation from Union College (1896) he did secretarial work at the Boulder-Colorado Sanitarium for two years. After teaching church school at Owasso, Michigan, for one year, he served as principal of Fox River Academy for one year and of Bethel Academy for three years. In 1904 he was appointed president of Emmanuel Missionary College, but ill health prevented his serving.

The next year he taught Bible at the Southern Training School in Graysville, Tennessee. Then he taught Bible and history for four years at Walla Walla College. Later he was head of the History Department at Pacific Union College (1910—1924). As his health permitted, he assisted in the compilation of the original Index to the Writings of Ellen G. White.

Washburn, Judson S.

WASHBURN, JUDSON S. (1863—1955). Ordained minister. He entered the ministry alongside his father, C. A. Washburn, in 1884. In 1890 he moved to Washington, D.C., where the work was just opening. From 1891 to 1902 he served as an evangelist in England and Wales while the church's presence was in its infancy in those countries. There is evidence that British Adventism may not have survived but for his contribution as a powerful evangelist.

After leaving England, he returned to the United States to work again in Washington, D.C. In 1903 Washburn played a leading part in the transfer of denominational headquarters from Battle Creek to Washington. From 1906 to 1923 he worked in several conferences in the eastern and central states. Subsequently, he moved again to Washington, D.C.

He was well known in America and England for his musical talent. His music was sung by leading choruses in both countries.

Washington (state)

WASHINGTON (state). See Oregon Conference; Upper Columbia Conference; Washington Conference.

Washington Adventist Hospital

WASHINGTON ADVENTIST HOSPITAL. A nonprofit voluntary hospital situated in Takoma Park, Maryland, a suburb of Washington, D.C. It was founded in 1907 and until 1958 was operated by the General Conference, since then by the Columbia Union Conference. Functionally, it is a general acute hospital with a bed capacity of 300, providing medical, surgical, maternity, psychiatric, and outpatient services. Patients are admitted by private physicians approved by the board on an open medical staff basis. There are nearly 1,600 employees. The institution is approved by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals and by the Council on Medical Education of the American Medical Association. It is also a member of the American Hospital Association and the Seventh-day Adventist Hospital Association.

The history of the institution goes back to 1903, when a group of leaders of the General Conference went to Washington from Battle Creek, Michigan, in search of a new location for denominational headquarters, a publishing house, a sanitarium, and a college. Their earlier survey of the New York City area had yielded nothing suitable, and letters from Ellen White had suggested that Washington, D.C., be considered.

They found in suburban Takoma Park a 50-acre (20-hectare) tract about a mile north of the District of Columbia line. A Boston physician had cleared the land for a medical institution, but after spending more than $60,000 he had encountered financial difficulties and had abandoned the project. The holder of the mortgage gladly sold the land to the Seventh-day Adventist group for $6,000. Mrs. White heartily approved the purchase and urged immediate fund-raising for building.

The eastern portion of the land was reserved for a school (now Columbia Union College) and the western portion for the sanitarium. On Feb. 1, 1904, the sanitarium enterprise was incorporated. The first board of trustees consisted of the following persons: A. G. Daniells, W. C. White, G. A. Hare, M.D., A. P. Needham, J. R. Schoot, J. H. Neall, M.D., and J. N. Nelson. Temporary sanitarium work was opened in the city in rented quarters at Iowa (now Logan) Circle, in a house once occupied by Ulysses S. Grant.

Funds for the sanitarium and other Washington projects were solicited by a general appeal to SDA members throughout the United States ($50,000 was designated for the sanitarium). Several gifts of money were received from other countries. Mrs. White contributed the proceeds from the sale in the eastern area of the United States of her book The Ministry of Healing. W. C. White, Dr. G. A. Hare, and A. G. Daniells served as the committee on building plans and location. Even though money came in slowly, Mrs. White urged the committee to begin immediately with what funds they had in hand. Construction began in 1906 on the main building, 44' x 112' (13 m. x 34 m.) with an extension on the back of 44' x 52' (13 m. x 16 m.). The basement and first floor were constructed of concrete, and the rest of wood. The four-story structure accommodated 40 patients and 12 helpers. The city of Takoma Park cooperated by improving the water and sewage systems at a nominal cost to the sanitarium.

On June 13, 1907, the sanitarium opened. Two months later it was announced that it had 21 patients and was more than meeting current expenses. Drs. D. H. and Laretta Kress, who figured prominently in the history and development of the sanitarium for many years, were the first medical director and the first surgeon, respectively.

The original building, although not extravagant, was modern for its day and sufficiently attractive to cause favorable comments from visitors. Its founders had in mind a homelike institution where a special diet would be combined with rest and exercise, with instruction in healthful living, and with a friendly Christian atmosphere. Patients were encouraged, when able, to take their meals in the dining room. The grounds included a variety of gardens in which, when possible, each patient was expected to spend a little time working. Guests could also play croquet or exercise in the well-equipped gymnasium. Physical therapy treatments became one of the sanitarium's specialties.

The hospital now provides acute care, with most patients spending just a few days in the hospital. In 1971 the hospital's first open-heart surgery was performed. WAH now performs more than 800 open-heart surgeries and 4,000 heart catheterizations and angioplasties a year. It also offers state-of-the-art radiation therapy for cancer patients, laser and laparoscopic surgery, rehabilitation medicine, a family-centered maternity center with a special-care nursery, and inpatient and partial hospitalization programs for psychiatric patients. More than 25,000 patients use the Emergency Department each year.

The institution's influence has reached far as through the years government officials and diplomats from various countries have been listed among its patients. However, in its efforts to provide service for all patients, the hospital has not lost sight of its responsibility toward the poor. In 1992 the hospital provided more than $3 million in charity care.

The institution has always maintained a strong commitment to health education and promotion. In 1910 the first class of nurses was graduated after three years of study and training. In 1950 the School of Nursing was reorganized and made part of the college baccalaureate program, but it was not until 1956 that the sanitarium relinquished control of the school to Columbia Union College, situated across the campus. Nursing and allied health students from many area colleges continue to receive their clinical experience at the hospital. The institution also operates a school of radiography, and coordinates dozens of community programs in healthful eating, exercise, smoking cessation, parent education, and current health topics.

Various buildings were added through the years—a nurses' dormitory (1909), which was later taken over as an annex for patients when another dormitory was built; the old hospital building (1918); additions to the main buildings and annex (1920); the Lisner Memorial wing, erected with the help of a $100,000 gift from Laura Hartmann Lisner (1940); in 1950 a new six-story hospital costing $1.4 million with the old hospital and annex turned to other uses. In 1967 a $40,000 gift was received from Mrs. John Jay Hopkins to provide a five-bed coronary care unit. Another gift from Mrs. Hopkins of $85,000 made it possible to update and expand this unit to 13 beds in 1975.

In 1970 a $12.5 million expansion program was launched, which increased hospital beds to 366 and provided a comprehensive community mental health unit of 43 beds. This project, completed in 1974, added approximately 180,000 square feet (16,700 square meters) of floor space and in addition to the increased bed size replaced or enlarged all major ancillary services including a $1.5 million heating and cooling plant. The old hospital building (Oaklea, 1918), the annex (1920), and West Cottage (1922) were removed to provide room for this current addition.

The original sanitarium building was removed in 1982 to comply with fire and safety standards, and the hospital reduced its bed capacity to 300. In 1992 the hospital began a critical care modernization project to expand the Emergency Department and surgical suites, and to reorganize critical care areas for enhanced efficiency and patient care.

It has been the policy of the administration to maintain high quality in medical practice, and to promote healing not only of the body but also of the soul. The sanitarium early became known throughout the Washington area for its personal touch, and for the fact that surgeons paused to pray before beginning an operation and that nurses prayed at the bedside. One of the first chaplains was J. L. McElhany (later a president of the General Conference). Today several chaplains are employed, and patients, guests, and employees may attend devotional services held in the hospital.

In the early days patients often stayed several weeks or even months under a leisurely rest-diet-exercise sanitarium regimen. Today nearly 14,000 patients are admitted annually for an average stay of only 6.5 days. Each year more than 2,000 babies are delivered and more than 10,000 surgical procedures are performed. The institution's growth is easily visualized by comparing the income of $18,000 in the first year with the total operating revenue in 1992 of more than $117 million.

The institution was operated under a medical director-business manager form of administration until 1954. It now has an open medical staff and a hospital administrator, who is also a member of the medical staff's executive committee. On Jan. 1, 1973, the institution's name was changed from Washington Sanitarium and Hospital to Washington Adventist Hospital. It is part of Adventist Healthcare Mid-Atlantic Corporation.

Medical Directors: D. H. Kress, 1907—1909; R. S. Ingersoll, 1909—1910; H. N. Sisco, 1910—1913; H. W. Miller, 1913—1925; G. K. Abbott, 1925—1928; A. W. Truman, 1928—1935; O. S. Parrett, 1935—1937; D. H. Kress, 1937—1938; R. A. Hare, 1938—1954; W. P. McNeill, 1955; H. T. Morse, 1956; P. V. Starr, 1957; H. E. Andren, 1958; C. H. Wolohon, 1959; J. F. Brownsberger, 1960; D. R. Dick, 1961; A. J. Wilets, 1962—1963; W. W. Eastman, 1964—1965; W. C. Swatek, 1966—1967; A. H. Traum, 1968—1969; H. W. Ivey, 1970—1971; S. T. Kimble, 1972—1973; R. E. Longway, 1974—1975; E. Magi, 1976—1977; C. G. Hardy, 1978—1979; J. L. Ford, 1980—1981; R. A. Smith, 1982—1983; N. U. Stoehr, 1984—1985; R. H. Sandstrom, 1986—1987; J. A. Ronan, 1988—1989; R. D. Gerwin, 1990—1991; J. Kijak, 1992—1993.

Administrators: H. S. Nelson, 1954—1966; J. D. Ruffcorn, 1967—1975; C. O. Eldridge, 1975—1979; H. Z. Shiroma, 1979—1983; R. D. Marx, 1983—1994; Bryan L. Breckenridge, 1994—.

Washington Conference

WASHINGTON CONFERENCE. The unit of church organization comprising that portion of the state of Washington west of the Cascade Mountains (except the counties of Clark, Cowlitz, the southern portion of Pacific, Skamania, and Wahkiakum). Statistics (1993): churches, 76; members, 14,434; church schools, 26; ordained ministers, 69; licensed ministers, 6; Bible instructors, 3; teachers, 82. Headquarters: 20015 Bothell Everett Highway, Bothell, Washington. The conference forms part of the North Pacific Union Conference.

Institutions

Institutions. Auburn Adventist Academy.

Local churches: Arlington, Auburn (Auburn Adventist Academy, Auburn City, Seattle Korean Central), Belfair, Bellevue, Bellingham, Bothell (North Creek Christian Fellowship), Bremerton, Centralia, Chehalis, Edmonds, Elma, Enumclaw, Everett (Everett Forest Park), Everson, Fall City (Snoqualmie Valley), Federal Way, Ferndale, Forks, Friday Harbor, Graham, Granite Falls, Hoquiam (Grays Harbor), Issaquah (Issaquah Family Worship Center), Kent, Kirkland, Lacey, Lynwood (Seattle Korean), Marysville, Monroe, Morton, Mount Vernon, Oak Harbor, Olympia, Onalaska, Port Angeles, Port Orchard, Port Townsend, Poulsbo, Puyallup (North Hill Christian Fellowship, Puyallup), Raymond (Willapa Harbor), Renton, Seattle (Ballard, Breath of Life, Burien, Emerald City, Green Lake, Maranatha, Seward Park, Shoreline, Spanish, Volunteer Park, West Seattle), Sedro Woolley, Sequim, Shelton, Snohomish, Stanwood (Cedarhome), Startup, Sumner (Bonney Lake), Tacoma (Central, Korean, Mount Tahoma, Samoan, South Side), Winlock, Woodinville (Woodinville New Life Christian Fellowship), Yelm.

Companies: Bellevue (Spanish), Bellingham (Lummi, Spanish), Brinnon, Redmond (Redmond Discovery Christian Fellowship), Seattle (Filipino-American-Greater Seattle, Samoan).

History

History. In the summer of 1886, three years before Washington became a state, C. L. Boyd came to Seattle and held a series of meetings in a tent on the corner of Third Avenue and University Street, followed by another series on a site farther uptown. A camp meeting was held Sept. 1, at the close of which 10 people were baptized by Boyd in Lake Union. From this beginning, the first church was organized in Seattle. The first church building, at 309 Second Avenue North, housed the congregation that became known as the North Seattle church. It was renamed the Seattle Central church when, in 1920 it moved into a building situated at Boylston and Olive Street East (which burned in 1963), and became the Volunteer Park church in 1965, when it moved into a new building at Thirteenth and Aloha near Volunteer Park. In 1888 Boyd held meetings at Colby. Eight were baptized and became members of the Seattle church, until a church was organized at Colby (later renamed Harper) in 1892. Also in 1892 J. E. Fulton, a newly ordained minister, held tent meetings at Mount Vernon and organized a church. Certain teachers from an offshoot movement who came to Mount Vernon the next year succeeded temporarily in unsettling a number of members, but none dropped out of the church.

Other ministers who pioneered the work in western Washington were S. W. Nellis and George Enoch, who worked in the southern part and the Grays Harbor district. Churches were established at Bellingham (1894); Centralia (1895); Everett (1895); Elma (1896); Montesano (1897); Oakville (1897); Shelton (1901); and Puyallup (1901). W. W. Sharp preached in Olympia and effected an organization of seven members. A church had already been established in Tacoma.

In 1901 J. F. Hansen and H.C.J. Walleker set up a tent at Cedar Home. When Hansen returned to California, J. J. Westrup, a former Anglican converted to Seventh-day Adventism on his way to America, came to assist in the work. A church was established and a building erected about two and a half miles (four kilometers) northeast of East Stanwood, and about one-fourth mile (two-fifths kilometer) from the site of the present building (dedicated 1960). The first meeting was held in 1902 in the Swedish language.

In 1913 a church of 18 members was organized at Sedro Woolley. Earlier a Sabbath school had been held in the home of Mrs. Joseph La Plante.

The first church on the Olympic Peninsula was organized at Port Angeles in 1909. Afterward four more were established, the largest at Sequim.

Conference Organization. In 1902 the Washington Conference (until 1930 known as the Western Washington Conference) was organized, and included all the state of Washington west of the Cascade Mountains. First president was S. W. Nellis. At the end of that year membership stood at 850 in 28 churches. Headquarters were at 309 Second Avenue North, Seattle. There were six ordained ministers in the new conference. The conference was part of the Pacific Union Conference, which at that time included California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Arizona, Alaska, British Columbia, and the Hawaiian Territory.

Subsequent History. Work in Bremerton, a Navy yard city, began shortly before World War I, with tent meetings conducted by A. E. Serns and J. W. McNeil, and meetings in the Swedish language by A. J. Stone. A church building was eventually erected, toward which a nonmember contributed $500, the gift believed to be an answer to special prayers for funds. Later, churches were organized at the Retsil Veterans' Home and at Port Orchard.

During this same period the Green Lake church was established in the north end of Seattle, at East 72nd and 4th Avenue NE. The church purchased another building in 1924, and in 1947 completed a new structure that was dedicated in 1949. For this building a Mr. Gerlach of Portland, Oregon, the only worker in art glass in the Northwest, designed an imposing window depicting the return of our Lord—a scene for which he derived inspiration from the book The Great Controversy. From this congregation came a large percentage of the membership that formed the nucleus of the Mountlake Terrace church in South Snohomish County in 1954. Later about 50 members went to augment the Kirkland church, which had been organized in 1935. Again, Green Lake furnished a large portion of the new congregation organized at Lake Forest Park in north Seattle in 1963. The same year a group from Kirkland formed a new church in the community of Bellevue.

As churches developed, the need for church schools arose. In 1993 there were 26 elementary and intermediate schools with an enrollment of 1,330. The Washington Conference operates Auburn Adventist Academy, one of the largest boarding academies in North America, with an enrollment of nearly 400.

Work among the foreign-speaking people was fostered early. Scandinavian churches operated for a time at Bellingham, Ferndale, Ballard (Seattle), and the South Side church in Tacoma, which was Scandinavian from its founding in 1907 until 1941. A German church was organized in 1910 at Startup, but by 1962 only one Sabbath school class was conducted in German. In 1993 the Startup church reached English-speaking people, as is true of all churches that initially were established by groups who spoke other European languages.

The first to work for the Japanese in the Northwest was Ichiro Nomura, who began in 1922 and remained until Victor K. Inoue arrived in 1927. After the relocation of Japanese from the West Coast to internment camps during World War II, comparatively few returned. In 1949 a church of 14 was organized in Seattle by Victor K. Inoue and B. P. Hoffman. Meeting places changed seven times until a unique Japanese-style structure was completed and dedicated in 1962. This church was sold in 1972 and the Japanese congregation joined with the Rainier Valley church congregation. The Rainier Valley church was also sold in 1972; and these two congregations united in building a new church structure, the Seward Park church, which was completed in 1974.

Work for the African-American people in Seattle was begun by W. J. Cleveland. A church of 15 was established there in 1945. Later the group purchased a church building. In 1993 the congregation was meeting in the Emerald City Community Seventh-day Adventist Church and the membership was nearly 600.

The Mount Tahoma church was established in Tacoma in 1962. The membership was nearly 100 in 1993. A second African-American church in Seattle was established in 1979 (the Maranatha church). In 1993 its membership was 275.

In the summer of 1992 a citywide effort was held in the Convention Center in Seattle by C. D. Brooks, Breath of Life telecast speaker, which resulted in the baptism of more than 125. Many of the new members joined the Breath of Life church which had 56 members in 1992.

When the counties of Clark, Skamania, Wahkiakum, Cowlitz, and the southern tip of Pacific County were transferred to the Western Oregon Conference in 1920 and 1921, the Washington Conference membership dropped from 2,422 to 2,277. But by 1926 the membership had increased to 2,475, with 52 churches and 18 ordained ministers. Because of the Depression, by 1932 the working force had been reduced to eight ordained ministers, six licensed ministers, and four licensed missionaries. But that year stood high in membership gain, with an increase of 295. By March 1993 the membership stood at 14,434.

After numerous moves in the Seattle area, the conference offices were located at a newly constructed facility on Route 527 north of Bothell in 1978.

After a period of renting facilities for the young people's summer camping program, in 1957 the conference purchased the resort area known as Sunset Lake for a permanent summer camp. The original 22-acre (nine-hectare) tract, with a 12-acre (five-hectare) lake, obtained for $16,500, was enlarged by purchase and lease to nearly 200 acres (80 hectares). To the original facilities were added a new dining room and kitchen, caretaker's home, headquarters and store building, and 15 new cabins, with an additional 25 planned for future construction. The facilities at Sunset Lake are used not only for summer camps but also for various church or conference activities. In 1985 an additional 43 acres (17 hectares) was purchased to protect the aesthetic value of the camp because of logging operations on surrounding land.

The first Korean church in the Washington Conference was established in 1979. After meeting at a church in Kent, the congregation of 150 members moved to property in Federal Way. The original church known as Seattle Korean Central was the mother church for two additional Korean churches established in north Seattle and Tacoma in 1988 and 1990, respectively. In 1993 the total Korean membership in the Washington Conference was more than 360.

Work among the growing Samoan population in the Washington Conference area resulted in the establishment of a Samoan company in Tacoma, which was later organized as a church and now has a membership of more than 100. A Seattle Samoan company was established in 1992 with a membership of 50.

Work among the Hispanic people grew rapidly in the early 1990s from a small stable base of members who had met in the Bellevue church for more than a decade. The Seattle Spanish church had 150 members in 1993. Rapid growth in evangelism in the Washington Conference area among Hispanic people has resulted in the establishment of several branch Sabbath schools.

About 50 Filipinos were a part of the Volunteer Park church in Seattle until the spring of 1993 when a Filipino company of more than 100 members was established, gathering in a number of other Filipino believers who had worshiped in other Washington Conference churches. The Filipino church is focusing its mission efforts in the south central area of Seattle.

In 1983 a new company was formed on the Lummi Indian Reservation, which serves as a base for work among the Native American people of northwestern Washington.

Evangelistic Advance. Approximately 40 percent of the population of the entire North Pacific Union Conference area is found in the Washington Conference territory. The nearly 4 million people who live in the Washington Conference territory present a challenge and opportunity in evangelism. The Washington Conference administration and executive committee has been open to various experimental evangelistic methods, but has given the strongest support to the traditional methods of personal work and public evangelistic meetings. Strategic plans were formulated in the late 1980s to plan for special emphasis to reach the exploding population in the Seattle/Tacoma area.

In 1987 as coordinated series of evangelistic meetings saw 32 churches involved in 16 meetings, which all began at the same time with the same topic. Television advertising promoted the meetings and coordinated with an evangelistic brochure used by all the meetings. This was known as Prophecy Expo.

In 1990 the same plan was repeated with 57 evangelistic meetings held across the conference. Three thousand nonmembers attended these Revelation 90 meetings. An experimental program was designed for 1992 known as LifeTrek, which also involved evangelistic meetings, a common brochure, and television advertising.

A part of the effort to reach the city of Seattle is the RESTORE program, which combines door-to-door Bible work and a deli-bakery known as Five Loaves operated by the conference.

The Northwest Evangelism Institute, a ninth-quarter training program for seminary students, has been located in the Washington Conference since 1981.

In 1993 Washington Conference secured the assistance of the Global Mission outreach emphasis of the General Conference to establish a church in Redmond, the thirteenth largest city in the state of Washington that has no church.

The Washington Conference is also seen as a place of spiritual leadership around the world. The 6:15 Holy Spirit Prayer Watch was begun in the Washington Conference under the direction of conference president Lenard Jaecks.

Presidents—Western Washington Conference: S. W. Nellis, 1902—1903; E. L. Stewart, 1903—1906; F. M. Burg, 1906—1908; S. W. Nellis, 1908—1912; Lewis Johnson, 1912—1916; J. F. Piper, 1916—1919; A. R. Ogden, 1920; F. M. Burg, 1920—1922; A. R. Ogden, 1922—1928; E. L. Neff, 1928—1930. Washington Conference: E. L. Neff, 1930—1932; I. J. Woodman, 1932—1934; M. L. Rice, 1934—1939; C. A. Scriven, 1939—1943; D. H. Spillman, 1943—1950; Theodore Carcich, 1950—1957; N. R. Dower, 1957—1966; W. J. Blacker, 1966—1968; W. L. Murrill, 1968—1972; J. E. Chase, 1972—1978; Glenn Aufderhar, 1979—1985; Bruce Johnston, 1985—1986; Lenard Jaecks, 1986— .

Washington, District of Columbia

WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. See Allegheny East Conference; Potomac Conference.

Washington Foreign Mission Seminary

WASHINGTON FOREIGN MISSION SEMINARY. See Columbia Union College.

Washington Missionary College

WASHINGTON MISSIONARY COLLEGE. See Columbia Union College.

Washington, New Hampshire, Church

WASHINGTON, NEW HAMPSHIRE, CHURCH. A white wooden structure often referred to as “the first Seventh-day Adventist church.” It is located in the township of Washington, about three miles (five kilometers) from the village of Washington Center. More precisely, it is the church in which originated the first group of Sabbatarian Adventists. In 1844, apparently, in this church of the Christian Brethren, a traveling Methodist minister and a number of the lay members, who were already Adventists (Millerites), began to keep the seventh day and thus became, in that limited sense, Seventh-day Adventists. From 1851 on they were visited by the Whites and others. In 1862 they became an organized Seventh-day Adventist church, but only later acquired possession, and eventually ownership, of the church building.

The Washington, New Hampshire, church was not the first organized Seventh-day Adventist church, nor was the building the first Seventh-day Adventist house of worship, for by 1862 there were other Seventh-day Adventist churches already fully organized, and as early as the autumn of 1855 there was an SDA church building in Buck’s Bridge, New York, and one either built or under construction in Battle Creek, Michigan (Review and Herald 61:60, footnote, Jan. 22, 1884; 78:765, Nov. 26, 1901). However, the Washington church may be considered the birthplace of the first Sabbathkeeping Adventist congregation. James White described it as “the place where Sabbathkeeping was first practiced among Adventists” (ibid. 31:104, Jan. 28, 1868).

Accounts are contradictory as to the number of the Sabbathkeepers and the time when they began to observe the day, although the principal facts are clear. For the differing views on these points, see A. W. Spalding, Origin and History of Seventh-day Adventists, volume 1, pages 397—400, on which are notes to pages 115—121. These notes summarize the principal sources on the Washington church, apparently derived largely from the research of D. E. Robinson. See also L. E. Froom, Prophetic Faith of Our Fathers, volume 4, pages 945—953.

Washington Sanitarium Mission Hospital

WASHINGTON SANITARIUM MISSION HOSPITAL. See Hadley Memorial Hospital.

Washington Training College

WASHINGTON TRAINING COLLEGE. See Columbia Union College.

Watchman Press

WATCHMAN PRESS. See Oriental Watchman Publishing House.

Water Treatment

WATER TREATMENT. See Physical Therapy.

Waterloo Training School

WATERLOO TRAINING SCHOOL. See Peninsula Secondary School.

Watson, Charles Henry

WATSON, CHARLES HENRY (1877—1962). General Conference president, administrator. He was born in Australia and engaged in the wool buyers' business. When some of his relatives became Seventh-day Adventists, he bitterly opposed them, but at the funeral service of his sister he met an SDA minister who favorably impressed him. He joined the Seventh-day Adventist Church in 1902, together with his wife, née Elizabeth Mary Shanks. After hearing Robert Hare preach at a camp meeting soon after this, he felt that he too would like to become a minister. Relinquishing his interest in his business, he moved his family to the Avondale School for Christian Workers (now Avondale College) in 1907 and studied for the ministry. Upon graduation in 1909, he worked in New South Wales with good success, but upon hearing that Robert Hare had joined the Avondale school as Bible teacher, he returned for more intensive study. In 1912 he began working in Australia, was ordained Sept. 14 at the Windsor church, and immediately was called to Queensland, where he was elected president of the conference. Two years later, in September 1914, he was called to assist J. E. Fulton as vice president of the Australasian Union Conference, and he became president when Fulton was called to be vice president for the Asiatic Division.

During the next few years he led in consolidating the foreign mission program of the union; also when the Australasian Conference Association was organized in 1920, he became its first president. His financial integrity and business acumen were so apparent that at the 1922 session of the General Conference, he was elected its vice president and associate treasurer. After four strenuous years of travel throughout the world field, he was released from the General Conference and again assumed the presidency of the Australasian Union Conference at a critical period in its history. Expansion in the home-field conferences, a large rebuilding program, and a rapid growth in foreign mission activity required his best efforts.

In 1930 he was elected president of the General Conference and led the world work of the church throughout difficult Depression years until 1936, when his health began to show the strain of the heavy administrative effort and he requested to be relieved of his office. He returned to Australia and served as president of the Australasian Division until his retirement in 1944.

Wayne, Jasper

WAYNE, JASPER (1850—1920). Lay originator of the Ingathering for Missions plan. He became partner in a tree nursery business near Sac City, Iowa, in 1901, and also sold stock in neighboring districts. While traveling, he distributed Seventh-day Adventist literature and witnessed for his faith. In December 1903, by mistake his order for 50 copies of a special edition of the Signs of the Times was duplicated. As he distributed them he explained that the money received would go to missions. This plan worked so well that he conceived the idea that a well-organized campaign would greatly increase mission funds. Conference officials became interested, Ellen White gave her support, and Wayne was asked to explain his plan throughout the state. In 1908 the General Conference recommended the plan to all the churches.

Weaks, Carl Edward

WEAKS, CARL EDWARD (1883—1962). Publishing Department secretary. Educated at Battle Creek College and Emmanuel Missionary College, he was appointed publishing secretary for the Ohio Conference in 1905. Then he held this office in succession in the North Pacific Union (1907—1909), India (1909—1913), Pacific Union (1914), Northern Union (1915), Far Eastern Division (1916—1924), European Division (1924—1928), and Northern European Division (1929—1930). He was associate publishing secretary of the General Conference from 1930 to 1935, and was head of the department from 1936 to 1941. After this he was head of the Book Department of the Southern Publishing Association until his retirement in 1945.

Wearner, Alonzo J.

WEARNER, ALONZO J. (1892—1964). Missionary, teacher, author. He was born in Colorado and took nurse's training at St. Helena Sanitarium and Hospital, graduating in 1914. For 10 years he served as a missionary in China, becoming president of the Hupeh Mission. Because of ill health, the family returned to the United States, where he was chaplain of the St. Helena Sanitarium and pastor of the Sanitarium church. He finished graduate work at Pacific Union College in 1942 and was called to the Bible Department at Southwestern Junior College. From 1946 to 1953 he was head of the Bible Department at Union College. He is the author of two textbooks, Fundamentals of Bible Doctrines and The Art of Personal Evangelism.

Webber, Perry Angevine

WEBBER, PERRY ANGEVINE (1890—1973). Educator and missionary. He was born in Northville, Michigan, and attended school at Emmanuel Missionary College. In 1912 he married Ella Mae Verney, and soon after they sailed for Japan, where they spent many years in both denominational and self-supporting work. He was the founder of Japan Missionary College, and was instrumental in the education of hundreds of young people in Japan and the United States.

Webster, Frederick Charles

WEBSTER, FREDERICK CHARLES (1882—1973). Pastor, departmental secretary. A native of Michigan, he was educated at Mount Vernon College and Battle Creek College. In 1906 he began his ministry as a pastor in Ohio, and that same year was called to be publishing secretary of the New York Conference. While there he married Vesta Jane Chapman, and together they served in New York, South Carolina, Georgia, Ontario, Quebec, Tennessee, Kentucky, Florida, West Virginia, and Maryland.

Week

WEEK. The seven-day division of time, marked off by the Sabbath (Gen. 2:1—3). Seventh-day Adventists find evidence for the continuity of the week in the historical fact of the use of the week through the centuries (both before and after Christ's time) by the widely scattered Jews, who could not have simultaneously lost count of the days. Also, there was an independent check in known alignment with the biblical week in the pagan astrological week used for many centuries, beginning with Hellenistic times. (See Sunday; see also SB, nos. 1762—1772; SDADic: "Week.") Calendar revision (1582) did not interrupt the week (see SB, no. 362).

Week of Prayer

WEEK OF PRAYER. A week of special prayer meetings (on weeknights and two Sabbath mornings), usually held in early or mid-November, for which a series of readings is prepared and printed in special issues of the Review and Herald and, in translation, in the union papers or other church papers in various countries. There is emphasis on united prayer around the world.

Seventh-day Adventist schools observe similar weeks, in autumn and spring, with varying programs and sometimes under different names, with the special aim of bringing young people to decision and commitment.

Wegweiser-Verlag

WEGWEISER-VERLAG. See Austrian Publishing House.

Weidner, John Henry

WEIDNER, JOHN HENRY (1912—1994). Holocaust hero. Born in Brussels, Belgium, he was best known as the leader of the Dutch-Paris Underground during World War II. The rescue operation is credited with saving the lives of at least 1,000 persons.

Operated with the help of more than 300 friends and relatives, Dutch-Paris was considered the most important underground organization of the war. Most of those helped were Jewish persons seeking escape from the Holocaust. Escape routes ran from Holland through Belgium, France, and Andorra to Spain, and through France to Switzerland.

Weidner was one of the gestapo's most wanted men because of the importance of many of those he saved. Among them was Gerrit van Heuven Goedhart, who was later awarded a Nobel prize.

Weidner succeeded in every rescue attempt. Only one person moving along the underground was ever caught. However, a member of Dutch-Paris, captured by the gestapo, betrayed the names of scores in the underground. As a result, 40 agents were killed, including Weidner's sister, Gabrielle. Weidner was captured twice and tortured. Once he escaped from prison the night before he was scheduled to be executed.

After the war Weidner assisted the Dutch minister of justice in the prosecution of war criminals. In 1958 he emigrated to California with his wife, Naomi, and established a chain of health food stores.

For his acts of heroism Weidner was honored by many governments, including those of the United States, Great Britain, the Netherlands, France, and Belgium. The Israeli government honored him by entering his name among the heroes in the Golden Book of Jerusalem and by planting a tree with his name on the Hill of Remembrance along the Avenue of Righteous at Yad Vashem.

Weidner's life story is told by Herbert Ford in the book Flee the Captor. Atlantic Union College established the Weidner Center for the Cultivation of the Altruistic Spirit. Through this center the college develops lectures, concerts, classes, exhibits, and social programs to encourage others to act in the spirit of altruism and selflessness.

John Henry Weidner was a lifelong Seventh-day Adventist.

Welcome Visitor

WELCOME VISITOR. See Columbia Union Visitor.

Welfare Service, Seventh-day Adventist

WELFARE SERVICE, SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST. See Adventist Development and Relief Agency International.

Welfare Work

WELFARE WORK. See Community Services.

Wellcome, Isaac C.

WELLCOME, ISAAC C. (1818—1895). A minister of the Advent Christian Church, author of History of the Second Advent Message (1874) and other works. He accepted William Miller's teachings in September 1844, and after the Disappointment embraced the doctrine of conditional immortality. He was ordained in 1850. He was an acquaintance of James White and his associates, but opposed their teachings as fanatical.

Wellman, Sterrie Austin

WELLMAN, STERRIE AUSTIN (1879—1966). Administrator and departmental secretary. A native of Michigan, he took a year's training at Battle Creek College and then in 1899 was sent with his parents to Kingston, Jamaica. There he served as a church school teacher and supervisor of the local tract society. He was married that same year to Cora Snyder. During the next 10 years they worked in St. Thomas, St. Kitts, Trinidad, and Panama. In 1909 they were called to India, where he was superintendent of the India Union Mission. In 1926 he became an associate secretary of the General Conference Sabbath School Department, from which position he promoted the cause of missions for 20 years.

Welsh Mission

WELSH MISSION. See Great Britain and Northern Ireland; Trans-European Division.

Weniger, Charles Elliott

WENIGER, CHARLES ELLIOTT (1896—1964). Educator. In 1918 he graduated from Pacific Union College and taught at his alma mater until 1927. Later he was head of the English Department at Washington Missionary College (1927—1931, 1949—1951); head of Department of English, Speech, and Journalism at, and for a year dean of, Pacific Union College (1931—1947); dean and head of the Department of Applied Theology at the Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary (1947—1959); and dean of the Graduate School and later vice president for graduate affairs at Andrews University (1959—1963). He received a Ph.D. degree from the University of Southern California in 1948, and in 1964, in recognition of his outstanding work in the teaching of speech and in the training of teachers of speech, Andrews University awarded him an honorary Litt.D. degree. His writings were published in the Review and Herald, the Ministry, and the Quarterly Journal of Speech.

Wentland, Michael H.

WENTLAND, MICHAEL H. (1880—1951). Evangelist, teacher, administrator. When 2 years old he came with his parents, who were Seventh-day Adventists, to the United States. In 1899 he began the ministerial course at Union College, but before completing his studies he was sent by the General Conference in 1903 to help with the work in Germany and Austria. In 1904 he married Pauline Plagg, and in 1908 he was ordained. He taught Bible and history at Friedensau Seminary (1911—1912), and was president first of the Westphalian and then of the Hessian conferences (1912—1917). Because of the entry of the United States into World War I, he had to leave Germany and return in 1917 to America, where he served as evangelist in the New York, South Dakota, and Oregon conferences. In 1920 he returned to Eastern Europe and assumed charge first of the Central Bohemian Mission (1920—1923), then of the North Bohemian Conference (1923—1930). In 1930 he became president of the Czechoslovakian Union Conference, and in 1935 took over the leadership of the Hungarian Union Conference. Failing health led to his return to the United States in 1936 and to retirement.

Werner, Hans

WERNER, HANS (1903—1974). Minister, educator, departmental secretary. He was born in Mainz, Germany, and studied at the seminaries at Darmstadt and Friedensau. After serving as a pastor for several years, he was ordained and, later, took his Doctor of Philosophy degree at the University of Leipzig. During 1945 and 1946 he was a prisoner of war in Siberia. After the war he devoted his energy to obtaining the release of the Marienhoehle campus from the military. From 1948 he led the school, developing it into a flourishing secondary school. From 1963 to 1969 he was educational secretary of the Central European Division. After his retirement he worked with the German correspondence school and organized the first European congress on smoking and health.

Wessels, Pieter

WESSELS, PIETER (1856—1933). South African pioneer lay worker. He grew up in a Dutch farmer's family in the Orange Free State, South Africa, as an extremely conscientious youth, often ridiculed by older brothers for refusing even to allow his windmill to run on Sundays.

In 1885, attacked by apparently hopeless tuberculosis, he turned to reading the Bible. Finding in the book of James the instruction in regard to prayer for the sick, he offered a "prayer of faith," and was completely and permanently healed. He then proceeded to break all his bottles of medicine, for in the future he intended always to resort only to prayer for healing.

When his brother John visited him, Pieter urged him to pray for healing rather than visit a doctor. Rather annoyed, John replied that if Pieter was going to be such a Bible man he should keep the seventh day as the Sabbath. Astonished, Pieter searched the Scriptures for proof of Sunday sacredness. Finding none, he began to observe the Sabbath in November 1885, even though he knew of no other Sabbathkeeping Christians in the world.

He soon met G. J. van Druten, who had begun to keep the Sabbath. Together they talked with William Hunt, a miner near Kimberley who had been a convert of J. N. Loughborough many years before in California. At his urging, they wrote to the General Conference in Battle Creek, asking them to send out Dutch-speaking workers and enclosing $250 to help pay expenses. The first missionary party, consisting of D. A. Robinson, C. L. Boyd, their wives, and two colporteurs, arrived in July 1887. Pieter Wessels met them at Cape Town and helped to guide them in their work in this new country. About four years later A. T. Robinson arrived, and then in 1892 the first conference was formed, and the work progressed rapidly.

The sale of a farm that had been found to contain diamonds brought a fortune into the hands of the Wessels family. Being loyal Seventh-day Adventists, they gave liberally for the upbuilding of the work in South Africa. After several of the Wessels family, including Pieter, visited Battle Creek and attended the college there, they were filled with a desire to see the large Battle Creek institutions duplicated in South Africa. Pieter invested thousands of dollars in the college, the church, and the sanitarium in Cape Town.

In 1894 Pieter Wessels and Asa T. Robinson visited Cecil John Rhodes, prime minister of the Cape Colony, and chair of the Charter Company, to request a grant of land in the newly opened territory to the north on which to establish mission work. In the same year Wessels, with several other South African church members, delivered to Bulawayo the letter from Cecil Rhodes instructing Dr. S. Jameson, his representative there, to give SDAs all the land they could use. Permission being granted, Wessels and the other South African workers proceeded to locate and peg out the 12,000-acre (5,000-hectare) farm, which later became Solusi Mission.

Through the years Wessels was a powerful personal worker, winning a number who became early Seventh-day Adventist leaders in South Africa, including D. F. Tarr. Wessels continued to work particularly among the Dutch people for many years.

West Adventist Academy

WEST ADVENTIST ACADEMY (formerly Antillian College Academy). A secondary school that began in 1944 as a primary school in the church building at Mayagüez, Puerto Rico. It functioned there until 1963, when it was moved to the grounds of what is now the Antillian Adventist University. In 1968 the West Puerto Rico Conference took the school under its supervision, moving it to a separate building on the grounds of the university.

In 1975 a new lot was obtained in the outskirts of the city (Barrio Cuba) and a school was built offering grades K-12, with primary grades in one building and secondary grades in a separate building. In 1993 each school had its own principal. The high school level had 350 students and 18 teachers.

Principals: Ireneo Santos, 1968—1977; Jose Goris, 1977—1978; Moisés Velázquez, 1978—1981; David Vélez, 1981—1983; Mrs. Consuelo Feliciano, 1983—1984; Jose Justiniano, 1984—1990; Carmen Nuñez, 1990—1993; Mrs. Rosa Rivera, 1993— .

West African Advent Messenger

WEST AFRICAN ADVENT MESSENGER. See Messenger [2].

West African Union Mission

WEST AFRICAN UNION MISSION. See Africa-Indian Ocean Division; Gambia; Ghana; Liberia; Sierra Leone.

West African Union Press

WEST AFRICAN UNION PRESS. See Advent Press \(Ghana\).

West Amazon Conference

WEST AMAZON CONFERENCE. See Brazil; South American Division.

West Australian Missionary College

WEST AUSTRALIAN MISSIONARY COLLEGE. See Carmel Adventist College.

West Bangladesh Mission

WEST BANGLADESH MISSION. See Bangladesh; Far Eastern Division.

West Bolivia Mission

WEST BOLIVIA MISSION. See Bolivia; South American Division.

West Burundi Field

WEST BURUNDI FIELD. See Burundi.

West Cameroon Mission

WEST CAMEROON MISSION. See Africa-Indian Ocean Division; Cameroon.

West Central Korean Conference

WEST CENTRAL KOREAN CONFERENCE. See Far Eastern Division; Korea.

West Central Venezuela Conference

WEST CENTRAL VENEZUELA CONFERENCE. See Inter-American Division; Venezuela.

West Delegation

WEST DELEGATION. See Cuba; Inter-American Division.

West Ethiopia Field

WEST ETHIOPIA FIELD. See Eastern-African Division; Ethiopia.

West Indies

WEST INDIES. See Antigua and Barbuda; Bahamas; Barbados; Cayman Islands; Cuba; Dominican Republic; Grenada; Guadeloupe and Dependencies; Haiti; Jamaica; Leeward and Windward Islands; Martinique; Netherlands Antilles; Puerto Rico; Trinidad and Tobago; Turks and Caicos Islands; Virgin Islands.

West Indies College

WEST INDIES COLLEGE. An English-speaking coeducational boarding school on the senior college level, situated on 200 acres (80 hectares) of land near Mandeville, Jamaica. It is owned and operated by the West Indies Union Conference, which has headquarters in Mandeville. The college is a private, four-year liberal arts institution offering a number of professional, preprofessional, and vocational programs and is the only multidisciplinary tertiary institution serving rural Jamaica. Its enrollment is approximately 1,500, with 688 at the college level, 148 at precollege, 408 in the high school, and 254 in the primary school, coming from 41 countries around the world. The college carries a full-time faculty and staff of 150.

The forerunner of West Indies College was the West Indian Training School, established to train workers for the West Indies and tropical Africa. In 1906 a farm of 96 acres (40 hectares) was purchased at Willowdeen, near Bog Walk, Jamaica. The next year 507 acres (205 hectares) more were purchased at Riversdale, about six miles (10 kilometers) away. C. B. Hughes and his wife came from the United States to supervise the school. In 1909 Hughes reported 36 students in attendance, 27 young men and nine young women. Although the rate was only $8.40 per month, only three students were able to pay cash. Since there was no employment for the girls, only a few could be admitted. In 1913 the school was closed, and all but 13 acres (five hectares) of the land was sold. Twelve of the students went to Oakwood College in Huntsville, Alabama; one was employed as a minister in the South Caribbean Conference, and one (Ann E. Taylor, who later married G. H. Nembhard) was sent as a teacher to Costa Rica.

In 1918 a 181-acre (75-hectare) property with a small farmhouse, known as Coolsworthy, was purchased two miles (three kilometers) south of Mandeville. In January 1919, prior to buildings from the Riversdale school being transferred to the property, school was opened in a rented house, with five boarding students. At the end of April the school family consisted of C. B. Hughes and his wife, who had returned to the island, and Johannah Daw (who married Eric E. Parchment) as teachers, with two boys and nine girls as students. In September of that year W. H. Wineland and his wife arrived, and the first regular school year opened with about 20 students. In June 1923 the first class of three graduated from the twelfth grade. In 1924, when the school's status was changed from an academy to a junior college, the name was changed from West Indian Training School to West Indian Training College. In 1926 seven students were graduated from the two-year college course.

The farm, from which the kitchen was kept amply supplied, provided the chief industry, but dairying, sheet-metal work, and printing were also introduced to enable the young men and women to earn their tuition and board. Other young ladies found employment in the laundry and the kitchen. All students and teachers were required to work two hours a day without pay.

In 1959 the name was changed to West Indies College. Substantial buildings have been erected through the years—an administration building, chapel, nine classrooms, and a large library; a three-story girls' dormitory with 55 rooms, capable of housing 160 girls; a large printshop; a primary school building; and a cafeteria, with classrooms on the lower floor, a men's dormitory, a cannery, five faculty houses, two duplexes, and one other building for married students.

Through the years numerous graduates and students of the college have become denominational workers and have served in Jamaica, several West Indian islands, Central America, Africa, England, and the United States.

FOODS Complex. A food processing plant houses the bakery, cannery, and a cereal-making industry producing a range of meat analogs, a full line of cereals, and a variety of baked goods. The farm has expanded in its operation, producing dairy and poultry products and fresh vegetables. The wood shop produces furniture for sale to faculty and community members. The facilities at the College Printry have been expanded, and it is now one of the largest printing facilities outside of the corporate area.

Through the years numerous graduates and students of the college have become denominational workers holding responsible positions of leadership in Jamaica and other parts of the world.

Principals/Presidents: C. B. Hughes, 1919—1920; W. H. Wineland, 1920—1927; F. O. Rathbun, 1927—1929; O. W. Tucker, 1929—1930; R. E. Shafer, 1930—1933; H. D. Isaac, 1933—1938; R.S.J. Hamilton, 1938—1939; F. S. Thompson, 1939—1940; M. J. Sorensen, 1940—1944; C. L. von Pohle, 1944—1945; B. G. Butherus, 1945—1951; M. J. Sorensen, 1951—1958; W. A. Sowers, 1958—1959; Leif Kr. Tobiassen, 1959—1961; W. A. Osborne, 1961—1962; Sydney O. Beaumont, 1962—1964; K. G. Vaz, 1964—1970; C. D. Standish, 1970—1973; L. H. Fletcher, 1973—1980; H. L. Douce, 1980—1985; S. A. Lashley, 1985—1990; H. J. Thompson, 1990— .

West Indies Union Conference

WEST INDIES UNION CONFERENCE. See Bahamas; Cayman Islands; Inter-American Division; Jamaica; Turks and Caicos Islands.

West Indies Union Visitor, The WEST INDIES UNION VISITOR, THE (1944— ; 1944—1959 as British West Indies Union Visitor; bimonthly; file in GC). Official organ of the West Indies Union Conference since its organization.

West Indonesia Union Mission

WEST INDONESIA UNION MISSION. See Far Eastern Division; Indonesia.

West Irian Academy

WEST IRIAN ACADEMY. See Irian Jaya Academy.

West Jamaica Conference

WEST JAMAICA CONFERENCE. See Inter-American Division; Jamaica.

West Japan Conference

WEST JAPAN CONFERENCE. See Far Eastern Division; Japan.

West Java Mission

WEST JAVA MISSION. See Far Eastern Division; Indonesia.

West Kasai Field

WEST KASAI FIELD. See Africa-Indian Ocean Division; Zaïre.

West Malaysia-Singapore Mission

WEST MALAYSIA-SINGAPORE MISSION. See Malaysia \(Malaya\); Singapore.

West Mexican Mission

WEST MEXICAN MISSION. See Inter-American Division; Mexico.

West New Guinea

WEST NEW GUINEA. See Indonesia.

West New Guinea Mission Training School

WEST NEW GUINEA MISSION TRAINING SCHOOL. See Irian Jaya Academy.

West Nigeria Conference

WEST NIGERIA CONFERENCE. See Africa-Indian Ocean Division; Nigeria.

West Norway Conference

WEST NORWAY CONFERENCE. See Norway; Trans-European Division.

West Pakistan Union High School

WEST PAKISTAN UNION HIGH SCHOOL. See Pakistan Adventist Seminary.

West Panama Mission

WEST PANAMA MISSION. See Inter-American Division; Panama.

West Park Manor Personal Care Home

WEST PARK MANOR PERSONAL CARE HOME. A nonprofit nursing home, the fourth owned by the Manitoba-Saskatchewan Conference. This 150-bed personal care home was opened to serve in the southwest area of Winnipeg on Apr. 30, 1973.

This facility is staffed by some 165 full- and part-time employees. Trained personnel in nursing, dietary, occupational, and physical therapy attend to the care of the residents. A chaplain directs the spiritual needs of the residents and staff.

West Park Manor Personal Care Home is incorporated.

Administrators: E. Gallant, 1973— .

West Pennsylvania Conference

WEST PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE. See Pennsylvania Conference.

West Polish Conference

WEST POLISH CONFERENCE. See Poland; Trans-European Division.

West Puerto Rico Conference

WEST PUERTO RICO CONFERENCE. See Inter-American Division; Puerto Rico.

West Russian Union Conference

WEST RUSSIAN UNION CONFERENCE. See Euro-Asia Division; Russia.

West São Paulo Conference

WEST SÃO PAULO CONFERENCE. See Brazil; South American Division.

West Shores Medical Clinic

WEST SHORES MEDICAL CLINIC. An outpatient clinic established in 1978 by the Arkansas-Louisiana Conference in Hot Springs, Arkansas. The institution employs 20 people, including two medical doctors, an allergist, a counselor, and an office staff.

West Siberian Conference

WEST SIBERIAN CONFERENCE. See Euro-Asia Division; Russia.

West Tanzania Field

WEST TANZANIA FIELD. See Eastern Africa Division; Tanzania.

West Venezuela Mission

WEST VENEZUELA MISSION. See Inter-American Division; Venezuela.

West Virginia

WEST VIRGINIA. See Allegheny West Conference; Chesapeake Conference; Mountain View Conference.

West Virginia Conference

WEST VIRGINIA CONFERENCE. See Mountain View Conference.

West Visayan Academy

WEST VISAYAN ACADEMY. A coeducational boarding school on the senior high school level operated near Iloilo City, Philippines, by the West Visayan Mission. It holds the position as the cradle of Seventh-day Adventist education on the west side of the Philippine archipelago.

The forerunners of the academy were the Jaro, Iloilo, church school (opened in 1916 with Juana Savedia as teacher) and the Sido church school, which merged together in 1926 and added the first year high school (eighth grade) to the curriculum.

With the purchase of 108 acres (44 hectares) for a school site at Buenavista, Guimaras Island, by the West Visayan Mission, the school was transferred, and in 1930 the second year of high school was offered. In 1935, with almost 150 students and 10 teachers, the school became a four-year academy. During this time the much-needed school road and water systems were acquired.

During World War II the school plant was totally destroyed, and the difficulty in crossing Guimaras Strait at that time influenced the West Visayan Mission to sell the school property for 8,000 pesos.

In 1945, after being closed for three years, West Visayan Academy was reopened at Molo in an apartment leased for one year, with approximately 250 students, under Serafin Flores, principal, and Romulo Ferrer, treasurer.

During the school year 1946—1947 the academy, with about 200 students, operated at Zarraga in an improvised nipa-roofed building and an army tent. After an attempt to purchase a school site at Zarraga failed, land was secured from Tirso Jamandre, Sr., an SDA from the La Paz church, who sold 24.7 acres (10 hectares) located 20 miles (32 kilometers) from Iloilo City. Jamandre also donated some land.

During 1948—1949 there were 380 students and 12 staff members. Despite the problems posed by lack of potable water, by a muddy campus and floods during the rainy season, and, in general, by the unsettled conditions in the postwar period, the school operated successfully. From the sum originally appropriated by the General Conference and the Far Eastern Division, an administration building, a dining hall, and two teachers' cottages were erected under the supervision of Romulo Ferrer. Later other buildings were added and other improvements were made.

In 1949—1950 the enrollment was nearly 500 and the school showed an operating gain of 9,000 pesos. Farm and gardens provided training and employment to students.

In 1971 a new two-story concrete administration building was built to take the place of the old building. Funds for its construction were provided from special Far Eastern Division appropriations and from the local membership. West Visayan Academy, the forerunner of Philippine SDA academies, has proved its worth to the people it has served. Many of those who entered its portals and were trained by dedicated Christian teachers have become pillars of the remnant church.

In grateful recognition for what WVA had done for its students, the United States-based alumni association decided to sponsor a huge project that would benefit the school. Through the initiation of Dr. Rudy Hilado, association president, the construction of a new boys' dormitory was begun in 1989. The new edifice cost the WVA alumni association 2.5 million pesos.

In 1991 the enrollment totaled 300. The construction of the new cafeteria was started, but because of financial constraints, building was temporarily suspended.

Principals: D. L. Millam, 1931—1932; Mrs. W. J. Blake, 1932—1934; C. E. Thurston, 1934—1938; Miss D. Stoelting, 1938—1939; William C. Williams, 1939—1941; James M. Lee, 1941—1942; 1943—1945, war years; S. S. Flores, 1946—1949; B. B. Alsaybar, 1949—1952; U. M. Oliva, 1953—1959; N. R. Arit, 1959—1962; A. C. Segovia, 1962—1963; S. G. Miraflores, 1963—1965; A. C. Segovia, 1965—1966; E. N. Jornada, 1966—1969; N. F. Fadri, 1969—1970; B. V. Lobitana, 1970—1973; C. O. Gravino, 1973—1974; B. V. Lobitana, 1975—1978; E. M. Jucaban, 1978—1979; E. F. Palma, 1980—1982; B. V. Lobitana, 1982—1985; J. B. Alsaybar, 1985—1987; E. M. Jucaban, 1987—1992; E. V. Galve, 1992—1993; Mergy G. Ibanez, 1993— .

West Visayan Mission

WEST VISAYAN MISSION. See Far Eastern Division; Philippines.

West Zaïre Field

WEST ZAÏRE FIELD. See Africa-Indian Ocean Division; Zaïre.

West Zambia Field

WEST ZAMBIA FIELD. See Eastern Africa Division; Zambia.

West Zimbabwe Conference

WEST ZIMBABWE CONFERENCE. See Eastern Africa Division; Zimbabwe.

Western Australian Conference

WESTERN AUSTRALIAN CONFERENCE. See Australia; South Pacific Division.

Western Caroline Islands

WESTERN CAROLINE ISLANDS. See Guam and Micronesia.

Western Health Reform Institute

WESTERN HEALTH REFORM INSTITUTE. See Andrews University; Battle Creek Sanitarium.

Western Highlands Mission

WESTERN HIGHLANDS MISSION. See Papua New Guinea; South Pacific Division.

Western Kenya Field

WESTERN KENYA FIELD. See Eastern Africa Division; Kenya.

Western Indian Mission Training School

WESTERN INDIAN MISSION TRAINING SCHOOL. See Seventh-day Adventist Higher Secondary School \(Lasalgaon\).

Western Mindanao Academy

WESTERN MINDANAO ACADEMY. A coeducational boarding academy on the senior high school level operated by Western Mindanao Mission at the edge of the town of Dumingag, Zamboanga del Sur, on the western part of Mindanao Island, Philippines.

Permitted by the government to operate as a junior academy in 1963 as a day school, the school began with three classrooms and a chapel for religious services. It became a senior day-school academy on July 8, 1968. A tract of land, 50 acres (20 hectares), was bought and a dormitory built, and on Oct. 19, 1970, the school transferred to its new location, using the dormitory as an administration building. During the next four years an auditorium building, temporary cafeteria, another dormitory, and faculty residence were constructed.

Since July 1, 1972, the school has been fully recognized by the Department of Education of the republic of the Philippines. For nine years it operated under government permit. The school began operating as a boarding academy on June 3, 1974, with an enrollment of 353 and a faculty of 11. Most of the students, all nationals, are from Seventh-day Adventist homes.

In 1984 an administration building was constructed. It houses four offices and six classrooms, the school auditorium, and the library.

About 100 gymellna trees grow on the campus. These partly supply lumber for the carpentry needs of the school, including dormitories and the construction of a ramp between the administration building and the auditorium in 1990. In 1992 a tennis court was added beside the basketball court.

Western Mindanao Academy is now affiliated with the Association of Christian Schools and Colleges, a national organization of Christian educational institutions in the Philippines.

From the time Western Mindanao Academy opened as a senior academy in 1968 to 1993, 1,058 students had graduated, with about 13 percent working in SDA institutions.

Principals: G. B. Mendoza, 1963—1969; V. J. Secong, 1969—1971; N. N. Macarine, 1971—1972; G. A. Arafles, 1972—1974; E. G. Ibanez, 1974—1976; R. A. Tabingo, 1976—1978; E. G. Ibanez, 1978—1982; H. R. Zamora, 1982—1984; Mrs. E. M. Baculanta, 1984—1987; M. S. Sanes, 1987—1994; D. D. Ambaan, 1994—.

Western Mindanao Mission

WESTERN MINDANAO MISSION. See Far Eastern Division; Philippines.

Western Normal Institute

WESTERN NORMAL INSTITUTE. See Lodi Academy.

Western Pacific Union Mission

WESTERN PACIFIC UNION MISSION. See Kiribati; Nauru; New Caledonia and Loyalty Islands; Solomon Islands; South Pacific Division; Vanuatu; Wallis Archipelago.

Western Sahara

WESTERN SAHARA (formerly Spanish Sahara). An area on the northwest coast of Africa, bordered on the north by Morocco, the east and south by Algeria and Mauritania, and the west by the Atlantic Ocean. It has an area of 102,700 square miles (266,000 square kilometers) and a population (1994) of 220,000, mostly Arab and Berber nomads who herd camels, goats, and sheep. The predominant religion is Islam.

The territory was controlled by either Spain or Morocco for more than 400 years. In 1958 Spain made the area one of its provinces—Spanish Sahara. In 1976 Spain ceded the territory to Morocco and Mauritania; at that time it was renamed Western Sahara. Shortly thereafter an independence organization, the Polisario Front, supported by Algeria, proclaimed a new Sahrawi Arab Democratic Republic. In 1979 Mauritania withdrew its claims to the territory. Fighting between Morocco and the Polisario Front continued until 1991, when a ceasefire was agreed upon, contingent on a UN referendum to determine whether Western Sahara should become independent or remain a part of Morocco.

Currently there is no Seventh-day Adventist work in Western Sahara.

Western Samoa

WESTERN SAMOA. See Samoa and Tokelau Islands.

Western Solomon Islands Mission

WESTERN SOLOMON ISLANDS MISSION. See Solomon Islands; South Pacific Division.

Western Uganda Field

WESTERN UGANDA FIELD. See Eastern Africa Division; Uganda.

Western Ukrainian Conference

WESTERN UKRAINIAN CONFERENCE. See Euro-Asia Division; Ukraine.

Western Washington Missionary Academy

WESTERN WASHINGTON MISSIONARY ACADEMY. See Auburn Adventist Academy.

Westico Foods

WESTICO FOODS. See Inter-American Health Food Company.

Westphal, Charles Edgar

WESTPHAL, CHARLES EDGAR (1890—1965). Missionary physician to Argentina. A native of Wisconsin, Charles, when he was 4 years old, was taken to Argentina, where his father served as the first Seventh-day Adventist minister in South America. He studied in colleges and universities in Chile and graduated from the medical course in 1919. In 1920 he began work as a doctor in the Sanatorio Adventista del Plata, where he worked for 35 years. Besides serving as director of the sanitarium, he worked in the Laboratory and X-ray departments and taught in the School of Nursing. In 1921 he was married to Amalia Schimpf. He took a postgraduate course in the United States and then returned to his work in Argentina. He retired in 1955, but continued as a teacher in the Nursing School and in the Red Cross School of Nursing of Argentina.

Westphal, Frank Henry

WESTPHAL, FRANK HENRY (1858—1944). Pioneer missionary to South America. He was born near New London, Wisconsin. He was converted to the Seventh-day Adventist faith at the age of 19 through the preaching of H. W. Decker in New London. He was baptized about 1878 and made leader of the newly organized church. He attended Battle Creek College for a time, sold the German missionary paper (Die Stimme der Wahrheit) for a while, and then entered the ministry. He was ordained in 1883. For a time he had charge of the city mission in Milwaukee. Later he taught history in the German Department of Union College.

In 1894 he was called to South America and became the first ordained SDA minister assigned to the South American continent. He landed in Buenos Aires, Argentina, and from there went to Crespo, in the province of Entre Ríos, where a large colony of Germans from Russia had settled, a number of whom had begun keeping the Sabbath truth through the influence of the Riffel family who had accepted the SDA faith in Kansas. He began tent meetings on Sept. 10, 1895, in the town of Diamante, the first such Seventh-day Adventist meetings in South America.

With his headquarters established in Buenos Aires, Westphal worked with success in Argentina, Uruguay, and Brazil, but broken health caused him to return to the United States for furlough in 1901. After his return he taught Bible at Union College for three years. In 1904, having regained his health, he went back to South America, this time to work in Chile, where he remained for 16 years, most of the time as president of the Chile Conference.

About 1920 Westphal and his wife returned to the United States because of her failing health. They settled in California, where he continued in active employment until 1924.

Westphal, Joseph W.

WESTPHAL, JOSEPH W. (1861—1949). Mission administrator. He was born in New London, Wisconsin. Converted in 1879, and baptized in Poy Sippi, Wisconsin, by A. D. Olsen, he began his work at the age of 22. He received his first ministerial license at 25 and was ordained June 22, 1891, at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, by S. N. Haskell, R. C. Porter, and M. H. Brown. From 1887 to 1895 he had charge of the German work in District no. 5 of the General Conference. From 1895 to 1897, he worked among the Germans in Kansas. From 1897 to 1901 he was president of the Kansas Conference.

In 1901 Westphal was sent to Argentina, where he organized the South American Union Mission and became its first superintendent. Later when the mission was reorganized as a union conference, he was chosen president. This post he filled for 20 years, until he was made field secretary of the South American Division. In 1930 he became field secretary of the General Conference. He retired at the age of 71.

Westphal, Wilma Ross

WESTPHAL, WILMA ROSS (1907—1987). Author, teacher. Born in Kansas, she served with her husband for 15 years in Central and South America, seven years in Takoma Park, Maryland, and 20 years in the Northern California Conference. She authored seven books and many articles, and also taught at Rogue River Academy in Oregon and at Pacific Union College.

Wheeler, Frederick

WHEELER, FREDERICK (1811—1910). Pioneer Adventist minister, reputed to be the first ordained Adventist minister to preach in favor of the seventh-day Sabbath. Not much is known of his early life or experience, except that about 1840 he was an ordained minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church and became its circuit rider in the vicinity of Washington and Hillsboro in New Hampshire. In 1842 he became acquainted with the Millerite views and thereafter was active in the propagation of the Adventist views. As he later reported, he became convinced that the seventh-day Sabbath was sacred through personal study he had undertaken some time in March 1844, after a discussion with Mrs. Rachel Oakes (later Preston), a Seventh Day Baptist of Washington, New Hampshire. He preached and farmed in the neighborhood of his home until 1851, when he met James White, who invited him to go farther afield with his ministry. In 1857 he moved to the state of New York, and in 1861 settled on a farm near West Monroe.

White, Arthur Lacey

WHITE, ARTHUR LACEY (1907—1991). One of seven grandchildren of Ellen G. White, he was an author, minister, and teacher who served for more than 40 years (1937—1978) as secretary of the Ellen G. White Estate. Born Oct. 5, 1907, near St. Helena, California, he was the third son of Mrs. White's third son, W. C. (Willie) White. Family legend suggests that he was named "Arthur" for Arthur G. Daniells, president of the General Conference, and "Lacey" for H. Camden Lacey, who taught Bible and biblical languages in Australia, the United States, and England. Arthur was only 7 when his grandmother died, but because he'd lived only a short distance from her Elmshaven home, he had often visited her. Even in the midst of her busy schedule of writing and counseling, she would take time to talk with him.

Young Arthur began his education in the Sanitarium intermediate church school. From there he advanced to the Pacific Union College Academy, and then to Pacific Union College, where he took courses in secretarial skills and business administration. Throughout his life he found practical use for shorthand and typing.

After receiving his professional certificate, he married Frieda Belle Swingle on June 26, 1928, and the newlyweds headed for Madison College, Tennessee, in a Hupmobile touring car. At Madison, Arthur was paid 10 cents an hour as assistant accountant, and Frieda served as secretary to President E. A. Sutherland. One year later, at the age of 22, Arthur was invited to return to California to assist his father, who was secretary of the board of trustees of the Ellen G. White Estate at Elmshaven. The board, consisting originally of five denominational leaders, whom she named, had been set up by Mrs. White in her will. Its purpose was to care for her writings, both published and unpublished, and arrange for their continued preparation and circulation throughout the world. In the years that followed Arthur's arrival at Elmshaven, he was assigned more and more of the responsibilities connected with the office of secretary of the estate. Thus, when his 83-year-old father died suddenly on Sept. 1, 1937, Arthur was elected secretary.

The board had approved a plan to move all the Ellen White materials from Elmshaven to the world headquarters of the church in Washington, D.C., upon the death of W. C. White; hence one of Arthur's first responsibilities was to implement this plan. Without delay he closed up the work at St. Helena and shipped all the Ellen White materials, including the library and various files of letters and documents, to the General Conference headquarters in the East. The new young secretary obtained a freight car from the Southern Pacific Railroad, and personally padlocked it in St. Helena. "I knew the agent, and got a good, clean, steel freight car," he commented later. When it arrived on the siding behind the Review and Herald printing plant in Takoma Park, he personally unlocked it and organized the materials in the small office and vault provided in the headquarters building. Because the work of the White Estate was in its infancy in 1938, church leaders felt that the responsibilities connected with the secretaryship would not consume Arthur's full time; hence they also put him in charge of the General Conference library. At the beginning they assigned him a half-time secretary.

Making the move to Washington with the Whites were their two oldest sons, James and William. Not long after the family was settled, a third son, Arthur, was born.

In 1940 the 33-year-old secretary of the White Estate was ordained to the gospel ministry of the Seventh-day Adventist Church. As time passed, the scope of the work as secretary of the board of trustees expanded, as did the size of the staff. Eventually it consisted of the secretary, four associate secretaries, an assistant secretary, and four office secretaries. Later two branch offices were added—one at Andrews University, the other at Loma Linda University.

In his some 40 years as secretary of the White Estate, White was called upon to travel around the world, speaking, teaching, and conducting seminars for the SDA Theological Seminary. During a period of 19 years he taught in 13 seminary extension schools. He also taught 14 classes in prophetic guidance at the seminary. In the early years air travel had not yet become popular, so overseas trips were made by ship. Inasmuch as the church endeavored to make trips as cost-effective as possible, on occasion these lasted from four to six months. The trips were not only long but intensive. On some days White spoke as many as five times, usually through an interpreter, and occasionally through two or three interpreters in succession. In recognition of his grasp of theological subjects and his contribution to Seventh-day Adventist education, Andrews University awarded him a D.D. degree in 1973.

During White's tenure as secretary of the White Estate, he and his assistants produced many compilations from Mrs. White's unpublished writings and from manuscripts and articles that appeared in journals of the church during her life. Better known books include The Adventist Home, Child Guidance, Colporteur Ministry, Counsels on Diet and Foods, Counsels on Stewardship, Counsels to Writers and Editors, Evangelism, Medical Ministry, three volumes of Selected Messages, Temperance, and a dozen books of daily devotional messages. Under his direction, a three-volume index to the writings of Ellen White also was produced.

Besides being a skillful compiler, White was a prolific writer. He wrote more than 150 articles for various magazines of the church, including the church's leading voice, the Adventist Review. He also authored several books, including Ellen G. White—Messenger to the Remnant and The Ellen G. White Writings. His major literary contribution was a definitive six-volume biography of Ellen White, written in the 1980s during his retirement.

Elder White took seriously all questions about Ellen White and the gift of prophecy in the church. He was an effective apologist, and was always ready to provide a response to critics of Ellen White and her work. He served as chair of the steering committee that worked with Francis D. Nichol in writing the book Ellen G. White and Her Critics.

In an effort to aid students of church history and Ellen White's writings, in 1974 White was instrumental in helping to establish an SDA-Ellen G. White Research Center at Newbold College in England. In this center were placed copies of the Ellen White letters and manuscripts that are preserved in the headquarters office in Silver Spring, Maryland; also books and other materials relevant to denominational history. The research center idea has grown, until today 11 centers serve the church on the campuses of SDA colleges and universities on seven continents.

As a small boy Arthur often heard his grandmother say, “Remember, your name is White. You must always keep it that way.” When he died on Jan. 12, 1991, the church to whose service he had devoted his entire life could testify unanimously that he had been faithful to her counsel.

White, Ellen Gould (Harmon)

WHITE, ELLEN GOULD (HARMON) (1827—1915). Cofounder of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, writer, lecturer, and counselor to the church, who possessed what Seventh-day Adventists have accepted as the prophetic gift described in the Bible (see Spirit of Prophecy).

Ellen Gould Harmon was born Nov. 26, 1827, in a farm home north of the village of Gorham, Maine, just west of the city of Portland. Her parents, Robert Harmon and Eunice Gould Harmon, were of sturdy New England stock with British ancestry. Ellen and her twin sister, Elizabeth (not identical), were the youngest children. There were four older sisters and two older brothers. When Ellen and Elizabeth were still children, the Harmon family moved into the city of Portland and resided in their own home at 44 Clark Street, where Robert Harmon engaged in hatmaking.

Ellen was a cheerful, buoyant, active child. At the age of 9, while returning home one afternoon from the public school on Brackett Street, she was injured by a stone thrown by a classmate. She suffered a broken nose and, in all probability, a concussion, for the injury was followed by three weeks of unconsciousness. The experience left her disfigured, ill, and debilitated. For two years she was unable to breathe through her nose, and could attend school but little. She was nervous and unable to hold her hand sufficiently steady to write, and the effort to read made her dizzy. She made a brief last attempt at school at about the age of 12, and again suffered failing health. Physicians gave little hope of recovery. Thus her formal education may be said to have closed when she was 9. However, her wise and frugal parents did not allow her to grow up in useless ignorance. From her mother she received a thorough practical training, and, as she was able, she assisted her father in hatmaking. Her later education came from reading and from contacts with others.

Early Christian Experience. The Harmones were members of the Pine Street Methodist Church, of which Robert Harmon was a deacon. In March 1840 Ellen and other members of the family heard William Miller lecturing in Portland and accepted his views on the second advent of Christ about the year 1843. At the Methodist camp meeting held at nearby Buxton, Maine, a few months later, she gave her heart to God. On June 26, 1842, she was baptized in Casco Bay, at her request by immersion, and the same day was received into the Methodist Church.

Ellen was an earnest young Christian, working for the conversion of her youthful associates. When she was able she toiled long hours at hatmaking in her home, and often denied herself that she might obtain means with which to spread the message of the Second Advent. In September 1843, because of their Adventist views, she and her parents and other members of the family were disfellowshipped from the Pine Street Methodist Church.

At the time of the Millerites' disappointment in the spring of 1844 and again on Oct. 22, she was deeply affected and, with others, sought God earnestly for light and guidance in the succeeding days of perplexity.

Her First Vision. One morning in December 1844, at a time when many Millerites were wavering in their faith and others were disavowing their recent experience, Ellen Harmon joined four other women in family worship at the home of a close friend, Mrs. Haines, in south Portland. While the group was praying, she experienced her first vision, in which she witnessed a representation of the travels of the Adventist people to the City of God (EW 13—17; 1T 58—61; LS 64—67). She was only 17 years old at the time. When she related this vision to the Adventist group in Portland, they accepted it as light from God. In response to a later vision, Ellen reluctantly started out, traveling with friends and relatives as opportunity afforded, to relate to the scattered companies of Adventists what she had seen in the first and other visions that followed.

Marriage to James White. On a trip to Orrington, Maine, early in 1845, Ellen met James White, an Adventist preacher then 23 years of age. He had known of her as a devoted and active Christian among the Portland Adventists. As their work occasionally brought the two together, an attachment developed that led to their marriage at Portland, Maine. Of this James White wrote: “We were married August 30, 1846, and from that hour to the present she has been my crown of rejoicing. I first met her in the city of Portland in the State of Maine. She was then a Christian of the most devoted type. And although but sixteen, she was a laborer in the cause of Christ in public and from house to house. She was a decided Adventist, and yet her experience was so rich and her testimony so powerful that ministers and leading men of different churches sought her labors as an exhorter in their several congregations. But at that time she was very timid, and little thought that she was to be brought before the public to speak to thousands” (James White and Ellen G. White, Life Sketches . . . of Elder James White, and His Wife, Mrs. Ellen G. White, pp. 125, 126).

About this time James and Ellen White gave earnest study to the question of the observance of the seventh-day Sabbath as advocated by Joseph Bates, who had issued a 48-page pamphlet in New Bedford, Massachusetts, setting forth the scriptural evidence for the sacredness of the seventh day. Becoming convinced that the views presented were biblically supported, the Whites began to observe the Sabbath in the autumn of 1846. Some months later, on Sabbath, Apr. 3, 1847, Ellen White saw in vision the law of God in the ark of the heavenly sanctuary with a halo of light encircling the fourth commandment (EW 32, 33). This view confirmed the confidence of the Sabbathkeeping Adventists in their position and brought a clearer understanding of the Sabbath’s significance.

For the first few years after their marriage, James and Ellen White were stricken with poverty and were often in distress. During this period, before church organization was effected and before regular support of the ministry was provided, ministers in the cause of the Sabbath and the Second Advent were dependent upon the labors of their own hands for their financial support. James White’s time was divided between traveling and preaching, and earning a living in the forest, in railroad construction, or in the hayfield.

Their first child, Henry Nichols, was born Aug. 26, 1847. His presence brought joy and comfort to the young mother, but Ellen White soon found she must at times leave her child with trusted friends and continue her work of traveling and bearing the messages God had given to her.

“We must sacrifice the company of our little Henry, and go forth to give ourselves unreservedly to the work. My health was very poor, and should I take my child, he would necessarily occupy a large share of my time. It was a severe trial, yet I dared not let him stand in the way of duty. I believed that the Lord had spared him to us when he was very sick, and that if I should let him hinder me from doing my duty, God would remove him from me. Alone before the Lord, with a sorrowful heart and many tears, I made the sacrifice, and gave up my only child to be cared for by another” (LS 120).

Traveling and Publishing. The record of the next few years is one of traveling, visiting the “scattered flock,” attending general meetings, and writing. The first of these general meetings, or conferences, held by “friends of the Sabbath” was held in the spring of 1848. The Whites attended five or six such conferences in 1848 (see Sabbath Conferences) and others subsequently, during which the basic doctrines now held by SDAs were brought together. At times during these meetings, groups of the leaders met in sessions of Bible study. When opinions were divided, Mrs. White’s visions corrected error and identified truth. This led to confidence in the positions taken by the pioneers as the result of Bible study.

In the sixth conference, held in November 1848, Ellen G. White had a vision instructing her that her husband must begin to “print a little paper.” In July 1849 James White, living at that time in Rocky Hill, Connecticut, arranged at nearby Middletown for the printing of The Present Truth, the first journal published by the Sabbathkeeping Adventists. The eight-page issues appeared at irregular intervals. There was only one volume of 11 issues, which was completed in 17 months. The later numbers carried articles from her pen, setting forth prophetic views of the future experience of the people of God and sounding notes of warning and counsel.

In July 1849 a second son, James Edson, was born at Rocky Hill, Connecticut.

In July 1851 James White published Mrs. White’s first pamphlet, of 64 pages, entitled A Sketch of the Christian Experience and Views of Ellen G. White. This was followed in 1854 by a 48-page Supplement. These now form a part of the currently available Early Writings (pages 11—127).

The days of the beginnings of the Review and Herald, in 1850, and the Youth’s Instructor, in 1852, were trying ones for the Whites. During the years 1852—1855, the publishing of the papers was carried on in Rochester, New York. A handpress was purchased and installed in 1852.

A rented building in the outskirts of the city, which at first served both as home and printing office, became the headquarters of the work. Money was scarce. Mrs. White described their privations thus: “We are just getting settled in Rochester. We have rented an old house for one hundred and seventy-five dollars a year. We have the press in the house. Were it not for this, we should have to pay fifty dollars a year for office room. You would smile could you look in upon us and see our furniture. We have bought two old bedsteads for twenty-five cents each. My husband brought me home six old chairs, no two of them alike, for which he paid one dollar, and soon he presented me with four more old chairs without any seating, for which he paid sixty-two cents. The frames are strong, and I have been seating them with drilling. Butter is so high that we do not purchase it, neither can we afford potatoes. We use sauce in the place of butter, and turnips for potatoes. Our first meals were taken on a fireboard placed upon two empty flour barrels. We are willing to endure privations if the work of God can be advanced. We believe the Lord’s hand was in our coming to this place” (Life Sketches of Ellen G. White, p. 142).

The workers in the press, except the hired printer-foreman, lived with the Whites and worked for a trifle more than room and board. Sickness, death from plague, and bereavement played their part in bringing distress, sorrow, and discouragement to the Review and Herald staff. In August 1854, in the midst of these distressing times, a third son, William Clarence, was born to the Whites.

Move to Battle Creek, Michigan. In November 1855 the Review and Herald, with the handpress and other scanty printing equipment, together with the small stock of books and pamphlets, was moved from Rochester, New York, to a newly erected building on the western edge of Battle Creek, Michigan. This move was in response to an invitation by Sabbathkeeping Adventists in Michigan who offered to build and donate a little printing house.

Not long after this move, a conference was held to consider plans for the advancement of the cause. At the close of this general meeting, Mrs. White had a vision in which a number of matters of importance to the church at large were revealed to her. These she wrote out and read the next Sabbath evening to the Battle Creek members in a newly erected church building. As the message was read, the hearers recognized that the communication would benefit all groups of Sabbathkeeping Adventists, and they voted that what had been read in their hearing should be published. The resultant 16-page pamphlet, printed on the handpress, bore the title “Testimony for the Church” (1T 113—126). This was the first of a series of writings that grew to nearly 5,000 pages in 55 years and assumed the form of the current nine volumes of Testimonies for the Church.

The Whites settled in Battle Creek, but the record of the next few years shows them occupied in firmly establishing the publishing work and developing a church organization, going on frequent journeys by train, by wagon, by sleigh, suffering often from cold or heat, and sometimes from hunger on long journeys through sparsely settled country. It is a story of God’s protection from danger, of discouragement under attack, and also of great encouragement as they witnessed the power of God bringing spiritual victory into the lives of the growing flock of adherents and success to the wearing labors of those who were spearheading the evangelistic thrust of the movement.

On Mar. 14, 1858, while at Lovett’s Grove, Ohio, near Bowling Green, Mrs. White had a two-hour vision in which she saw events in the great conflict between the forces of righteousness and the forces of evil, spanning the ages from the fall of Lucifer from heaven to the new earth. Instructed to write out what was presented to her, she undertook the preparation of the manuscript, which was published in September as a 219-page book, Spiritual Gifts, volume 1. The title page gave the full title as The Great Controversy Between Christ and His Angels and Satan and His Angels. The volume, being small, could touch only certain areas of the agelong conflict, and emphasized high points, especially the closing scenes. (See EW 133—295, and facsimile reprint of original volume.)

The preparation of more comprehensive presentations of the “great controversy” theme to be published in large and widely circulated volumes was a task to which Mrs. White applied herself from time to time to the close of her life.

Ellen G. White at Home in Battle Creek. After the move to Battle Creek, James White, with the aid of his brethren, secured a 1.5-acre (.5-hectare) lot in the west end of the town and erected a frame cottage—the first home the peripatetic couple ever owned. Ellen G. White’s letters and diaries for the late fifties reveal that not all her time was devoted to writing and public work. They mention making “a pair of pants” and “a coat for Edson” (her second child, age 9); “making a garden for my children,” because she wanted home to be “the pleasantest place of any to them”; having friendly contacts with neighbors, especially those in need; buying baby clothes for a poor family; and occasionally helping to fold and stitch papers and pamphlets when there was pressing work at the Review office.

A familiar figure in Battle Creek, she was short of stature (five feet two inches) and slight of build, with a rather dark complexion, brown hair, and gray eyes, cheerful in disposition, unselfish, and outgoing. She was known as a careful housewife, a sensible buyer, a hospitable host, a forceful public speaker, and a thoughtful mother, who became homesick for her family while on journeys, yet let nothing deter her from her duties either in the home or in the gospel field. From other times and places come further reminiscences—the astonishment of passersby, who had been accustomed to hearing her preach, when they saw her working with her young son and her ailing husband, raking and loading hay, and standing atop a half-finished haystack treading it down; the gratitude of long-term guests in her house (young people in need of a home, adults in misfortune); the picture of seeing Mrs. White leading her cow down a country lane to a neighbor whose children needed milk; and, at the end of her life, the California wine growers near Elms Haven remembering “the little old woman with white hair, who always spoke so lovingly of Jesus.”

With the birth of a fourth son, John Herbert, Sept. 20, 1860, the White family numbered six, with four boys, the oldest 13 years of age. John, however, lived only a few months. His death, caused by erysipelas, made the first break in the family circle.

During the early 1860s, the years of establishing church and conference organizations, there were demands for writing, traveling, and personal work.

Health Reform. The first weekend of June 1863, shortly after the organization of the General Conference (in May 1863), the Whites visited Otsego, Michigan. There Mrs. White had a comprehensive vision far reaching in its implications. It compassed the broad field of health and preventive medicine, and touched the high points of the causes of disease, the care of the sick, remedial agencies, nutrition, stimulants and narcotics, child care, and healthful attire. The vision stressed the obligation of each person to give intelligent attention to health of body and mind. (See Health Principles.)

Before that, Seventh-day Adventists had given little thought to health matters. True, there were at that time a number of persons in the United States and other countries who were advocating reforms in the matter of healthful living. But of this sort of reform, SDAs, occupied with their Sabbath and Advent messages, had been in general unmindful. Mrs. White tells how she, a heavy meat eater, had quite a struggle with herself to learn to eat graham bread, simple food, and a vegetable diet, and how, as a result, her health improved. Shortly a program of health education was inaugurated in SDA ranks. As an introductory step, six pamphlets entitled Health; or, How to Live were published in 1865, compiled from various authors by James White. An article from Mrs. White’s pen appeared in each of the pamphlets (reprinted in 2SM 411—479).

The Whites not only employed simple, rational methods of home treatment but also helped their neighbors by similar methods, using “water treatments” such as they had observed at a health institution at Dansville, New York.

The importance of health reform was greatly impressed upon the early leaders through Henry White’s death from pneumonia in 1863 at the age of 16, James White’s stroke in 1865, which largely incapacitated him for three years, and through the physical ailments of a number of ministers.

On Dec. 25, 1865, came Mrs. White's message that Seventh-day Adventists should establish an institution to care for the sick and teach the patients the principles of healthful living (1T 489). The Western Health Reform Institute, later known as the Battle Creek Sanitarium, was opened in September 1866.

The Whites were in and out of Battle Creek from 1865 to 1868. During this time James White's deteriorated physical condition led them to retire to a little farm near Greenville, Michigan, where Mrs. White made her husband's recovery her first work. This drew heavily on her time and strength. Away from the pressing duties of the headquarters of the growing church, she had the opportunity of visiting many of the smaller churches and some opportunity to write. She wrote many important testimonies and began to broaden the presentation of the "conflict of the ages" story as repeatedly she had seen it more fully in many revelations. In 1870 The Spirit of Prophecy, volume 1, was published, carrying the story from the fall of Lucifer and the Creation to the time of Solomon.

As James White gradually regained physical strength, he too had opportunity to review the advancement of the work and to study plans for its extension.

Work of the Movement Expands. The success of the first Seventh-day Adventist camp meeting, held at Wright, Michigan, in the late summer of 1868, led to broader plans for other camp meetings in succeeding years. Mrs. White joined her husband in taking an active part, not only in laying the plans for these meetings but also in attending, from summer to summer, as many as their time and strength would permit. She did her full share of preaching and personal work, and as she could, continued her writing.

The winter of 1872—1873 found the Whites in northern California in the interest of the newly established work of the church on the Pacific Coast. This was the first of several extended Western visits made during the next seven years. While in the West Mrs. White had, on Apr. 1, 1874, a comprehensive vision portraying the future broadening and development of the work of SDAs, not only in the Western states but also in overseas lands. A few weeks later, when tent meetings were opened in Oakland, California, James White began the publication of a weekly journal, Signs of the Times, to which Mrs. White contributed articles. Some 2,000 articles from her pen appeared in the Signs by the time of her death.

Battle Creek College. In the late summer and fall of 1874 the Whites were back in Michigan, attending the General Conference session, holding services, writing, and assisting with the Biblical Institute. Mrs. White took a prominent part in the dedication, on Jan. 4, 1875, of Battle Creek College, the first SDA educational institution. Addressing a group who had gathered from a number of states, she related what she had seen in vision on the afternoon of Jan. 3. In it she had been given a picture of the larger work that Seventh-day Adventists needed to accomplish. She told of seeing printing presses operating in other lands and a well-organized work developing in vast world territories that SDAs up to that time had never thought of entering. Although the countries to be entered, except Australia, were not identified, she declared that if she should ever see the printing presses shown to her in the vision she would recognize them.

Writing and Traveling. During the next few years a portion of Mrs. White's time was occupied in writing the part of the conflict story that deals with the life of Christ and the work of the apostles, volumes 2 and 3 of The Spirit of Prophecy (published 1877 and 1878).

James White was busily engaged not only in establishing the Pacific Press in Oakland but also in raising money to enlarge the Battle Creek Sanitarium and to build the Tabernacle in Battle Creek to house the large congregation there and to provide a place of meeting for large general church meetings.

When Mrs. White visited the newly founded health institution near St. Helena, California, some time after its opening in 1878, she told those with her that she had seen those buildings and surroundings in the 1874 view of the broadening work on the West Coast.

During the camp meetings of the late 1870s, Mrs. White addressed many large audiences. Her clear voice could be heard by thousands. Reports in the public press estimated the attendance at Groveland, Massachusetts, on Sunday, Aug. 27, 1876, to be between 15,000 and 20,000 persons. On the same site the next year, she spoke to an audience estimated to be as large or larger. Her topic on both occasions was Christian temperance in its broad aspects. During this period her travels took her east and west and into the Pacific Northwest. She was writing continually, attending General Conference sessions, appearing before temperance groups, and speaking at camp meetings, in churches, and even at the town square and in the state prison.

Her husband's failing health led them to spend the winter of 1878—1879 in Texas. There were periods during the next two years when he was quite well and able to continue with his work, but there were periods when he could not. His long years of mental and physical overwork had diminished his life forces. After an acute illness of less than a week, diagnosed as malarial fever, he died in the Battle Creek Sanitarium on Sabbath afternoon, Aug. 6, 1881. He was 60 years of age. Standing by the side of her husband's casket at the funeral service in the Battle Creek Tabernacle a week later, Ellen White pledged herself to press on in the work that had been entrusted to her, despite the loss of her husband.

Soon Mrs. White was again on the Pacific Coast. Although she felt keenly the loss of her companion, she busily engaged in writing the fourth and last volume of The Spirit of Prophecy, presenting the conflict story from the destruction of Jerusalem to the close of time. When this long-awaited 506-page volume came from the press in 1884, it was well received. An illustrated edition for sale by colporteurs to the general public was published soon after, carrying the title The Great Controversy Between Christ and Satan. Within a brief three-year period 50,000 copies were printed and sold.

Two Years in Europe. At the second session of the European Missionary Council, held in mid-1884, a resolution was adopted inviting Mrs. White, accompanied by her son, W. C. White, to visit the European missions. As the time neared for the journey in the summer of 1885, it seemed that her physical condition would prevent her going. However, obedient to what seemed duty, she embarked on the journey, was benefited physically, and spent from August 1885 to August 1887 in the European countries.

From Basel, Switzerland, then the headquarters of the work of the church in Europe, Mrs. White made repeated trips to England, Germany, France, Italy, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden. Of particular interest to her were the three visits to the Waldensian valleys in northern Italy, where she viewed with her natural sight several places she had seen in visions relating to incidents in the Middle Ages and the time of the Reformation.

In Basel, Switzerland, and in Christiania (now Oslo), Norway, Mrs. White recognized the printing presses she had seen in the comprehensive vision of Jan. 3, 1875, in which she was shown presses operating in overseas lands. While abroad she gave valuable counsel that helped to establish right policies and plans in the formative days of the work in that area.

While Mrs. White was in Europe requests were made for European translations of the recently issued Spirit of Prophecy, volume 4, The Great Controversy. Since the book had proved salable to the general public, she felt that she should write out more fully what had been presented to her, and so she undertook the work of expanding the contents. The result was the enlarged book The Great Controversy Between Christ and Satan During the Christian Dispensation, first published in the spring of 1888. As she prepared the manuscript for this book the plan evolved for making it a part of a five-book series presenting the controversy throughout the period of world history.

Back again in the United States, Mrs. White settled at Healdsburg, California. She attended the important General Conference session of 1888, in Minneapolis, Minnesota, at which she made nine major addresses. After this, she traveled for several months preaching in the churches on the subject of righteousness by faith. During this same period she worked on the preparation of Patriarchs and Prophets (published 1890), volume 1 of the Conflict of the Ages Series. The manuscript for Steps to Christ was prepared in 1891.

Called to Australia. At the General Conference session of 1891, held in March in Battle Creek, an urgent call was presented for Mrs. White to visit the newly entered field of Australia. Responding to this appeal, she reached Australia in late December 1891, accompanied by her son, W. C. White, and several of her literary assistants. Her presence in the Australasian field was much appreciated by the new members, and her messages of counsel regarding the developing work proved highly beneficial in firmly establishing the denomination in this southern continent. On her visit to the publishing house in Melbourne, she recognized another of the printing presses she had seen in the vision of January 1875.

During the winter of 1892 Mrs. White suffered for many months with inflammatory rheumatism, but insisted on meeting speaking appointments even if she must speak while seated, and on writing even if her arm must rest on a pillow. She spent most of 1893 in New Zealand.

Important Developments in Australia. Not long after her arrival in Australia, Mrs. White clearly saw the urgent need for the education of SDA young people in a church-operated school where workers would be trained for service at home and in the island fields. In response to her many strong appeals, the members set out to establish a school, at first in temporary rented quarters in Melbourne and then on a permanent campus in the country (see Avondale College). To give encouragement to those in this pioneer enterprise and to set an example in land cultivation, she purchased a 66-acre (27-hectare) tract nearby and made her home (Sunnyside) beside the new school. This institution, she declared, was to be a pattern of what SDA educational work should be.

When an advanced step in organization was taken early in 1894 in order that the growing church in the Australian field might be more efficiently administered, Mrs. White encouraged it. It was at this time that, in counsel with O. A. Olsen, president of the General Conference who was then visiting Australia, the local conferences of the territory united to form a union conference, the first in the denomination.

In spite of her many interests in the local work of this pioneer field, Mrs. White found time to write thousands of pages, which crossed the seas and brought timely counsel and direction to the leaders of the church. The book Testimonies to Ministers and Gospel

Workers (1923) presents a portion of this counsel. She also continued to furnish articles weekly for the Review and Herald, Signs of the Times, and the Youth's Instructor. In 1898 her comprehensive work on the life of Christ, The Desire of Ages, was published (as volume 3 of the Conflict of the Ages Series). Thoughts From the Mount of Blessing, a study of the Sermon on the Mount, had preceded it by two years, and Christ's Object Lessons and Testimonies for the Church, volume 6, followed in 1900.

Return to the United States. In 1900 Ellen White returned to America. Settling in northwestern California, she purchased Elmshaven, a country home a few miles from the town of St. Helena, some 70 miles (110 kilometers) north of San Francisco. This property, which she found available for a reasonable sum, consisted of a well-built seven-room home, a cottage, a large barn with stock, and some 60 acres (25 hectares) of land divided between orchard, vineyard, garden, hay land, pasture, and woodland. Here she spent the 15 remaining years of her life in book preparation, writing, and personal work.

No sooner was she well settled at Elmshaven than she received a call to attend the 1901 session of the General Conference in Battle Creek. At this meeting she unhesitatingly bore her testimony calling for a reorganization of the General Conference, in order to provide adequately for its expanding interests. A wider distribution of the growing responsibilities, which had to that time been carried by only a few men at headquarters, was proposed. In a courageous response, far-reaching in its ramifications, a sweeping reorganization was effected. Union conferences, intermediate between local conferences and the General Conference, were organized, and General Conference departments were arranged for. These steps led to rapid and sound expansion in the work of the denomination.

Two years later, in the autumn of 1903, the General Conference and the Review and Herald Publishing Association were moved from Battle Creek, and in harmony with Mrs. White's counsel that they should be near the East Coast, they were established at Takoma Park, Washington, D.C. In 1904 Mrs. White spent five months in Takoma Park.

Busy Closing Years. In 1904 Ellen White personally helped to purchase the property for the Paradise Valley Sanitarium, near San Diego, California. She attended the 1905 General Conference session, in Takoma Park. A few months after her return, she published The Ministry of Healing, a book dealing with the healing of the body, mind, and soul. Education had preceded it in 1903, and volumes 7 and 8 of the Testimonies for the Church had been issued in 1902 and 1904, respectively.

While in Washington in 1905, Ellen White encouraged the purchase of the Loma Linda Sanitarium property in southern California. Shortly afterward she urged the opening of educational work along medical missionary lines on the Pacific Coast, declaring that at Loma Linda the church would conduct its major educational institution in the West (see Loma Linda University). Her pressing book work during the next few years was frequently broken into by trips to Loma Linda to encourage the leaders there, and to Paradise Valley Sanitarium.

Her journeys across the continent between 1901 and 1909 often took her through the South, where the work of the church was slowly developing. An appeal from her pen in 1891, followed in 1895 and 1896 by articles published in the Review and Herald urging educational and evangelistic endeavors for the neglected Black race, sparked a work in which her own son, James Edson White, took an active part (see Morning Star; Southern Missionary Society). She was keenly interested in the development of missionary endeavors geared for most effective results in White and Black communities, and sent the workers in this field many messages of counsel and encouragement. She lent strong support to the establishment of Oakwood College, in Huntsville, Alabama, for Black young people, and the Nashville Agricultural and Normal Institute, near Madison, Tennessee, a privately operated training center for mature White young people (see Madison Institutions). The work of the church in the South was of deep concern to her through the remaining years of her life.

At the age of 81 she was back in Washington again, attending the General Conference session of 1909. A number of times she addressed the conference, speaking in a clear, firm voice. After this meeting she made a long-desired visit to her old home city of Portland, Maine. There she again bore her testimony in the place where her work had begun 65 years earlier. The 1909 journey, her last trip to the Eastern states, stood out in the memory of many SDAs who heard her speak as she traveled or who met her at the General Conference session. On this five-month journey she spoke 72 times in 27 different places.

On returning home, realizing that now her days were few, Mrs. White devoted herself to completing for immediate publication a number of books presenting essential instruction to the church. Testimonies for the Church, volume 9, was published in late 1909, The Acts of the Apostles in 1911, Counsels to Parents and Teachers in 1913, and the revised and enlarged Gospel Workers in 1915. The closing active months of her life were devoted to the later stages of work on Prophets and Kings, which was published after her death. (The last named, with The Acts of the Apostles, completed the five-volume Conflict of the Ages Series.)

In 1912, in her will, Ellen White appointed a board of trustees (see Ellen G. White Estate, Incorporated) to have the future care of her published writings and manuscript files. From 1912 on, her public speaking gradually diminished, until it ceased. But even in the face of physical infirmities her courage and confidence were constant.

Finally, on Sabbath morning, Feb. 13, 1915, as she was entering her study at Elmshaven, she tripped and fell, suffering a hip fracture (of the left femur). Confined to her bed and wheelchair for five months, she suffered little or no pain, but as she neared the end she was often in coma. Her words to friends and relatives during her closing weeks reflected cheerfulness, a sense of having faithfully performed the work the Lord had entrusted to her, confidence that God's work would advance to its final triumph, but, on the other hand, anxiety that the individual members of the church should sense the times in which they were living and make the earnest preparation needful to meet the Lord at His coming. Her final message, which concerned the literature read by young people, was given Mar. 3, 1915.

Ellen White died on July 16, 1915, at the ripe age of 87 years. Three simple funeral services were held, one at Elmshaven, the second at Richmond, California, during a camp meeting, and the last at the Battle Creek, Michigan, Tabernacle. She was laid to rest July 24 at the side of her husband in the Oak Hill Cemetery at Battle Creek. In the public press in various parts of the United States, liberal space and favorable notice were given to her death, in many cases including a review of her life and work and the wide influence of her ministry. She had served the Lord and her church as His chosen instrument for seven decades. She lived to see the movement grow from a handful of believers to a worldwide congregation with a membership of 136,879.

Literary Output. Mrs. White's total literary production was unusually large. (See White, Ellen G., Writings of, and Comprehensive Index to the Writings of Ellen G. White, vol.

3, pp. 3193—3210, “Appendix D, Editions of Ellen G. White Books.”) She did all her writing in longhand, often writing early in the morning while others slept, and taking advantage of almost every free moment at home or on her journeys. She employed as aides devoted literary assistants—at first her husband, as he could spare the time, and later an employed staff who copied the materials, making such corrections in spelling, punctuation, capitalization, and grammar as are ordinarily the work of copy editors. Carefully devised rules to safeguard the authenticity of the materials they handled, as well as a final careful reading by Mrs. White, ensured a finished product that was truly the author’s.

At the time of her death her literary productions consisted of more than 100,000 pages: 24 books in current circulation; two book manuscripts ready for publication; 5,000 periodical articles in the journals of the church; 200 or more out-of-print tracts and pamphlets; 6,000 typewritten manuscript documents consisting of letters and general manuscripts, aggregating approximately 35,000 typewritten pages; 2,000 handwritten letters and documents and diaries, journals, et cetera, when copied comprising 15,000 typewritten pages.

Mrs. White received a royalty on her literary productions, all of which she used in meeting the expense of her work, literary staff, supplies, etc., and in meeting such “initial expense” on her books as typesetting, platemaking, and illustrating, and in the missionary work of the church. All royalty incomes today are the property of the church.

Ellen White’s Position in the Church. Not assuming the title of prophet, Mrs. White maintained that she was the Lord’s messenger, bearing His message to the people. At the same time, she recognized that her work embodied that of a prophet (see ISM 31, 32). She was not ordained by the laying on of hands. Her name appeared, however, in the ministerial lists of such official publications as the Yearbook. She did not hold office either in a local church or in any conference, including the General Conference. She attended the sessions as a delegate. After the death of James White, in August 1881, she was paid a salary equivalent to that paid an officer of the General Conference. She was not a member of conference committees or of boards of church-owned institutions.

The church repeatedly, in official actions in General Conference session and unofficially at all times, has recognized Ellen White as having been called in a special manner as the messenger of the Lord.

For a further discussion of Ellen White, specifically with regard to the manner in which she received revelations from God and transmitted them to the church, and for the place that her writings hold for SDAs today, see Visions; White, Ellen G., Writings of; Spirit of Prophecy.

White, Ellen Gould (Harmon), Writings of

WHITE, ELLEN GOULD (HARMON), WRITINGS OF. Published works consisting of periodical articles, pamphlets, and books. Ellen White contributed more than 5,000 articles to the journals of the church. Some of these were republished in her books. Only those pamphlets considered of lasting significance are listed here. Detailed information may be secured from the Ellen G. White Estate. The principal editions are listed below. More detailed information often is included in the preface or foreword of the individual work.

The publisher and date of publication refer to the initial publication. By mutual arrangements of the Seventh-day Adventist publishing houses in North America, a work published by one may be issued also by others.

For identifications of abbreviations used, see pages xxi-xxiii.

Books or compilations by other authors containing portions written by Mrs. White are not included in this bibliography. (For further discussion of her writings and their significance to the Seventh-day Adventist Church, see Spirit of Prophecy; White, Ellen Gould Harmon.)

Initial Publications

Initial Publications. Ellen G. White's first writings were published in the form of (1) two letters in the Day-Star, 1846; (2) three broadsides (single sheets printed on one side), 1846, 1847, 1849; (3) articles in James White's pamphlet A Word to the "Little Flock," 1847; and (4) articles in the Present Truth, 1849—1850.

Books and Pamphlets

Books and Pamphlets. Works issued from 1851 on are listed alphabetically:

The Acts of the Apostles in the Proclamation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. PPPA, 1911. 630 pp. An amplification of the latter part of the Spirit of Prophecy, vol. 3 (1878), and an adaptation of the long out-of-print Sketches From the Life of Paul (1883). The fourth of the Conflict of the Ages Series of five books tracing the great controversy story.

The Adventist Home. SPA, 1952. 583 pp. CHL. A wide range of counsels topically arranged on home, marriage, and the care and rearing of the family.

A Call to Medical Evangelism, and Health Education. SPA, 1950. 47 pp.

Captivity and Restoration of Israel. See The Story of Prophets and Kings in this article.

Child Guidance. SPA, 1954. 616 pp. CHL. Counsels relating to child care, training, and education.

Christ in His Sanctuary. PPPA, 1969. 128 pp. Ten chapters dealing with the earthly and heavenly sanctuaries in a study format. Major portions are taken from Patriarchs and Prophets and The Great Controversy.

Christ Our Saviour. International Tract Society, RH, SPA, PPPA, 1896. 158 pp. Initial edition largely an adaptation, by J. E. White, of materials prepared for The Desire of Ages, presenting certain phases of the story of Jesus in vocabulary suitable for children. In 1900 it was somewhat amplified from Ellen White sources to produce a book of 182 pages. Reissued (1949) by SPA as Story of Jesus, with text unchanged but with improved format and new illustrations.

Christian Education. International Tract Society, 1893. 255 pp. A compilation, in 24 chapters, from published and manuscript sources, for teachers and parents. Replaced by Education.

Christian Experience and Teachings of Ellen G. White. PPPA, 1922. 268 pp. A volume drawn mainly from Life Sketches, Early Writings, and the Testimonies, with two appendix chapters.

Christian Service. RH, 1925. 283 pp. A handbook in home missionary (lay evangelistic) endeavor drawn from published sources. Topically arranged. Initial edition pocket size. Second edition (1947) CHL. Identical paging.

Christ's Object Lessons. RH, PPPA, 1900. 436 pp. The parables of Jesus and their lessons, which for space reasons could not be included in The Desire of Ages. 1923 ed. RH, reillustrated, issued for subscription sale. 1941 in CHL, RH. 1952 ed. RH. Subscription edition retitled Highways to Heaven.

The Colporteur Evangelist. PPPA, 1920. 112 pp. A topically arranged compilation drawn from Manual for Canvassers (1902), which it replaced, and other subsequently written matter. Replaced by Colporteur Ministry.

Colporteur Ministry. PPPA, 1953. 176 pp. An amplification of Colporteur Evangelist, which it replaced.

Conflict and Courage. RH, 1970. 381 pp. Daily devotional book with Scripture texts. Material enlarging on experience of men and women of the Bible. Conflict of the Ages Series. 5 vols. Titles: (1) Patriarchs and Prophets; (2) The Story of Prophets and Kings; (3) The Desire of Ages; (4) The Acts of the Apostles; (5) The Great Controversy. See these titles in this article.

Confrontation. RH, 1971. 93 pp. Ellen White's most complete treatment of Christ's temptation in the wilderness. First published as a series of articles in the Review and Herald in 1874 and 1875.

Cosmic Conflict. RH, PPPA, 1982. Missionary edition of The Great Controversy.

Counsels for the Church. PPPA, 1991. 462 pp. Comprehensive inspired instruction on Christian living, the home, health, and the coming conflict.

Counsels on Diet and Foods. RH, 1938. 511 pp. A topically arranged reference book embodying the full range of counsels on diet drawn from both published and unpublished sources. It was called the second edition because it was a revision and expansion of the teaching aid Testimony Studies on Diet and Foods, printed in 1926 at Loma Linda. Third edition (1946).

Counsels on Education. PPPA, 1968. 312 pp. Twenty-six articles on education drawn from the nine volumes of the Testimonies.

Counsels on Health. PPPA, 1923. 697 pp. A compilation from periodical articles and out-of-print and contemporary pamphlets and books to make a comprehensive, topically arranged volume.

Counsels on Sabbath School Work. RH, 1938. 192 pp. CHL. An amplified, topically arranged presentation embodying most of Testimonies on Sabbath School Work (1900), which it replaced, supplemented with materials drawn from all sources.

Counsels on Stewardship. RH, 1940. 372 pp. A compilation presenting the philosophy and principles of Christian stewardship, drawn from published and unpublished sources.

Counsels to Editors. Issued by the General Conference, 1939. 118 pp. Incorporated in the later Counsels to Writers and Editors (1946).

Counsels to Teachers, Parents, and Students Regarding Christian Education. PPPA, 1913. 574 pp. A volume dealing in detail with the methods to be employed by SDA parents and teachers in fulfilling their responsibilities as educators, drawing heavily on such volumes as Christian Education (1893) and Special Testimonies on Education (c. 1897), but containing also materials written especially for it. 1943 edition with amplified preface and name changed to Counsels to Parents, Teachers, and Students, but without change in pagination.

Counsels to Writers and Editors. SPA, 1946. 192 pp. An amplification of materials selected for a 1939 editorial council in Washington, D.C., provided for all who employ the written and spoken word in proclaiming the message through the public press, radio, and television. Second edition (1962) in CHL.

Country Living. RH, 1946. 32 pp. Described by the subtitle "An Aid to Moral and Social Security."

The Desire of Ages. PPPA, 1898. 866 pp. The presentation of the life and ministry of Jesus, an amplification of The Spirit of Prophecy, vol. 2 (1877), and the first part of vol. 3 (1878). The third book in the Conflict of the Ages Series. Appendix, Scripture index, and subject index included.

Early Writings of Ellen G. White. RH, PPPA, 1882. 71, 40, 154 pp. Issued initially under title Early Writings of Mrs. White: Experience and Views, and Spiritual Gifts, vol. 1, second edition. In this were united the individually printed second editions (1882) of three early publications:

1. A Sketch of the Christian Experience and Views of Mrs. E. G. White (71 pp.), being a reprint of her 64-page 1851 book with three brief added items.
2. Supplement to Christian Experience and Views (40 pp.), first published in 1854.
3. Spiritual Gifts, vol. 1, Sketches From the Life of Christ and the Experience of the Christian Church (154 pp.), being a reprint of the 1858 Spiritual Gifts but with the title changed to suit better the subject matter, and avoid a conflict with other works titled The Great Controversy.

Education. PPPA, 1903. 321 pp. Replacing Christian Education (1893) with an enlarged and well-rounded presentation written for both SDAs and the general public. 1952 in CHL, paging unchanged.

Ellen G. White 1888 Materials (4 vols.), 1987. 1,812 pp. Contains all known Ellen White references to the 1888 Minneapolis Conference.

Ellen G. White Periodical Resource Collection (2 vols.). PPPA, 1990. Ellen White articles published in church periodicals from Advance to General Conference Bulletins.

Ellen G. White Present Truth and Review and Herald Articles, RH, 1962, vol. 1. 576 pp. From 1849 to 1885.

Ellen G. White Present Truth and Review and Herald Articles, RH, 1962, vol. 2. 624 pp. From 1886 to 1892.

Ellen G. White Present Truth and Review and Herald Articles, RH, 1962, vol. 3. 636 pp. From 1893 to 1898.

Ellen G. White Present Truth and Review and Herald Articles, RH, 1962, vol. 4. 590 pp. From 1899 to 1903.

Ellen G. White Present Truth and Review and Herald Articles, RH, 1962, vol. 5. 572 pp. From 1904 to 1909.

Ellen G. White Present Truth and Review and Herald Articles, RH, 1962, vol. 6. 576 pp. From 1910 to 1915.

Ellen G. White Signs of the Times Articles, PPPA, 1974, vol. 1. 514 pp. From 1874 to 1885.

Ellen G. White Signs of the Times Articles, PPPA, 1974, vol. 2. 527 pp. From 1886 to 1892.

Ellen G. White Signs of the Times Articles, PPPA, 1974, vol. 3. 525 pp. From 1893 to 1898.

Ellen G. White Signs of the Times Articles, PPPA, 1974, vol. 4. 557 pp. From 1899 to 1915.

Ellen G. White Youth's Instructor Articles, RH, 1986. 640 pp. From 1852 to 1914.

Evangelism. RH, 1946. 747 pp. Counsels selected from manuscripts, periodical articles, out-of-print books, pamphlets, and current sources relating to the evangelistic promulgation of the gospel message. Second edition, without change in pagination, CHL.

Experience and Views. See A Sketch of the Christian Experience and Views of Ellen G. White, listed below.

Faith and Works. RH, 1979. 122 pp. Nineteen E. G. White sermons and articles in whole or in part.

The Faith I Live By. RH, 1958. 384 pp. Daily devotional book with Scripture texts. Extracts on various doctrinal teachings of the church.

From Eternity Past. PPPA, 1983. 548 pp. The condensed version of Patriarchs and Prophets.

From Heaven With Love. PPPA, 1984. 556 pp. The condensed version of The Desire of Ages.

From Here to Forever. PPPA, 1983. 420 pp. The condensed version of The Great Controversy.

From Splendor to Shadow. PPPA, 1984. 377 pp. The condensed version of Prophets and Kings.

From Trials to Triumph. PPPA, 1984. 314 pp. The condensed version of The Acts of the Apostles.

Fundamentals of Christian Education. SPA, 1923. 576 pp. Entire articles bearing on education, arranged by date, as published in SDA journals and out-of-print Christian Temperance and Bible Hygiene (1890) and Special Testimonies on Education (c. 1897).

God Has Promised. 1982. 64 pp. A collection of E. G. White quotations for people who are lonely, discouraged, sick, etc.

God's Amazing Grace. RH, 1973. 383 pp. Daily devotional book with Scripture texts. Selections on the subject of grace.

Gospel Workers. RH, 1915. 534 pp. A revised, enlarged, and reorganized edition of the 1892 Gospel Workers, enriched with the counsels of the final 25 years of Mrs. White's ministry.

The Great Controversy Between Christ and Satan. PPPA, RH, 1888. 704 pp. With appendix. Traces the conflict from the destruction of Jerusalem to the time of writing and then, in a forecast, presents earth's closing events, the Second Advent, the millennium, and the new earth. An amplification of the Spirit of Prophecy, vol. 4 (1884), which it replaced. The fifth of the Conflict of the Ages Series (five books tracing the great controversy story), designed to serve both SDAs and the general public. Appeared in several editions with varying paginations.

Happiness Digest, 1983. A 64-page illustrated edition of Steps to Christ. Study guide available.

Happiness Homemade, 1971. 188 pp. Abridged edition of The Adventist Home.

He Taught Love. One of several editions of Christ's Object Lessons.

Healthful Living. Medical Missionary Board, Battle Creek, Michigan, 1896. 284 pp. A work compiled by David Paulson, M.D. Topically arranged excerpts of varying length, drawn from printed and manuscript sources. Because in some instances, according to the preface, "slight verbal changes in connecting words or phrases" were made, it is not considered by the White Estate as a primary source. The Ministry of Healing, published in 1905, took the place of this earlier compilation.

Highways to Heaven. RH, 1952. 382 pp. See Christ's Object Lessons in this article.

The Impending Conflict. 127 pp. Selected chapters from The Great Controversy.

In Heavenly Places. RH, 1967. 382 pp. Devotional book for 1968. Daily devotional book with Scripture texts. Compiled largely from unpublished and out-of-print materials.

Knowing Him Better. See Steps to Jesus.

Justified by Faith. PPPA, 1893. 16 pp. Reprinted in Selected Messages, book 1, pp. 389—398.

Last Day Events. PPPA, 1992. 330 pp. A compilation of the most significant statements on events that will precede Christ's second coming. These events include Sunday laws, Satan's last-day deceptions, the shaking, and the close of probation.

Letters to Young Lovers. PPPA, 1983. 94 pp. Letters to young people just married or about to marry.

Life and Teachings of Ellen G. White. PPPA, 1933. 128 pp. Paper cover. A brief presentation drawn largely from Life Sketches, designed for use of evangelists. Publication discontinued.

Life at Its Best. See The Ministry of Healing in this article.

Life Sketches of Ellen G. White. PPPA, 1915. 480 pp. "A narrative" of the experience of Ellen G. White to 1881, "as written by herself; with a sketch of her subsequent labors and of her last sickness compiled from original sources." The autobiographical account compiled in Mrs. White's office drew heavily from Spiritual Gifts, vol. 2 (1860), the "biographical sketch" in Testimonies, vol. 1 (1885), and an earlier book Life Sketches . . . of Elder James White, and his wife, Mrs. Ellen G. White (1880), which should not be confused with this Life Sketches of Ellen G. White.

Lift Him Up. RH, 1988. 382 pp. Devotional book for 1989.

Love Unlimited. PPPA, 1958. 313 pp. A book combining Steps to Christ and Thoughts From the Mount of Blessing, designed to create a volume for wide missionary-book distribution. Paged continuously and with combined indexes, but with the separate pagination of the second work indicated also in brackets.

Manual for Canvassers. PPPA, 1902. 73 pp. Compiled “under the direction of the author,” from the Testimonies and other sources; replaced by Colporteur Evangelist (1920); contents now in Colporteur Ministry (1953).

Manuscript Releases, vols. 1—21, 1981—1993. These volumes contain all the unpublished letters and manuscripts issued throughout the years by the White Estate under the “release” policy.

Maranatha—The Lord Is Coming. RH, 1976. 384 pp. Daily devotional book with Scripture texts emphasizing the Second Coming.

Medical Ministry. PPPA, 1932. 348 pp. Presenting the wide range of counsels in manuscripts to medical personnel and counsels relating to Seventh-day Adventist medical work in its broad features. The first posthumous Ellen G. White book composed largely of unpublished materials. Second edition (1963) in CHL with historical foreword added.

Messages to Young People. SPA, 1930. 502 pp. Compiled largely from articles in the Youth’s Instructor, with related materials from Testimonies for the Church and other sources.

Mind, Character, and Personality. Two volumes, SPA, 1977. Vol. 1, 369 pp. Development of the mind, the Christian and psychology, love and sensuality in the human experience, self-respect, etc. Vol. 2, 443 pp. Guilt, fear, diet and mind, hypnotism, etc.

The Ministry of Healing. PPPA, 1905. 541 pp. A general presentation of the principles of healthful living, written for SDAs and the general public, replacing Christian Temperance (1890). Printed in 1943 in abridged form, with chapters rearranged, as Your Home and Health, and in a similar abridgment in 1965 as Life at Its Best.

My Life Today. RH, 1952. 377 pp. Daily devotional book, with Scripture texts; extracts drawn from sources published and unpublished.

Our Father Cares. RH, 1991. 350 pp. Daily devotional book for 1992.

Our High Calling. RH, 1961. 380 pp. Daily devotional book with Scripture texts; extracts from all available sources, mainly from messages addressed to young people.

Patriarchs and Prophets. PPPA, RH, 1890. 762 pp. Originally subtitled “The Great Conflict Between Good and Evil as Illustrated in the Lives of Holy Men of Old.” Including appendix, and introduction by Uriah Smith. The conflict of the ages from the fall of Lucifer to the death of King David. An amplification of material originally in Spiritual Gifts, vols. 1, 3, and 4, and The Spirit of Prophecy, vol. 1 (1870). The first of the Conflict Series, intended for both SDAs and the general public. Appeared in several editions with varying pagination. Another 1890 printing of the first, but short-lived, edition carries the title of the Great Controversy Between Christ and Satan as Illustrated in the Lives of Patriarchs and Prophets, with different page numbering.

Peter’s Counsels to Parents, 1981. 63 pp. Lessons drawn from 2 Peter 1 relating to the challenges of parenting.

Prayer for the Sick. RH, 1937. 63 pp. A compilation.

Present Truth. See Ellen G. White Present Truth and Review and Herald Articles in this article.

Principles of True Science. Washington College Press, 1928. 720 pp. A topically arranged compilation prepared as a teaching aid, recommended by the Department of Education of the General Conference, by veteran educator M. E. Cady, with the concurrence of the White Trustees. Assembled from all available published sources.

Prophets and Kings. See The Story of Prophets and Kings in this article.

The Publishing Ministry. RH, 1983. 430 pp. CHL. A comprehensive guide to conducting SDA publishing work to achieve maximum success.

Radiant Religion. RH, 1946. 271 pp. A daily devotional book with Scripture texts, compiled from published sources.

Recreation. PPPA, c. 1912. 51 pp. Selections of articles presenting an appeal to students, teachers, and sanitarium employees. Portions later included in Counsels to Teachers (1913).

Redemption. RH, 1874—1878. Eight pamphlets with covers serially numbered. Printed mostly from the type set for The Spirit of Prophecy, vols. 2 (1877) and 3 (1878). With the exception of no. 2, “The Temptation of Christ,” which was written earlier and in more detail, it could be said that the Redemption Series was a rearrangement of the chapters of The Spirit of Prophecy, vols. 2 and 3.

Reflecting Christ. RH, 1985. 382 pp. Devotional book for 1986, with Scripture texts and inspired comments.

The Remnant Church. PPPA, 1952. 72 pp. Paper cover. A compilation dealing with the church, its vicissitudes, and its triumph, with articles selected from Testimonies to Ministers and other sources.

The Remnant Church Not Babylon. Pacific Union Conference Committee, c. 1917. 32 pp. Included in Testimonies to Ministers (1923) and The Remnant Church (1950).

The Retirement Years. RH, 1990. 240 pp. CHL. Practical counsel on retirement gleaned from letters, manuscripts, books, and periodical articles.

Review and Herald. See Ellen G. White Present Truth and Review and Herald Articles in this article.

The Sanctified Life. RH, 1937. 69 pp. Articles appearing in the Review and Herald in 1881 and in pamphlet form the same year. The 1956 edition has 110 pp.

Selected Messages, 3 vols. RH, books 1 and 2, 1958; book 3, 1980. CHL. Book 1, 488 pp; book 2, 512 pp; book 3, 510 pp. General counsels on many topics of perennial interest and importance, drawn from periodical articles, out-of-print books, and manuscript sources. Topics in book 1 include the inspiration of the prophetic writers, revival and reformation, the Alpha and Omega, and Christ our righteousness. Topics in book 2 include false prophets, secret societies, assurance to those facing death, the use of drugs, the military question, and the church triumphant. The appendix to book 2 reproduces the six Ellen White basic 1865 articles on health. Topics in book 3 include preparation of the E. G. White books, age of school entrance, international dateline, church standards, and last-day events.

Selections From the Testimonies, 3 vols. SPA, 1936. One third of the articles in the Testimonies for the Church, published in inexpensive form to meet the needs of North America in Depression years. Replaced by Testimony Treasures (1949).

Selections From the Testimonies Bearing on Sabbath School Work. PPPA, RH, 1900. 121 pp. Selections from Sabbath School Worker articles, chronologically arranged and supplemented with selections from the Testimonies. Replaced by Counsels on Sabbath School Work (1938).

Selections From the Testimonies for the Church for the Study of Those Attending the General Conference in Oakland, California, Mar. 27, 1903. PPPA, 1903. 95 pp. A portion later published in Testimonies for the Church, vol. 8.

Sermons and Talks, vols. 1 and 2, 1990 and 1994. 405, 339 pp. each. Previously unpublished E. G. White sermons.

Seventh-day Adventist Bible Commentary, vol. 7-A, RH, 1970. 692 pp. All the E. G. White quotations included as supplementary material in the seven volumes of the SDA Bible Commentary, plus the E. G. White statements in Questions on Doctrine on Christ's nature, the Trinity, and the atonement.

The Sin of Licentiousness. Publisher and date not indicated. 38 pp. Currently embodied in Testimonies to Ministers, pp. 426—456.

A Sketch of the Christian Experience and Views of Ellen G. White. James White, Saratoga Springs, New York, July 1851. 64 pp. Embodies brief autobiographical sketch and visions, many of which appeared earlier in broadsides (Apr. 6, 1846; Apr. 7, 1847; Jan. 31, 1849); Present Truth, 1849—1850; Review and HeraldExtra, July 21, 1851; reprinted in 1882 and included in Early Writings.

Sketches From the Life of Paul. PPPA, RH, 1883. 334 pp. A work of 32 chapters, replaced by the fuller The Acts of the Apostles (1911).

Sons and Daughters of God. RH, 1955. 383 pp. Devotional book with Scripture texts. Drawn from all available Ellen G. White sources, but largely portions from her periodical articles.

The Southern Work (1898). Published by J. E. White on the missionary boat Morning Star. 115 pp. (Later printing, c. 1900. 147 pp.) A compilation of early counsels concerning missionary activity for African-Americans in the Southern states. Opening with an appeal issued in 1891, entitled "Our Duty to the Colored People," it contains nine articles published in the Review and Herald from Nov. 26, 1895, to Feb. 4, 1896, and excerpts of letters written from 1895 to 1899 to evangelistic workers in the South.

The Southern Work. RH, 1966. 96 pp. Ten articles published in the Review and Herald in 1895 and 1896, including one dated Apr. 2, 1895, which was not in the 1898 edition of The Southern Work. Explanatory notes giving historical settings have been provided where needed.

Special Instruction Relating to the Review and Herald Office and the Work in Battle Creek. RH, 1896. 51 pp.

Special Testimonies Concerning the Work and Workers in the Pacific Press. PPPA, 1897. 51 pp.

Special Testimonies on Education. No imprint, probably RH, c. 1897. Instruction written subsequent to the issuance of Christian Education, all reprinted in Counsels to Teachers, Parents, and Students (1913), and Fundamentals of Christian Education (1923).

Special Testimonies to Ministers and Workers (Series A, Nos. 1—12).

Eleven numbered pamphlets issued by the General Conference (1892—1897), making available to ministers many special messages, mainly to the president of the General Conference. Not identified as Series A until after Series B was initiated. Largely reprinted in 1923 in Testimonies to Ministers and Gospel Workers. no. 12, issued c. 1905, is unrelated to the others and is titled Special Testimonies, Series A, no. 12, "A Message to Our Physicians."

Special Testimonies, Series B. Another series comprising 19 numbers in 21 pamphlets of varying size and in various editions with pagination not uniform; in all, more than 750 pages, issued between 1903 and 1913 to meet special situations of a local or temporary character. Those portions of permanent interest and value have been incorporated in such volumes as Testimonies for the Church, Counsels on Health, Testimonies to Ministers, Counsels on Stewardship, and Selected Messages.

Special Testimony to Battle Creek Church. RH, 1896. 96 pp. Reprinted in Testimonies to Ministers and Testimonies for the Church, vol. 8.

The Spirit of Prophecy. 4 vols. RH, 1870—1884.

Vol. 1. The Great Controversy Between Christ and His Angels and Satan and His Angels, 1870. 414 pp. Biblical history to Solomon, with a chapter on the Messiah. Largely an amplification of the biblical history presented in Spiritual Gifts, vols. 1, 3, and 4. Afterward amplified as Patriarchs and Prophets (1890), which replaced this volume. Early chapters reproduced in The Story of Redemption (1947).

Vol. 2. The Great Controversy Between Christ and Satan. Life, Teachings, and Miracles of Our Lord Jesus Christ, 1877. 398 pp. The life of Christ to the triumphal entry.

Vol. 3. The Great Controversy Between Christ and Satan. The Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of Our Lord Jesus Christ, 1878. 392 pp. In a later printing (c. 1883) five chapters on the life and ministry of Paul were added, bringing the total to 442 pages. These same chapters appear in Sketches From the Life of Paul (1883). Eventually amplified as the last part of The Desire of Ages (1898) and The Acts of the Apostles (1911), volumes that replaced this work.

Vol. 4. The Great Controversy Between Christ and Satan. From the Destruction of Jerusalem to the End of the Controversy. PPPA, RH, 1884. 506 pp. Soon after the issuance of this volume, illustrations were added to make a subscription edition to be sold by colporteurs, the first Ellen G. White book so used. Some of the 10 printings of this book, issued between 1884 and 1887, were numbered as “Fifth Edition,” “Sixth Edition,” etc., and date of printing was given. Later amplified as The Great Controversy Between Christ and Satan (1888).

Spiritual Gifts. 4 vols. RH, 1858—1864. Facsimile reprint available.

Vol. 1. The Great Controversy Between Christ and His Angels and Satan and His Angels, 1858. 219 pp. First printing of the great controversy story, touching certain high points, with emphasis on last-day events. The forerunner of the five-volume Conflict of the Ages Series. Reprinted in 1882, and the same year made a part of Early Writings (see pp. 133—295).

Vol. 2. My Christian Experience, Views, and Labors in Connection With the Rise and Progress of the Third Angel’s Message, 1860. 304 pp. Autobiographical account to 1860. Drawn upon for the 1915 Life Sketches of Ellen G. White. Contains many details not found elsewhere.

Vol. 3. Important Facts of Faith in Connection With the History of Holy Men of Old, 1864. 304 pp. Bible history from Creation to the giving of the Law. Amplified as the first part of The Spirit of Prophecy, vol. 1 (1870).

Vol. 4. Important Facts of Faith: Laws of Health, and Testimonies, Nos. 1—10, 1864. 156, 160 pp. The first section is an account of biblical history from Sinai to Solomon, with two chapters bridging to the Messiah, and a chapter entitled “Health,” with related material. The biblical history was later amplified as the last part of Spirit of Prophecy, vol. 1 (1870).

The 32-page chapter “Health” is the first comprehensive presentation of the health message as contained in Mrs. White’s vision of June 6, 1863; amplified in 1865 to become six chapters in six pamphlets entitled Health, or How to Live, edited by James White. The second section (pp. 1—160) is a condensed reprint of Testimonies, Nos. 1—10.

Steps to Christ. Fleming H. Revell, 1892. 153 pp. Subsequently RH, PPPA, SPA. The steps to the victorious Christian life. The most widely read of Mrs. White’s books, published in scores of printings of many editions too numerous to list, in many languages, attaining a distribution of millions of copies. About 1896 the publishing rights of the book were transferred to the publishing interests of the church. An opening chapter was added by the author, bringing the total to 13.

Steps to Jesus. RH, 1981. 125 pp. Adapted from Steps to Christ for people whose second language is English. Also published as Knowing Him Better.

The Story of Prophets and Kings as Illustrated in the Captivity and Restoration of Israel. PPPA, 1917. 753 pp. The second of the Conflict Series, five books tracing the great controversy story—written for both SDAs and the general public. To provide this volume several series of periodical articles, dealing with the history of Israel from the reign of King David to the coming of the Messiah, were amplified and new material was prepared. Two final chapters left incomplete at Mrs. White’s death were filled out by her staff from “matter from her manuscript file” (LS 136). Originally issued under the title “The Captivity and Restoration of Israel,” it soon was changed to the present title. But all printings from the original plates carry the words “Captivity and Restoration” as part of the subtitle.

The Story of Redemption. RH, 1947. 445 pp. CHL. Drawn from presentations of the great controversy story (Early Writings and The Spirit of Prophecy, vols. 1, 3, and 4), this volume presents the essential elements in a presentation of broad sweep. The English basis for many translations.

Sufferings of Christ. RH, c. 1870. Many printings and formats. Currently RH, 47 pp.

Supplement to the Experience and Views of Ellen G. White. James White, Rochester, New York, 1854. 48 pp. Presents an explanation of some misunderstood phrases in Experience and Views and certain further counsels, some of which had appeared in the Review and Herald. Reprinted in 1882 with Experience and Views and included in Early Writings.

Temperance. PPPA, 1949. 309 pp. A compilation drawn from all available sources, providing an indispensable handbook. Second edition in CHL.

Testimonies for the Church. 9 vols. PPPA, 1885—1909. Messages of counsel to Seventh-day Adventists, to either individuals or groups (such as churches and institutions), concerning specific situations, or messages of a general character dealing with principles of Christian living and the mission of the church. After the set was complete, it was issued as nine vols. in three; later nine in four; also in nine. A new edition (1948) maintained established paging but embodied some appendix notes, enlarged subject indexes, and at the opening of each volume a background statement giving the historical setting or “the times” of the volume.

Testimonies on Sexual Behavior, Adultery, and Divorce. 1989. 271 pp.

Testimonies to Ministers and Gospel Workers. PPPA, 1923. 544 pp. Counsels initially published in pamphlets and periodical articles particularly Special Testimonies to Ministers and Workers, Series A (1892—1897) and Special Testimonies, Series B (1903—1913).

Testimony for the Battle Creek Church. PPPA, 1882. 84 pp. Reprinted in Testimonies, vol. 5.

Testimony for the Church, Nos. 1—33, 1855—1889. Numbered pamphlets ranging from 16 to 288 pages. All printed by RH except Nos. 26 and 27 (PPPA); Nos. 31—33 printed by both. These were reprinted in Testimonies for the Church, vols. 1—5. (Testimonies 34—37 are vols. 6—9 of the set.)

Testimony for the Church at Battle Creek. RH, 1872. 116 pp.

Testimony for the Physicians and Helpers of the [Battle Creek] Sanitarium. RH, 1879. 94 pp. Largely reprinted in Testimonies, vol. 4.

Testimony Treasures, 3 vols. PPPA, 1949. 1,771 pp. CHL. Approximately one third of the content of the Testimonies, presenting the essential counsels for the world field without the repetition of subject matter that was inevitable in the nine-volume Testimonies issued over a 55-year period. The articles, arranged in chronological order, present the counsels within easy reading compass and embody also a few articles of worldwide interest from other sources, such as counsel on attendance at public school on the Sabbath. Designed as the standard for translated editions of the Testimonies, and for wider use, especially by new converts.

That I May Know Him. RH, 1964. 382 pp. Daily devotional book with Scripture texts, presenting materials selected from periodical articles and manuscripts.

This Day With God. RH, 1979. 384 pp. Devotional book for 1980.

Thoughts From the Mount of Blessing. International Tract Society, 1896. 205 pp. Now RH, PPPA. A six-chapter presentation of the lessons Jesus taught in His sermon on the mount. Issued in many editions with varying paginations.

The Triumph of God's Love, 1957. See The Great Controversy.

The Upward Look. RH, 1982. 383 pp. Devotional book for 1983.

The Voice in Speech and Song. PPPA, 1988. 480 pp. Topics include effective methods of public speaking and singing as a part of worship.

Welfare Ministry. RH, 1952. 349 pp. CHL. A handbook on neighborhood ministry compiled from all sources, with an appendix on the personal experience of Ellen White in practical ministry in her own neighborhood.

A Word to the "Little Flock," 1847. 30 pp. Facsimile reproduction of Ellen White's earliest communications, along with articles by James White and Joseph Bates.

Your Home and Health. See The Ministry of Healing in this article.

White Estate

WHITE ESTATE. See Ellen G. White Estate, Incorporated.

White, Henry Nichols

WHITE, HENRY NICHOLS (1847—1863). Eldest son of James and Ellen White. Born in Gorham, Maine, Aug. 26, 1847, Henry spent much of his early years in the Stockbridge Howland home in Topsham, Maine, as his parents were called upon to travel extensively throughout New England and New York. James and Ellen referred to Henry as “our sweet singer,” because of his “clear, full, tenor voice,” and his love of music. He died of lung fever (pneumonia) at the age of 16 on Dec. 8, 1863. A brief narrative of his life, together with letters written to him by his mother, was published in pamphlet form called An Appeal to the Youth (1864).

White, J. S.

WHITE, J. S. A Millerite preacher, not to be confused with the Seventh-day Adventist pioneer and the husband of Ellen White, James (Springer) White, who seems never to have used his middle name; or with the latter's brother, John Whitney White, a Methodist minister.

White, James Edson

WHITE, JAMES EDSON (1849—1928). Second son of James and Ellen White. At the age of 15 Edson was employed at the Review and Herald office, of which his father was founder and president. Here he learned and mastered the printer's trade. On July 28, 1870, he married Emma MacDearmon (her sister, Harriet, later married F. E. Belden, White's cousin). During the early years of his married life Edson engaged in various activities and studies. In April 1877 he was called to care for the business interests of the newly established Pacific SDA Publishing Association in Oakland, California, where he served officially as secretary but was actually business manager of the printing plant. He held this position for about three years. While connected with the press, he led in the preparation and publication of the first Seventh-day Adventist Sabbath school songbook, Song Anchor and Temperance Songs, a work in which F. E. Belden and D. S. Hakes collaborated and to which they contributed largely. Song Anchor was the first hymnbook issued by Seventh-day Adventists in which all the songs were set to music.

While residing in Battle Creek, Michigan, in the fall of 1880, and being deeply interested in the rapidly developing Sabbath school work, White attended the third annual session of the General Sabbath School Association held on the nearby campground. In the absence of the president, White was chosen chair pro tem. He was elected vice president for the ensuing year. For six years he was closely linked with the interests of the Sabbath school work, serving on the executive committee, the publishing committee, and as chair of the Sabbath school lesson committee. As a member of the Sabbath school publishing committee, he was prominent in launching the Sabbath School Worker, in January 1885. In 1886 he helped to bring out a second Sabbath school songbook, Joyful Greetings for the Sabbath School.

Interested in publishing, in the 1880s White operated the J. E. White Publishing Company in Battle Creek and published, for subscription sale by agents, books on etiquette, cookery, and business forms. For a number of years he had been especially interested in the publishing of music, and acquired considerable skill in setting music in type. Both he and F. E. Belden were musicians and showed talent as composers. It was natural, then, that when the General Conference developed a hymnbook with music appearing on each page—Hymns and Tunes (1886)—edited by F. E. Belden and Edwin Barnes, they should turn to the J. E. White Publishing Company for the setting of the type for both the music and words. White's publishing and other business interests in the late 1880s and early 1890s reached out from Battle Creek to Chicago, Illinois.

In 1893, at a time of religious awakening in his own personal experience, there came into the hands of J. E. White a copy of "Our Duty to the Colored People" (released Mar. 20, 1891), an appeal from his mother for SDAs to engage in active missionary work for Blacks. Greatly desiring to link himself more closely with the proclamation of the Seventh-day Adventist faith, he set about to engage personally in educational and evangelistic work among the Black people in the Deep South. Having had some experience in ship navigation on the Mississippi River, he planned a missionary riverboat, the Morning Star, and had it constructed at Allegan, Michigan, in 1894 at a cost of $3,700. Enlarged a little later, the vessel provided a residence for the owner, staterooms for workers, chapel, library, print shop, photographic room with darkroom, kitchen, and storerooms.

White recruited a company of missionary-minded men and women who supported themselves and aided the enterprise by the selling of small books written by J. E. White, principally the Gospel Primer, a Bible-based work prepared as a simple textbook to be used in teaching Blacks to read. The gospel workers undertook missionary endeavors along the Yazoo River in Mississippi. Meetings held in the ship's cabin were followed by schoolwork offered to both children and adults in the same quarters, with Mrs. J. E. White teaching the older women to read. The work developed until inexpensive church and school structures were erected in the centers near which the Morning Star had moored for a time. Within a few years 50 such schools were opened and put in running order. Within a reasonable time the regular working forces of the denomination were enriched by many black ministers and teachers who traced their first contacts with Seventh-day Adventists to the Morning Star and to schools to which it gave birth.

In 1895 the self-supporting workers engaged in this enterprise organized themselves into the Southern Missionary Society, with headquarters at Yazoo City, Mississippi.

Through frequent letters Ellen White, while in Australia, encouraged her son and his wife in their unique type of service. It was early in 1897, while engaged in this work, that J. E. White was ordained to the ministry. In 1898 he published on the Morning Star a 115-page booklet consisting of (1) his mother's initial appeal that encouraged him to enter this work, (2) nine of her articles published in the Review and Herald in 1895 and 1896, presenting to the church its duty to work in the South, and (3) some portions of her communications regarding the conduct of missionary work among Black people. This carried the title The Southern Work. Two or three years later another 32 pages of Mrs White's later communications were added, bringing the total to 147 pages.

The Gospel Herald, a monthly journal, was launched at Yazoo City, Mississippi, in May 1898 to inform SDAs of the developing work among the Black people.

Ever sensing the need of funds for missionary work, White pushed forward with the writing and publishing of books, 12 in all. Among them were Best Stories From the Best Book (still current in 1965); Past, Present, and Future, and The Coming King, all of which have sold in the hundreds of thousands, with the latter for many years leading in subscription books produced by SDAs on the Second Advent.

In 1900, under the auspices of the Southern Missionary Society, printing facilities were assembled in Nashville, and in January 1901 a printing office at 1025 Jefferson Street was in operation. With the encouragement of Ellen White, this publishing venture survived, but not without many difficulties. This publishing establishment started by J. E. White on a shoestring was a forerunner of the Southern Publishing Association.

As the work of the Southern Missionary Society developed and as the newly organized Southern Union Conference reached a point of sufficient strength, the various interests of the society were gradually taken over by that conference. White, step by step freed from the many details of administering a far-flung work, continued to make his headquarters in the vicinity of Nashville, Tennessee, and devoted his time primarily to the writing and publishing of books, a number of which were translated into several languages.

In 1912, because of the failing health of Emma, his wife, White moved back to the North and settled in Marshall, Michigan. After her death on July 29, 1917, he took up residence in Battle Creek, where for five years he engaged in the making of stereopticon slides to be used by SDA workers. On Aug. 3, 1922, White married Rebecca Burrill. The two made their residence at Otsego, Michigan. Until his death, May 30, 1928, White continued his business in stereopticon slides, as far as his health permitted.

J. E. White's funeral was held in the Battle Creek Tabernacle, and he was buried in the White family lot in Oak Hill Cemetery, Battle Creek, Michigan. He left no children.

White, James Springer

WHITE, JAMES SPRINGER (1821—1881). Co-founder of the Seventh-day Adventist Church. He was born in Palmyra, Maine, Aug. 4, 1821, in a family of pioneer New England stock. He reported in his Life Incidents (page 9) that his father was descended from one of the Pilgrims who came on the ship Mayflower and landed on Plymouth Rock in December 1620. Genealogical records published in 1900 trace James's ancestry to the family of John White, of Salem, known to be in New England in 1638. James's mother was a granddaughter of Dr. Samuel Shepard, an eminent Baptist minister of New England.

James, the fifth of nine children, suffered as a boy from physical debility, especially weakness of eyesight, which prevented him from attending school until he was 19. He then entered the academy at nearby St. Albans, Maine. Studying 18 hours a day, in 12 weeks he attained a certificate indicating his qualifications to teach the common branches. The next winter he taught. Then he attended school another 17 weeks and was told he could prepare for college in one year. These 29 weeks in school brought his formal education to a close. At times he referred to this experience as a demonstration of what a young person might accomplish by exercising much diligence.

Religious Experience and Early Ministry. At 15 James was baptized into the denomination called the Christian Connection, to which his parents belonged. On his return home after a second winter of teaching, he learned from his mother of the Adventist message (see Millerite Movement). Persuaded to attend meetings held by "Brother Oakes, of Boston," he became convinced of the importance of what he had heard and of the shortness of time. He resigned from his school to join in heralding the Advent message. In September 1842, at Castine, in eastern Maine, he heard William Miller and J. V. Himes. Acquiring one of the new cloth prophetic charts and certain tracts, he ventured forth to preach, traveling with a borrowed horse and a patched-up bridle and saddle. Being consecrated, earnest, and dauntless, and steadily acquiring added knowledge and skill, he achieved success in evangelism. It was reported that, in response to his preaching through the winter months of 1842—1843, more than 1,000 men and women were led to Christ. On his return to Palmyra in April 1843 he was ordained to the ministry in the Christian denomination.

With his fellow Adventist believers, White suffered keen disappointment in October 1844, but he clung in confidence to God's Word and he was prepared to go forward as further light from that Word should shine upon his pathway.

Marriage and Early Ministerial Labors. Early in 1845 White became acquainted with Ellen Harmon when, in connection with her journey to eastern Maine to combat fanaticism, she worked with him. Prior to the Disappointment, on a visit to Portland, Maine, he had met and observed her. A courtship developed but matured only after they assured themselves that for them to marry was within God's providence. They were married by the justice of the peace in the city of Portland, Maine, on Aug. 30, 1846.

The first year of their married life, James and Ellen White lived in the home of Ellen's parents, first at Portland, Maine, and then at Gorham, Maine. Although the seventh-day

Sabbath had been introduced to them by Joseph Bates early in 1846, it was not until about the time of their marriage that they began to keep the day. The 48-page Sabbath pamphlet published by Bates in August 1846 was a factor in this step. In October 1847 James and Ellen White were invited to bring Henry, their few-weeks-old son, to Topsham, Maine, and set up housekeeping in the second-floor rooms of the Howland home. They began with borrowed furniture, but determined to be financially independent. White cut wood and worked on the construction of a railroad for support. But they did not settle down for long. With the acceptance of an invitation to attend a conference at Rocky Hill, Connecticut, in April 1848, White gave himself from that time forward to the work of the ministry.

The Rocky Hill conference was the first general gathering of the Sabbathkeeping Adventists. Others were held subsequently (see Sabbath Conferences).

At the conference held in Dorchester, Massachusetts, November 1848, Mrs. White saw in vision that her husband must publish a paper setting forth the truths that were held by this penniless and widely scattered group of Sabbathkeepers, but it was not until July 1849 that White was able to begin publishing the Present Truth. For three years he and his wife moved into areas where their ministry was needed and where James, as he was able, made arrangements to publish. In the winter of 1849—1850, they spent some months in Oswego, New York. From November 1850 to June 1851 they lived at Paris, Maine; from August 1851 to April 1852 they stayed in the vicinity of Saratoga Springs, New York; and then settled in Rochester, New York, where James White published until October 1855. Even while making their home for a time at these places, they were often in the field traveling among the groups of adherents, imparting encouragement and giving guidance as it was needed.

There were trips into Michigan in 1853, 1854, and early 1855. In early November 1855, in response to the invitation of certain Sabbathkeepers of that state, White moved the publishing work to Battle Creek. The three years in Rochester, New York, had been marked by poverty, discouragement, illness, and at times almost despair of life itself. With the move to Battle Creek the health of the Whites improved, the financial outlook brightened, and the publishing work prospered. In 1857 a handpress was supplemented by a press powered with a steam engine. In 1861 a new brick structure was erected to house the publishing interests.

In the 1850s White began to lead in urging organization among the Sabbathkeeping Adventists. This culminated in the formation of the General Conference in May 1863 in the midst of the Civil War and at a time when church leaders were wrestling with great problems (see Organization).

At Otsego, Michigan, on June 5, 1863, at a time when White suffered from anxiety, overwork, and improper diet, Mrs. White had a vision on health principles. In this vision the admonition was given that her husband could not expect God's miraculous care in the preservation of his health if he was unmindful of the laws of nature. He was told that he must bring his life practices into harmony with these laws. In 1865 James and Ellen White published six pamphlets of 64 pages, each entitled Health, or How to Live. Some of the articles James wrote; in each number was a major article by Mrs. White.

On Aug. 16, 1865, White suffered a severe stroke of paralysis. While the physicians of the day gave little hope for recovery, the Whites set about to do what they could to bring restoration. White was taken by his wife for treatment to a progressive hydropathic institution at Dansville, New York, where in the fall of 1865 three months were spent under the care of Dr. James C. Jackson. There was some response to the treatment, but the philosophies advocated by Dr. Jackson were such that Mrs. White eventually felt impelled to remove her husband from this institution, which she did in December 1865.

She was shown in vision that only through proper mental and physical exercise could her husband regain the full use of his mind and body. This was contrary to the counsel of the physician that the patient should avoid physical and mental exercise. After spending the better part of 1866 in Battle Creek, Mrs. White took her husband to northern Michigan, to a setting in which she hoped to be able to encourage him to physical and mental activity.

Recovery and Renewed Labor. In the homes of friends in Wright and Greenville, Michigan, in the winter of 1866—1867, and later in their own home on a 45-acre (18-hectare) tract of land east of Greenville, White made a slow but steady and full recovery. While living on his farm, he and some of his associates laid plans for the first Seventh-day Adventist camp meeting, which was held at Wright, Michigan, Sept. 1—7, 1868. Season after season the Whites attended as many camp meetings as time and strength permitted.

Early in 1871, when, through poor editorial management the Health Reformer, the monthly health journal of the denomination, was rapidly losing ground, White became its editor and through careful planning and consistent work revived the paper. About this time the tract and missionary work, inaugurated in the New England Conference by S. N. Haskell, attracted White's attention. Seeing its great potential, he led in making this a general work throughout the ranks of Seventh-day Adventists. Eventually, in 1874, the General Conference Tract and Missionary Society was organized. Seeing the need of adequate preparation of men to carry various responsibilities of the church, he naturally gave strong support to the establishment of an SDA college in which the principles presented to Mrs. White in vision in 1872 could be carried out. This came to fruition in Battle Creek College in 1874.

His Last Years. The years 1872 and 1873 found White without the responsibility of the presidency of the General Conference. He divided his time between the interests of the work at Battle Creek, semiretirement in working vacations in the Rocky Mountains, and periods of work in California. Welcomed with open arms by the members of the West, the Whites joined heartily in the development and organization of the SDA work in California. In the summer of 1873, while vacationing in the Rocky Mountains, he had envisioned, and written of the establishment of, a weekly religious newspaper on the West Coast and possibly a publishing house there. In June 1874 in Oakland, California, he founded a journal called the Signs of the Times. Soon after this the Pacific SDA Publishing Association was built and equipped (see Pacific Press Publishing Association).

White's many responsibilities taxed his strength. As the 1870s progressed and he neared the age of 60, he was worn and exhausted. He longed and pleaded for younger men to step in and help carry the load, but he had difficulty laying off the burdens. From November 1878 until April 1879 the Whites made their home in Texas. But they were traveling to the camp meetings again in the summer of 1879. Then, except for attending camp meetings in 1880 and 1881, James White spent his time largely in Battle Creek. While there on Aug. 1, 1881, having attended certain camp meetings and expecting to go on to others, he was taken suddenly ill, and on Aug. 6 he died in the Battle Creek Sanitarium. The illness was diagnosed at first as malaria, but back of this were the years of overwork and the strain of carrying the responsibilities of a large and developing work of the church. The funeral was held in the Battle Creek Tabernacle on Sabbath afternoon, Aug. 13. Among close relatives present were his wife; his two surviving sons, Edson and William, and their wives; his sister, Mrs. Mary Chase; his brother, John White, a minister in the Methodist Conference in Ohio; and John's son-in-law. Two thousand five hundred people attended the funeral-business friends, townspeople, associates in the work, and church members. Fitting notice was given by the press throughout the United States, and the editorials appearing in the Battle Creek papers were profuse in their praise, admiration, and respect for James White. He was buried in the White family lot in the Oak Hill Cemetery in Battle Creek, close to his father and mother and his two sons, Henry and John Herbert.

Editor and Author. James White understood well and employed effectively the power of the printed page. His first publication was a 24-page pamphlet issued in May 1847, in Brunswick, Maine, entitled A Word to the "Little Flock" (currently available in a facsimile reprint). In the summer of 1849, encouraged by his wife and utilizing his 75-cent Bible and his concordance with both covers missing through wear, White prepared the articles for the eight-page Present Truth. The first four issues were published in Middletown, Connecticut, in July, August, and September 1849. These consisted largely of articles written by himself. The paper formed a tie that drew the Sabbathkeeping Adventists into closer fellowship. In December 1849 he published Hymns for God's Peculiar People That Keep the Commandments of God and the Faith of Jesus, a 48-page pamphlet consisting of words without the music. In succeeding years he published large hymnbooks, some with music.

Later issues of the Present Truth were published in Oswego, New York, and Paris, Maine. At Auburn, New York, in August, September, and November 1850, he published five issues of the Advent Review. Also in November 1850 came the Second Advent Review and Sabbath Herald, a regular publication succeeding both the Present Truth and the Advent Review. Irregular at first, it became in 1853 a weekly journal and is today the official church organ of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination (see Adventist Review).

As long as he lived, White was the leading influence in the Review and Herald, and most of the time he functioned as either editor, corresponding editor, or one of a group of editors. Through this journal White's influence was strongly felt throughout the SDA ranks. His articles and editorials covered many subjects important to the emerging church. They were clear and forceful in presenting the needs of the cause and the high standards that its members and institutions should attain. From time to time, in informative articles written in his typical style, James White reviewed the progress of the SDA cause and looked for an ever-enlarging work during brighter days ahead.

In August 1852 White began publishing the Youth's Instructor, a monthly, issued primarily to carry Sabbath school lessons for children and youth. He himself prepared the early lessons. He soon handed over the burdens of this journal to others associated with him in the publishing work.

As noted earlier, White inaugurated the Signs of the Times in 1874, designed as a weekly religious newspaper. As with the Review and Herald, White was the first editor, and then as long as he lived his name appeared on the masthead as editor.

He wrote or edited four books, all published by the Steam Press of the SDA Publishing Association at Battle Creek: Life Incidents in Connection With the Great Advent Movement (373 pp.), 1868; Sketches of the Christian Life and Public Labors of William Miller (416 pp.), 1875; and The Early Life and Later Experience and Labors of Elder Joseph Bates (320 pp.), 1878; Life Sketches . . . of Elder James White, and His Wife, Mrs. Ellen G. White (416 pp.), 1880.

Besides these he produced charts and a large number of paperbound books and pamphlets of varying size dealing with the many interests of the church. In 1853, burdened with the inroads of spiritism, he issued a small book, the Signs of the Times. His The Second Coming . . . ; A Brief Exposition of Matthew Twenty-four (known as Matthew Twenty-four) ran through many printings and is currently available in rewritten form as His Glorious Appearing. His 198-page Bible Adventism; or, Sermons on the Coming and Kingdom of Our Lord Jesus Christ ran through several editions. Perhaps the larger share of his pamphlets consisted of appeals of one type or another to the working force of the denomination or to the laity, some of which had to do with the business interests of the church.

Finances and Financial Management. As editor and publisher, James White received but a meager sustenance, with an income of $4 a week in the 1850s, which grew to $12 by the time of his death. His books brought some royalties and his wife received royalties on her books, all of which provided funds to help meet the demands that so often fall upon the shoulders of leaders. For a time White sold Bibles and concordances to supplement his meager income. He managed his own affairs with discretion and in such a way as to have something with which to aid the needy and distressed. He and his wife considered themselves stewards of the Lord, and whatever funds came to them were used judiciously to relieve the distressed and advance the work of the church.

White's name is found at the head of innumerable fund-raising endeavors, whether it be $10 to help relieve a drafted church member or $50 to assist a fellow minister secure a home, or $2,000 to help build Battle Creek College.

Organizer. White was a man of organization. But he shared with his former Millerite brethren the fear of formalism. The circumstances of the 1850s, however, impressed upon him the need of some type of organization. First, he was carrying the burdens of a publishing work and was personally responsible for all its obligations, since all of the business was done in his name. Second, he witnessed inroads made by discordant elements, as men claiming to be ministers of the Sabbathkeeping Adventists, but holding views quite apart from those of the majority, entered the field to disseminate their unscriptural doctrines. He was mindful, too, of the visions given his wife calling the attention of Sabbathkeeping Adventists to the importance of order in their work, since order is the law of heaven.

With the Review and Herald as a forum, James White urged some type of organization that could carry the burdens of the publishing business. In a conference in 1860 the name Seventh-day Adventist was chosen and a publishing association formed. The steps of the next few years led naturally to the organization of (1) churches, (2) state conferences, and (3) the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists (see Church Elder; Deacon; Ordination; Organization). In May 1863 White was unanimously selected as president of the newly formed General Conference, but refused to serve, quick to see that some might assume that in his diligent labors to bring about church organization he had worked to create an office for himself. John Byington was then elected to fill the office of president.

Publisher and Builder. It was James White who in April 1846 arranged for the printing of several of Ellen Harmon's first visions as a three-column broadside, which was sent out to 100 or more of the early adherents. It was his settled conviction that all Adventists should have the publications of the church. Those who were able to pay for their own and for another's should come forward freely with the means, and thus all of the members of the church could be well informed. Eventually, subscription prices were placed upon the journals, but at no time did he turn away from his convictions of a broad support and a wide distribution.

Having founded certain journals, such as Present Truth, Review and Herald, Youth's Instructor, and Signs of the Times, White was led naturally to the establishment of publishing houses. With funds quite promptly subscribed and funds earned by the business, he was successful in creating in Michigan a publishing house that for many years was acclaimed as the largest and best-equipped printing establishment in the state. To make this possible, commercial printing was solicited in addition to publishing done for the church. This made it possible to employ skilled workers and to utilize good equipment. Except for the time of his severe illness in 1865—1868, White served as president of the Seventh-day Adventist Publishing Association as long as he lived. This experience was repeated on the Pacific Coast in connection with the Pacific Press Publishing Association, which enjoyed the reputation of being for a number of years one of the best-equipped publishing establishments west of the Rocky Mountains.

In carrying out his concept that Christian literature should be made available to all who could use it to the best advantage, White called for the establishment of a book fund subscribed to by SDAs generally and used to equalize the distribution of denominational books, especially making them available to those unable to buy.

Administrator and Leader of Men. Largely a self-made man, White understood the value of money, time, and influence. He keenly sensed his responsibility as a steward for God. He was a man of prayer, often retiring to some quiet place to commune with God. He was sensitive to the guiding counsels of God found in His Word and those imparted through the messages given to his wife, Ellen. He valued counsel and allowed others to express their views. An able and enterprising leader, he was kind, considerate, and understanding and carried the confidence of the people. He planned with clear insight, taking into account the long-range view. With the Review and Herald as a means of communication and more or less an open forum, he expressed his views and gained the views of others.

There were times in the development of the church when a firm hand and a clear voice were needed, and White was equal to such occasions. His experience in these lines went back to the days immediately following the Millerite disappointment of 1844, when it was necessary to speak out in reproof of fanatics and discordant elements. Such boldness in meeting difficult situations and in dealing with people at times left wounds and made enemies. This is the unavoidable risk that an administrator must take.

Observing the perils of indolence, selfishness, or faulty planning, White saw clearly that only in steady advance following conservative policies and carefully drawn plans could the work of the church succeed, and he moved accordingly. There were on the one hand those who thoughtlessly rushed ahead and who needed to be called back; on the other hand there were laggards who needed to be urged to action. The Review and Herald editorials show White at his best in meeting such situations. As the recognized leader among the founders of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, he was held in the highest respect by his associates, both within the church and without.

White served as president of the General Conference for an aggregate of 10 years: May 17, 1865, to May 14, 1867; May 18, 1869, to Dec. 29, 1871; Aug. 13, 1874, to Oct. 11, 1880.

He also held numerous offices on the various institutional boards and the associations of the denomination. Because of his abilities, he was ever in demand as a committee member and a leader.

On White's death the following high tribute appeared editorially in the Battle Creek Journal, edited and published by George Willard, a former member of Congress: "He was a man of the patriarchal pattern, and his character was cast in the heroic mold. If the logical clearness to formulate a creed, if the power to infect others with one's own zeal, and impress them with one's own convictions; if the executive ability to establish a sect and to give it form and stability; if the genius to shape and direct the destiny of great communities, be a mark of true greatness, Elder White is certainly entitled to the appellation, for he possessed not one of these qualities only, but all of them in a marked degree.

"The essential feature of his life's work was constructive. He had the rare power of social organization, and laid the foundation and marked the design, for the erection of a social and religious structure for others to develop and further complete. Hence it is that his influence was not only commanding during his life, but will be realized long after his death. The work begun by him will not in the least flag by his departure, as the institutions so largely shaped by his practical wisdom and untiring diligence will continue to prosper and further develop in the future as in the past.

"Therefore, as with all true founders of communities, his life is not a broken shaft, but an enduring column, whereon others are to build. He lived to see the Adventist denomination, with all its various institutions with which he has been identified as founder and chief executive, firmly established upon a stable basis" (quoted in In Memoriam, A Sketch of the Last Illness and Death of Elder James White, pp. 10, 11).

Relationship to the Spirit of Prophecy. James White's experience was unique in that he not only benefited from those attainments that come naturally to men of vision and enterprise, but also had by his side his wife, Ellen, one through whom God from time to time communicated messages of instruction and guidance, information and caution. This gave sound balance to his work and saved him from mistakes he would otherwise have made. His position on Mrs. White's work he early set forth, making three points clear: "[First:] Dreams and visions are among the signs that precede the great and notable days of the Lord and as the signs of that day have been, and still are fulfilling, it must be clear to every unprejudiced mind, that the time has fully come when the children of God may expect dreams and visions from the Lord. . . .

"[Second:] The Bible is a perfect, and complete revelation. It is our only rule of faith and practice. But this is no reason why God may not show the past, present, and future fulfillment of His Word, in these last days, by dreams and visions, according to Peter's testimony.

"[Third:] True visions are given to lead us to God, and His written word; but those that are given for a new rule of faith and practice, separate from the Bible, cannot be from God, and should be rejected" (A Word to the "Little Flock" [May 30, 1847], p. 13).

At no time did James White see the manifestation of the gift of prophecy as superseding the Word of God; he saw the gift rather as provided in God's purpose for the church in earth's last days to draw men and women to the Word of God and to help them to see where they erred from following the principles of that Word. He made it clear that Seventh-day Adventists gained their doctrines from the Word of God and not from manifestations of the Spirit of Prophecy.

In his own personal experience there were times when White was reproved and corrected by the counsels of his wife. He valued highly these messages, which brought safe guidance. Nevertheless, at times, when he was reproved for a course of action that to him appeared to be proper and right, he at first was restive. However, a prayerful approach brought him to accept the counsel. A knowledge of his allegiance to the counsels instilled confidence in the hearts of the people.

White, Mary (Kelsey)

WHITE, MARY (KELSEY) (1857—1890). Editor. She began working at the Review and Herald publishing house at the age of about 13, first in the bindery, then in the composing room and the proofroom. At 17 she went to the Signs of the Times office in California, where she became assistant editor in 1877.

In 1876 Mary Kelsey married W. C. White, and in 1879—1880 was editor of the Youth's Instructor. While traveling with her husband she continued to edit book manuscripts. While they were in Europe from 1885 to 1887 she was a worker in the mission office in Basel, Switzerland. At that time she contracted “consumption,” which brought her to her death three years after her return to America.

White, May Lacey

WHITE, MAY LACEY. See Currow, May Lacey White.

White Memorial Medical Center

WHITE MEMORIAL MEDICAL CENTER. An institution that began as a clinic that opened in a rented store building at 941 East First Street on Sept. 29, 1913. It has grown into a full-service hospital encompassing nine city blocks in East Los Angeles, one of the fastest-growing inner-city communities in the United States. The clinic was originally started as a teaching facility of the School of Medicine, College of Medical Evangelists, now known as Loma Linda University, located approximately 75 miles (120 kilometers) southeast of Los Angeles. On the afternoon of Apr. 21, 1918, the clinic's name was changed to White Memorial Hospital, and was formally dedicated in memory of Ellen G. White.

White Memorial Medical Center is a 377-bed hospital serving more than 100,000 people each year in a service area that includes 2 million people, and nearly 700,000 Latino residents living in nearby neighborhoods. The hospital is located at 1720 Cesar E. Chavez Avenue in Los Angeles, California.

With approximately 1,600 employees, 200 volunteers, and 450 physicians representing all major medical specialties, White Memorial Medical Center provides a full range of inpatient, outpatient, and home-care services. Some of these services include an acute-care unit, emergency services, a level III neonatal intensive-care unit, women's services, same-day surgery, a skilled nursing facility, a family practice residency program that trains physicians for underserved communities, diagnostic imaging, cancer services, supportive laboratories, and a Cardiology Department, which performed the first open-heart surgery in the southwest United States.

Critical intensive-care areas include neonatal, pediatric, adult, coronary, and definitive observation. Specialized medical services and facilities include a tumor board and registry, electroencephalography, cortical function laboratory, cardiovascular laboratory, and cardiac catheterization laboratory. The hospital is active in the community and offers various services. Some of the programs include Privilege Plus, a program for seniors; community education programs; Health Match, which matches telephone callers with physicians; health screenings; and a free children's health fair.

On Jan. 1, 1964, Loma Linda University transferred ownership and direction of the White Memorial Hospital and Clinic to the Southern California Conference and the hospital was renamed White Memorial Medical Center, Inc. Although White Memorial is no longer under the guidance of Loma Linda University, the hospital still maintains a strong clinical program for medical, nursing, and allied health professions students, and a continuing program for interns and residents in advanced medical education programs such as Family Practice Residency, internal medicine, OB/gyn, ophthalmology, pediatrics, and a fellowship in cardiology.

A diagnostic and treatment center was completed in 1968 to replace the original clinical facility. Included under the project were the Courville-Abbott Memorial Library, surgical suites, outpatient and emergency services, clinical laboratory, nuclear medicine, and radiation oncology.

In 1974 a rehabilitation center was completed, as well as a patient care wing, a student housing unit comprising a dormitory for students and a 72-unit apartment house for interns and residents. The rehabilitation center includes physical therapy, a therapy pool and gym, speech pathology, occupational therapy, social work department, and orthotic office.

To allow for more private and semiprivate rooms, a nursing tower was built in 1983. The construction of the South Tower allowed expansion of several patient areas, including cardiac-care, intensive-care, surgery, definitive observation, neurology, and rehabilitation. As part of White Memorial's ongoing development, the Medical Office Plaza was completed in early 1992. The new plaza houses an imaging center, clinics for families, an occupational health center, and physician offices. In May of 1993 a pedestrian walkway connecting the hospital and the new Medical Office Plaza was dedicated in honor of retiring Los Angeles mayor Tom Bradley and was named "Bradley Bridge."

Together with Glendale Adventist Medical Center and Simi Valley Hospital and Health Care Services, White Memorial Medical Center is part of the Southern California Healthcare Network, established in February 1992 to provide a comprehensive health care delivery system in Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside, San Bernardino, and Ventura counties. White Memorial Medical Center and the Southern California Health Care Network are members of Adventist Health System/West, a nonprofit Seventh-day Adventist health-care system that owns, leases, and/or manages 18 health-care organizations in 10 Western states.

Administrators: Daniel Delos Comstock, M.D., 1913—1915; August H. Larson, M.D., 1915—1916; Percy T. Magan, M.D., 1920—1927; Hersel E. Butka, M.D., 1927—1929; Percy T. Magan, M.D., 1929—1930; Ralph J. Thompson, M.D., 1930—1935; Arthur E. Coyne, M.D., 1935—1937; Orlyn B. Pratt, M.D., 1938—1946; Harold M. Walton, M.D., 1946—1955; Erwin J. Remboldt, 1955—1960; Raymond L. Pelton, 1960—1963; Erwin J. Remboldt, 1964—1968; Ronald Sackett, 1968—1973; Robert Morris, 1973—1976; Richard A. Pierce, 1976—1982; Erwin J. Remboldt, 1983; Michael H. Jackson, 1984—1987; Harvey Rudisaile, 1987—1992; Robert Carmen, 1992— .

White Memorial School of Nursing

WHITE MEMORIAL SCHOOL OF NURSING. See Loma Linda University.

White Publications

WHITE PUBLICATIONS. See Ellen G. White Estate, Incorporated.

White, William Byington

WHITE, WILLIAM BYINGTON (1856—1948). Minister, administrator. He was the grandson of John Byington, who had been the first president of the General Conference. He began preaching intermittently when 25 years of age, supporting himself by teaching, digging ditches, and farming. His first official work was the superintendency of the North Dakota Mission (1887); then, in succession, he was president of the [South] Dakota (1887—1891), Nebraska (1891—1896), Indiana (1897—1898), and Montana (1898—1905) conferences, then the Pacific (1904—1905), North Pacific (1906—1909), and Atlantic (1909—1913) unions. From 1913 to 1920 he was president of the South African Union Conference, after which he returned to the United States to take up less strenuous duties. He retired in 1933.

White, William Clarence

WHITE, WILLIAM CLARENCE (1854—1937). Editorial assistant and publishing manager for his mother, Ellen G. White. The third son of the family, known widely as W. C. (and to his intimates as Willie), he was born Aug. 29, 1854, at Rochester, New York, where his father was then publishing the Review and Herald and the Youth's Instructor, and grew up in Battle Creek and Greenville, Michigan, attending the public schools and for a time a school taught by G. H. Bell in Battle Creek. Reared in a home that was largely the center of the growing work of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, he listened with increasing interest and comprehension to conversations regarding plans and methods of work for the advancement of the young church. He was baptized at Greenville, Michigan, at the age of 12.

His first appointment to denominational work came at the age of 20, in Oakland, California, where his father, James White, had just begun publishing the Signs of the Times. With the Signs being printed at a publishing establishment several blocks from the office, it was William's task to transport, by wheelbarrow, paper, type forms, printed sheets, and the finished papers. His working day was filled out in other tasks about the office, all of which afforded an all-around training in the publishing field.

He was associated with his father as the plans developed for the establishing of the Pacific SDA Publishing Association (see Pacific Press Publishing Association). Then, at the age of 21, at a constituency meeting held while James White was in the East (1876), William was elected president of the board and business manager of the enterprise. He accepted with reluctance, but carried the work through commendably, and with a balance sheet at the end of the business year (the second for the association) showing net earnings of $2,000. In the meantime, on Feb. 11, 1876, he was united in marriage with Mary Kelsey, a talented employee at the office of the publishing house.

It became the plan of church leaders that William and Mary White, after studying German and French at Battle Creek College, should go on to Europe to join the pioneering missionary J. N. Andrews and lead in the establishment of the third denominational publishing house. In preparation for this task they were both released from responsibilities on the Pacific Coast in April 1877 and attended the college at Battle Creek. However, because of the dearth of workers with administrative ability, William, while still a student, was made a member of the board of trustees of the college, and he was drawn into the publishing association at Battle Creek as vice president and appointed a director of the Western Health Reform Institute (Battle Creek Sanitarium). Meanwhile, the proposed publishing house in Europe waited.

White remained in Battle Creek until early in 1880, devoting his time to the publishing, educational, and medical interests there, and taking an active part in the rapidly developing Sabbath school work. Then his attention was engaged until the summer of 1885 with responsibilities of a similar character on the Pacific Coast, but particularly those connected with the publishing house. The establishment of Healdsburg College, the second Seventh-day Adventist educational institution, in the spring of 1882, was one of the highlights of his work. During part of this time he also served as the president of the General Sabbath School Association. He did a good share of the initial planning that made the Sabbath schools a strength to the church. On Nov. 19, 1883, at the General Conference session, action was taken approving his ordination to the ministry, and he was elected on the same day to the General Conference Committee, a position he held (except 1897—1901) through life.

At the General Conference session of 1883, W. C. White was requested to arrange his work and hold himself in readiness to proceed to Europe to assist in the purchase of machinery for publishing houses in Switzerland and Norway and to give counsel and assistance in all branches of the work in Europe. His mother, Ellen G. White, was also invited to spend some time visiting the European countries. White and his family went with her, and they arrived in Switzerland in September 1885 in time to attend the third European Missionary Council, and spent two full years in fulfilling the mission to which they were called. They found a newly constructed publishing house and central office for the general administration of the work in Europe. Equipment had been purchased for printing. While there White helped in establishing the work firmly and led in the publication at Basel of the illustrated book Historical Sketches of the Foreign Missions of the Seventh-day Adventists (1886), tracing the beginnings of the foreign mission program of the church in Europe and Australia.

After the death of his father, James White, in August 1881, certain responsibilities of assisting his mother in her travels and in the publishing of her books fell upon his shoulders, a responsibility that was to draw more heavily on his time and strength until it would become his principal occupation.

At the General Conference session of 1887, held in Oakland, California, White was elected to the newly established office of General Conference foreign mission secretary. He carried this work first while residing on the Pacific Coast and bearing responsibilities in the Pacific Press, and later (1890—1891) in Battle Creek, Michigan.

In 1888, when O. A. Olsen, who was working in Europe, was elected president of the General Conference, White served as acting president until Olsen could close up his work in Europe and return to the United States some six months later.

Mary White, who had contracted tuberculosis while doing editorial work in the publishing house in Switzerland, died in 1890 at the age of 33.

A call from Australia in 1891 included both Ellen G. White and W. C. White. Leaving his two motherless children in Battle Creek, he crossed the Pacific with his mother late in the year. In Australia he divided his time between assisting her and engaging in the development of all the interests of the cause in a new land. In 1894 he was called to head the newly organized Australian Union Conference, which he and A. G. Daniells, in counsel with the president of the General Conference, had developed (see Organization). He carried this responsibility until 1897, when, in order to do justice to his mother's literary work, he asked to be relieved of executive responsibilities and not be reappointed to the General Conference Committee.

In the meantime, with his mother's encouragement, White had led in finding a suitable tract of land for the establishment of the Australian school in a rural area, where there would be opportunities for industries and agriculture. The property at Cooranbong was selected in 1894, and until he left Australia in mid-1900, he was closely linked with the school interests (see Avondale College).

In 1895 White married Ethel May Lacey, from Tasmania. In September 1900, when Ellen White returned to the United States and acquired the Elmshaven property near the St. Helena Sanitarium, he also returned and resided nearby.

With his mother, White attended the General Conference session held in April 1901 at Battle Creek, Michigan, and was chairman of the committee on reorganization of the General Conference (see Organization). At the session he was again elected a member of the General Conference Committee, a position he held for the next 36 years.

As an unofficial general field secretary, and as head of the staff of workers at Elmshaven, White continued to give the best part of his time and abilities to assisting his mother in her travels and in her endeavors to bring as much of her writings into print as she could while living. He also worked closely with her as she encouraged the development of the educational work at Loma Linda and the establishment there of a medical college. He served as a member of the board of that institution, the original nucleus of the present Loma Linda University.

White was named in his mother's will as one of the five men appointed by her to act as trustees in the care and publication of her writings after her death (see Ellen G. White Estate, Incorporated). Since he had carried the burden of the business interests of her publishing work for many years, it was but natural that he should be asked to continue. As secretary of the board he led in the preparation of a number of posthumous books compiled in harmony with the provisions of Mrs. White's will, and in the making of a comprehensive index to the then current works (1926).

Although White lived and worked in California until his death, he participated in 1933 in laying plans for the transfer of the files and the office of the White Estate to Washington, D.C., which was done shortly after his death.

There was hardly a branch of denominational activities in which White was not interested and with which he was not familiar. His counsel was often sought. He served on numerous committees, often as an officer. He worked actively to the day of his death at the age of 83. At that time, besides being secretary of the Ellen G. White Estate and a member of the General Conference Committee, he was serving on the boards of both St. Helena Sanitarium and Pacific Union College.

Of White's four sons and three daughters, three served overseas, and one, Arthur, served as secretary of the Ellen G. White Estate. White's death occurred Sept. 1, 1937. Funeral services were held in California and at the Battle Creek Tabernacle. He was buried in the family lot in the Oak Hill Cemetery, Battle Creek, Michigan.

Whitney, Buel Landon

WHITNEY, BUEL LANDON (1845—1888). One of the pioneer Seventh-day Adventist workers in Europe. He was born in Vermont and at the age of 12 moved to New York with his parents, where soon afterward he, his mother, and his brother joined the SDAs. He began to preach at about 29 years of age, and in 1875, when he was elected president of New York and Pennsylvania Conference, he was ordained. He continued with the conference until he was sent to Europe in 1883 to relieve ailing J. N. Andrews. There he served as head of the Swiss Conference and supervised the establishment of the Basel Publishing House. Suffering from intestinal ailments, he returned to the United States in 1887.

Whitsett, Robert M.

WHITSETT, ROBERT M. (1913—1972). Pastor, evangelist, radio speaker. He was a native of Missouri, where, in his hometown of St. Louis he was known as the “boy evangelist,” because he had conducted a full evangelistic series when he was 13. He served as a pastor for a 10-year period in St. Louis, Louisville, and Oklahoma City. As an evangelist he held public meetings throughout the Central, Northern, and Lake unions. He served for a time as an associate in the Ministerial Department of the General Conference. His interest in the radio ministry of the church took him into several countries of Central and South America. He also served as director of evangelism and public affairs for the Arizona Conference.

He passed suddenly to his rest on Sabbath, Mar. 11, at Grenada Hills, California, where he was serving as pastor.

Wichita Sanitarium

WICHITA SANITARIUM. See Kansas Sanitarium.

Wicked, Fate of the WICKED, FATE OF THE. See Hell.

Wiest, Charles S.

WIEST, CHARLES S. (1879—1968). Evangelist, pastor, administrator. He was a native of Florida and was educated in Massachusetts. His first service to the church was in the East Pennsylvania Conference, where he held evangelistic meetings and pastored several churches. In 1909 he married Minnie Edwards and in 1912 he became president of the Mississippi Conference and the Black mission. In 1916 he served as pastor of the Battle Creek Tabernacle church and then was called to the presidency of the Wisconsin Conference. In 1919 he was elected to the same position in the Indiana Conference, where he led in the rebuilding of Indiana Academy. Beginning in 1926, he served for seven years as president of the Kansas Conference. This was followed by more than a decade of pastoral service in Minnesota. In 1946 he moved to Colorado, where he led out in the construction of a junior academy. After working for the Central Union and the Colorado Conference, he retired from active work at 82 years of age. Fifty-five of these years were spent in continuous work for the church.

Wilbur, Edwin Hymes

WILBUR, EDWIN HYMES (1869—1914). The first Seventh-day Adventist worker on the mainland of China. He became an SDA in his youth and dedicated his life to evangelistic work. For a time he worked as a printer at the Review and Herald, and later trained as a nurse at the Iowa Sanitarium. He had a burden to go as a missionary to China but because of poor health he was rejected by the Mission Board. However, he persisted in asking to be sent to China, now and then sending letters and notes, collections of some facts about China, and Chinese Scripture texts to the board or to some of its officers, always ending his letters with a subscript, “yours for China.” He argued that if his health was poor and he should die soon, he might as well die in a mission field as at home.

His entreaties finally gained him an appointment. In 1902 he married Susan Haskell, a nurse of the Iowa Sanitarium, and soon afterward they sailed to Canton, China, meeting in Hong Kong the J. N. Anderson family, who were the first SDA workers appointed to China. The Wilburs worked in Canton for a number of years. About 1908 he was ordained to the ministry. Shortly before his death of heart failure, he was appointed director of the work at Pakhoi, a seaside town on the Gulf of Tonkin.

Wilcox, Francis Mclellan

WILCOX, FRANCIS MCLELLAN (1865—1951). Editor of the Review and Herald for 33 years, author, minister, and administrator. He was born at Rossie, New York, received his early education in the public schools and by private tutoring, and later was one of the first students of the South Lancaster Academy. After completion of academic studies he spent four years in evangelism and city mission work in the New York Conference (1886—1890). He was ordained in 1889.

From 1891 to 1893 he was in California as editor of the Sabbath School Worker and recording secretary of the International Sabbath School Association. Next he served as secretary of the Foreign Mission Board and editor of the Home Missionary, with headquarters in Battle Creek, Michigan (1893—1897). Because of ill health he moved to Colorado, where his wife, née Lucretia M. Higby, whom he had married in 1887, soon died. Later he married Maude M. Sawyer.

For some time he was pastor of the Boulder, Colorado, church. For 12 years (1897—1909) he was chaplain of the Colorado Sanitarium and for several years its business manager. In 1909 he became associate editor of the Review and Herald and two years later its editor, a post he held until his retirement in 1944.

During his years with the Review and Herald he also served for a time as president of the Review and Herald Publishing Association, and was a member of many important committees and boards. He was a member of the original board of trustees of the Ellen G. White Estate, Incorporated, set up to care for the writings of Ellen G. White, and was the last of the original group to survive. Among the many books and pamphlets that he wrote are The Coming Crisis, What the Bible Teaches, The Testimony of Jesus, The Gospel of Health, Seventh-day Adventists in Time of War, Day by Day, The Early and Latter Rain, The More Abundant Life, Heart-to-Heart Talks, Divine Revelation, Facing the Crisis, and The Fall of Jerusalem.

Wilcox, Lyle C.

WILCOX, LYLE C. (1891—1970). Educator, minister, administrator. He was born in the state of Washington and attended Seventh-day Adventist academies there. In 1916 he graduated from the Ministerial Department of Pacific Union College. During the next three years he taught church school and served his country during World War I.

In 1919 he was married to Hazel Pearl Lyle and became principal of Auburn Academy in Washington. Then followed a term of service as educational superintendent of the Idaho Conference.

In 1923 Pastor and Mrs. Wilcox responded to a call to China, where he became principal of the South China Training School at Canton. Nine years later the family was transferred to Hong Kong to continue in educational work. In 1940 they were located in the Philippines, where Pastor Wilcox headed the educational department of what was known as the Philippine Union Conference. He later became president of that organization. Caught by World War II, Pastor Wilcox was interned for eight months in the Los Banos Internment Camp near Manila.

After a year in the United States for family health reasons, he returned to eastern Asia, where he led out in education and evangelism for youth. He returned to the United States permanently in 1959.

Wilcox, Milton Charles

WILCOX, MILTON CHARLES (1853—1935). Minister, editor. Before he accepted the Seventh-day Adventist faith at 25 years of age, he was a farmer, lumberman, and teacher. After two years of evangelistic work he was ordained in 1880. Educated at Ives Seminary and Battle Creek College, he had a keen interest in biblical studies, although previous to his conversion he had tendencies to agnosticism. During 1882—1883, as an assistant to Uriah Smith, who then was editor of the Review and Herald, he gained experience for his future work. In 1884 he was appointed the first editor of the Present Truth, published in Grimsby, England. Three years later he returned to the United States as assistant editor of the Signs of the Times, and then for a quarter of a century was editor in chief. From 1913 to 1933 he was book editor of the Pacific Press, with the exception of a year's leave of absence (1918) to act as dean of theology at the College of Medical Evangelists.

At various times he was pastor of the Oakland and Mountain View churches, edited the Pacific Health Journal, wrote numerous denominational tracts, and such books as The Lord's Day the Test of the Ages, Studies in Romans, Studies in Ephesians, and Questions and Answers, a collection of answers to questions appearing in the Signs of the Times.

Wildwood Sanitarium and Institute

WILDWOOD SANITARIUM AND INSTITUTE. See Madison Institutions.

Wiles, Alma

WILES, ALMA (1894—1980). Nurse, missionary. The daughter of American missionaries to the South Pacific, Alma Butz sailed with her parents on the Pitcairn. She met and married Norman Wiles at Australian Missionary College (now Avondale College), where he was studying for the ministry. Upon graduation, Alma and Norman responded to a call to work for the cannibal tribe of the Big Nambus in the New Hebrides. Five years after commencing work there, Norman died of blackwater fever (1920) and Alma had to personally dig his grave and bury her husband. Later she returned to America and trained as a nurse. Taking up mission service in New Guinea, she helped open new work in Aroma in 1934.

At the age of 66 she went to Nigeria, where she was in charge of the nurse's training program in midwifery at Ile-Ife. She then returned to the United States and worked at Glendale Hospital until she retired.

Wilfart, Ricardo José

WILFART, RICARDO JOSÉ (1878—1944). Minister, evangelist, and administrator in Brazil. He was born at Roubaix, France, of Belgian parents, and received his education, which extended into college, in France. In his youth he came to Brazil, where in 1904 he married Jeredyl Batista de Carvalho. In 1908 he accepted Seventh-day Adventist beliefs and was baptized. In 1910 he entered denominational service and for three and a half years worked as a Bible instructor in the Rio-Espírito Santo Mission. After his ordination in January of 1914, he worked in the East Brazil mission, becoming the first superintendent of the Pernambuco Mission in 1916.

Afterward he was superintendent of the East Minas Mission (SDA Yearbook [1920]), and of the Rio de Janeiro Mission (ibid. [1921—1925, 1931]), evangelist in the Rio de Janeiro Mission (ibid. [1926—1928, 1930]), in the East Brazil Union Mission, 1942—1943, evangelist and pastor in the São Paulo Conference (ibid. [1932—1936]) and in the Rio Grande do Sul Conference (ibid. [1937—1940]). Late in life he held credentials in the Rio Minas Gerais Mission, and was a pioneer in the organization of the Voice of Prophecy in Brazil.

Wilkinson, Benjamin George

WILKINSON, BENJAMIN GEORGE (1872—1968). Dean, administrator, evangelist, author. Wilkinson was born in Canada and began to study for the ministry at Battle Creek College in 1891. The following year he worked in evangelism in Wisconsin. He received his B.A. degree from the University of Michigan in 1897 and that same year became dean of theology at Battle Creek College. The following year he became president of the Canadian Conference and in 1899 he was asked to serve as dean of theology at Union College. He served for four years as president of the Latin Conference, which later became the Southern European Division. During this time he started the work in Rome, Paris, and in Spain.

Returning to the United States, he held evangelistic meetings in large cities of the Columbia Union, including Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Washington, D.C., and Charleston, West Virginia. He also served as dean of theology at Washington Missionary College for five years. In 1908 he received his doctoral degree from George Washington University and the following year became president of Columbia Union Conference, where he served for 10 years. In 1920 he accepted the presidency of the Kansas Conference. He then served for a short time as temporary mission superintendent in Haiti. After a time as president of the East Pennsylvania Conference he gave 24 consecutive years of service to Washington Missionary College, serving as president from 1936 to 1946. He is the author of Truth Triumphant and Our Authorized Bible Vindicated. He retired from active work after 56 years of service.

Will

WILL. See Free Will.

Williams, Alfred H.

WILLIAMS, ALFRED H. (1889—1974). Physician, missionary, administrator. He was baptized in the Far East in 1910 and that year married Mabel Blanche Donaldson. After working as a literature evangelist, he served in southern Burma and was ordained to the gospel ministry in 1915. Five years later he became treasurer of the Southern Asia Division and in 1926 was elected president of the Northwest India Union. In 1934 he returned to his homeland, England, to study medicine, from which course he graduated in 1940. His wife died in 1933, and in 1935 he married Iris White. He practiced his profession until retirement in 1961. During this time he served as medical director of the Stanborough medical institution, often serving without salary as he built up the hospital after World War II.

Williams, Flora Harriet (Lampson)

WILLIAMS, FLORA HARRIET (LAMPSON) (1865—1944). Leader in teacher and parent education. An early student at Battle Creek College, she began teaching in public schools, but in 1890 returned for further specific training for teaching in Seventh-day Adventist schools. In 1892 she became a church school teacher at Battle Creek. In 1894 she took charge of the elementary school at Keene Academy and in 1897 became responsible for the newly inaugurated normal program there. In 1903 she returned to Battle Creek and taught in the junior academy. From 1910 to 1916 she was educational superintendent and Missionary Volunteer and Sabbath school secretary of the West Michigan Conference, and from 1916 to 1921 served as educational superintendent of the East Michigan Conference. Afterward she was assistant secretary of the General Conference Department of Education, editor of the Home and School magazine (1930—1938), and assistant secretary of the Home Commission. She retired in 1941 after 20 years of leadership in parent- and teacher-education work at SDA headquarters. She was a contributor to SDA periodicals, mainly on the subject of child education, and was author of the book You and Your Child.

Williams, Will Herbert

WILLIAMS, WILL HERBERT (1880—1961). First treasurer of the South American Division. He began his education at Battle Creek College and completed it at Emmanuel Missionary College in 1904. Entering denominational service, he was treasurer and business manager of Oakwood College (1905—1911), secretary-treasurer of the Southeastern Union Conference (1911—1916), treasurer of the South American Division (1916—1928), secretary-treasurer of the Southern California Conference (1929—1930), and undertreasurer of the General Conference (1930—1956). He was married twice, first in 1904 to Anna Keesling, and after her death in 1944 to Arabella Moore in 1949.

Williamsdale Academy

WILLIAMSDALE ACADEMY. See Maritime Academy.

Willis, Winifred

WILLIS, WINIFRED (1903—1973). Teacher. She was born in London and at the age of 11 was baptized with her mother and sisters. After graduating from Stanborough College in 1923, she began a lifetime of teaching in several English schools, successfully completing 41 years of service to Seventh-day Adventist children in England.

Willowdene High School

WILLOWDENE HIGH SCHOOL. A coeducational day institution on the senior high school level situated on four acres (1.5 hectares) of land at 58 Brunswick Avenue, Spanish Town, Jamaica, West Indies, operated by the Central Jamaica Conference. The school began operating in 1965. It was named after the original Willowdene School, the first mission school founded by the Seventh-day Adventists in Jamaica. The original school was relocated to Mandeville as West Indian Training College.

Willowdene High School began with a preparatory department (grades 1—6), and a high school department. In 1986 a kindergarten department was added, and an evening institute in 1991.

The curriculum includes courses leading to the Caribbean Examination Council examination (CXC) and the Cambridge General Certificate of Education examination (GCE), in religious education, English language and literature, Spanish, mathematics, business education, secretarial studies, the social sciences, the natural sciences, and the applied arts. Auto mechanics was added in 1991.

In 1993 the enrollment was 440 students, with an academic staff of 22. The school is recognized by the Ministry of Education, Jamaica, and is fully accredited by the Board of Regents, General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists. In 1993 ground was broken for a new preparatory department building.

Principals: L. Carter, 1964—1965; S. Cole, 1965—1966; Z. Reid, 1967—1969; Mrs. I. Henry, 1969—1972; J. Wesley, 1972—1975; C. Francis, 1975—1976; H. Cameron, 1976—1978; D. Kennedy, 1978—1979; S. Beckford, 1979—1980; Mrs. G. Davis-Roberts, 1981—1985; W. H. Gunter, 1985—1986; Mrs. L. Gray, 1986—1989; Mrs. S. Gayle, 1990— .

Wills, Charitable Gift Annuities, Trusts, Life Income and Other Charitable Agreements

WILLS, CHARITABLE GIFT ANNUITIES, TRUSTS, LIFE INCOME AND OTHER CHARITABLE AGREEMENTS. Trust Services of the church (see Trust Services) utilizes these special methods to help members most effectively remember the Lord's work in their accumulated assets and estate plans. Trust Services personnel offer qualified counsel in any of these special methods. They are also happy to work with the members' own professional advisers. The local requirements of each jurisdiction must be carefully considered.

The Christian's goals might be summarized as (1) to serve Jesus with heart and life, (2) to provide for the necessities of loved ones, and (3) to support the outreach of the church to the larger family of God on earth.

The following legal methods are useful vehicles to accomplish these goals even in death.

Wills

Wills. The right to make a will is almost universally recognized. However, each country and jurisdiction will determine what assets may be disposed of by a will and how freely one can name the church as a beneficiary. Most countries allow gifts to the church. In the event a person chooses not to make a will or neglects to make one, local law provides how their assets will be distributed. However, these arbitrary rules of distribution do not make allowance for unique family needs or any gift of gratitude for the Lord's work. A will can provide more adequately for one's spouse and children, provide for nominating the guardian of minor children, allow for gifts to the church, and nominate the person to be in charge of all estate assets.

The preparation, execution, and safekeeping of wills are very important. Legal advice should always be obtained to ensure as far as possible that one's own desires will be carried out.

Charitable Gift Annuities

Charitable Gift Annuities. Charitable gift annuities have been discovered that go back into the late 1800s signed by John H. Kellogg, as president of the International Medical Missionary and Benevolent Association. The General Conference officially endorsed this plan in the early 1900s.

Charitable gift annuities involve a transfer of cash or other property to a conference or other church organizations. In return, the donor receives by contract a specified amount paid usually quarterly during his or her lifetime. In the United States the rates paid are the most recent rates adopted by the Committee on Gift Annuities. This is an organization represented by major charities. In the United States one may get a tax deduction for federal income tax purposes, based on the present value of the amount that ultimately is to pass to the church. In addition, part of the estimated payment for the annuitant's life expectancy may be excluded from taxation.

Trusts

Trusts. There are two basic types of trusts: revocable and irrevocable. In both types of trusts, the church has, in the proper situations, served as trustee. This may be done where allowable by local law and where the church will substantially benefit. The cash or property must be delivered to the trustee. The terms written into the trust agreement concern how the trust will be managed, as well as when final distribution will be made. This arrangement will normally avoid the expense and delay of court-supervised administration, as required through the probate of a will.

1. Revocable trusts allow the grantor (church member) to withdraw any or all assets as well as to have full enjoyment of the property during his or her lifetime. At death the assets can flow efficiently to the beneficiaries, including the church, saving probate and administrative costs.

2. Irrevocable trusts cannot generally be changed or revoked after they have been set up.

In the United States, charitable remainder unitrusts and charitable remainder annuity trusts have special tax advantages. Although the principal placed in these trusts cannot be withdrawn, the donors receive a payment. Donors may choose payment for life, or a term up to 20 years, with the payout based on the agreed rate of return, as it relates to the assets of the trust valued each year. The annuity trust payout never varies as long as there are assets in the trust. There is a partial federal income tax deduction for the gift that is deemed to pass ultimately to the church on the death of the donor. An efficient set up also avoids capital gains tax.

Life Income and Other Charitable Agreements

Life Income and Other Charitable Agreements. The General Conference operates a "pooled income fund," which receives the contributions of multiple donors. It is a qualified trust under United States tax law, so donors may receive charitable income tax contribution deduction. The donors cannot withdraw what they contributed to the fund, but receive all the income generated by their contribution during their lifetime. Donors also may designate any Seventh-day Adventist organization to receive the principal amount of their contribution in the fund at the time of their death.

There are also other agreements used effectively through Trust Services for members to remember the church by giving accumulated assets either during life or at death. Special study is now being given to what agreements can be used most effectively in the emerging countries of the world.

Wilson, Jan J.

WILSON, JAN J. (c. 1883—1939). Minister and church leader in the USSR. He was a Latvian by nationality, and after training at Friedensau Missionary Seminary began to preach in Riga, Latvia, in 1910. Later he preached in western Russia, and was president of the Siberian Union (1922—1924), the South Russian Union (1925—1928), and Northeastern Union (1929). In 1928, with H. J. Loeb sack and I. A. L'vov, he attended a session of the European Division, the only instance in the past 50 years when SDA ministers from the Soviet Union were present at church councils outside the country. He was arrested many times throughout his lifetime because of his evangelistic work. In 1939 he was arrested and sent to the northlands, where he died the same year.

Wilson, Lin How Theresa

WILSON, LIN HOW THERESA (1936—1993). Conference and division worker. Born in Trinidad, she was baptized into the Seventh-day Adventist Church during an evangelistic series conducted by George W. Brown in 1951 while he was a senior ministerial student. She attended Caribbean Union College, Union College, and Howard University. For most of her adult life, she worked at the South Caribbean Conference, the Guyana Mission, the Caribbean Union Conference, and the Inter-American Division headquarters, where she efficiently served as cashier and accountant for more than 16 years.

Wilson, Lydia Amelia (Amy)

WILSON, LYDIA AMELIA (AMY) (1893—1977). Conference worker. Born into a devout Christian home in Toronto, Ontario, Canada, the daughter of George and Ann Frank, she early attended the Disciples of Christ Church. As the result of contacts by two colporteurs, Mrs. Frank became a Seventh-day Adventist when Amy was 6. Her father opposed this, and the child was not free to attend Sabbath services. At the age of 14 she was baptized without her father's knowledge, and although he ceased to oppose openly, it was a great disappointment to him.

She attended Lornedale Academy in Ontario, Mount Vernon Academy in Ohio, and Oshawa Missionary College. She entered the employ of the church in 1917, serving as secretary-treasurer of the Maritime Conference. She also directed the Sabbath school work in the conference and wrote every colporteur a letter of encouragement each week. She spoke in churches, encouraging new members and helping to locate interested people.

In 1924 she was elected secretary-treasurer of the Eastern Canadian Union Conference with headquarters at Oshawa. In 1929 she married Joseph T. Wilson. She continued to work on a part-time basis and taught shorthand and served as bookkeeper at Oshawa Missionary College. In 1935 the family moved to British Columbia, where Amy was widowed in 1937. She was offered work in many places, but determined to stay at home with her two children. During this time she began a small church in her house, where attendance grew to about 40. Her home was always open to summer colporteurs, and several made it their headquarters.

As her children grew, Amy moved them near Auburn Academy, where she served as accountant. In 1951 she accepted a call to serve as a secretary-bookkeeper at La Sierra College, a position she filled until her retirement.

Wilson, Nathaniel Carter

WILSON, NATHANIEL CARTER (1897—1992). Teacher, pastor, missionary, administrator. He was born in Northern California, the third of four sons born to immigrant parents from northern Ireland. His father was an engineer, farmer, and businessman in Healdsburg, where as a middle-aged man he accepted Christ as his Lord and Saviour and joined the Seventh-day Adventist Church through the ministry of Ellen White. Wilson became the first elder of the Healdsburg church, where Pacific Union College was located before it was moved to Angwin on Howell Mountain in 1909.

Wilson graduated from Lodi Academy and Pacific Union College. He was married to Hannah Myrtle Wallin of Minnesota in 1919. He was ordained as a minister of the gospel in Nashville, Tennessee, in 1925 and served for nearly 50 years in the North American Division, the Southern Africa Division, the Southern Asia Division, the Australasian Division (now South Pacific Division), and the Far Eastern Division.

He began his ministry as Bible teacher at Madison College and was then president of a number of local conferences, union conferences, and world divisions, as well as serving as vice president of the General Conference for the North American Division.

His early experience in self-supporting institutions led him to the conviction that such centers should remain solidly anchored to the church. As a result, while he was vice president of the General Conference he, with several others, led out in establishing the Association of Self-Supporting Institutions (ASI) in 1947. This organization has grown and developed into a positive source and strength to the church, known today as Adventist-Laymen's Services and Industries.

During Wilson's leadership in the Southern Asia Division, Spicer College was located at its present site. After retirement Pastor and Mrs. Wilson completed their ministry pastoring for more than 10 years in California.

Windward Islands

WINDWARD ISLANDS. See Inter-American Division; Leeward and Windward Islands.

Winner, The

WINNER, THE (1958— ; monthly, except June, July, and August; published by the Health Connection; file in editorial office). A 16-page periodical for use in elementary schools, homes, and youth groups, and by Sabbath school teachers, intended to establish in the mind of fourth and fifth graders right principles regarding the use of tobacco, alcohol, and drugs. Using a story format, it presents scientific facts as to the effect of these habits on the human body and upon one's health. The magazine makes narcotics education fun through the use of games, puzzles, and other activities. It seeks to help the child to develop social and coping skills to deal with those problems that might make him or her vulnerable to drug use. The Winner Mailbox Page gives students an opportunity to express their original ideas.

Editors: James V. Scully, 1958—1966; Francis A. Soper, 1967—1974; Gilbert J. Bertochini, 1975—1979; Patricia Horning, 1979—1980; Sherrie Thomas, 1980—1986; Barbara Wetherell, 1986—1990; Gerald Wheeler, 1990— .

Winning, Evabelle R.

WINNING, EVABELLE R. (1903—1992). Dean of women. Born near Healdsburg, California, during the Great Depression, she was offered a full-time position with a large company that would have required her to work on Sabbath. She told her boss that if arrangements could not be made for her to have Sabbaths off, she would leave for college the following week. Thinking she was bluffing, he let the matter ride, and she left for Pacific Union College. She was 30 years old.

During the next four years she worked as an assistant to the dean of women, finished her last two years of high school, and completed a two-year secretarial program for which she received an associate degree in 1937.

From 1937 to 1940 she completed a bachelor's degree while continuing as assistant dean, a position that she continued after graduation. She became dean of women at the request of the board of trustees in 1943. As she served in this position for the next 25 years, she saw the enrollment more than double. She helped plan and supervise the building of two women's residence halls and took special interest in the building of the new women's chapel, Dauphinee Chapel.

For many of her deaning years Miss Winning lived in a room in Graf Hall, often sharing it with a student.

She retired in 1968. In 1971, when the college built a five-story addition to Dauphinee Hall, the entire structure was named in her honor.

Winter, Robert

WINTER, ROBERT (c. 1817—1909). An Englishman, Primitive Methodist minister, and Millerite preacher. He embraced Miller's message in America in the spring of 1842. In the autumn he returned to England and, with Frederick Gunner and others, developed a Millerite extension movement in Britain and edited the Second Advent Harbinger in Bristol. In his old age, in America again, he came in contact with Seventh-day Adventists and accepted the Sabbath.

Wintzen, Joseph

WINTZEN, JOSEPH (1874—1949). Pioneer worker in the Netherlands and conference leader in Germany. He was born in the Rhineland, Germany, was converted at the age of 18, and baptized in 1892. He began his service to the Seventh-day Adventist Church in 1896 and worked in Germany and Holland. In 1907 he was ordained at The Hague. Beginning in 1916, he was president of several conferences. After that he served as home missionary secretary of the East German Union and in 1922 undertook the leadership of the SDA work in the Netherlands. Four years later he was elected president of the West German Union. While holding this position, he made an inspection tour of the then Dutch East Indies missions at the request of the European Division. In 1930 he returned to the Netherlands, where he worked until 1942, thereby concluding 46 years of denominational service.

Winyah Lake Academy

WINYAH LAKE ACADEMY. See Forest Lake Academy.

Wisconsin

WISCONSIN. See Lake Region Conference; Wisconsin Conference.

Wisconsin Academy

WISCONSIN ACADEMY. A coeducational boarding school on the senior high school level, operated by the Wisconsin Conference near Columbus, Wisconsin. This school developed from Bethel Academy, founded in 1899 at Arpin on a 200-acre (80-hectare) site donated by a lumber company in return for the conference's selling for the company an 800-acre (320-hectare) tract of land. The school opened in a tent, and the first classes were taught by Jennie Snow, daughter of T. B. Snow, a member of the conference committee and the first man to settle on the site.

In the summer of 1899 a large T-shaped building was erected, and the school was named Woodland Industrial School, later (1901), Bethel Industrial Academy. The first faculty included J. E. Tenney, principal; R. T. Dowsett, business manager; Parker Smith, preceptor; Clara Meilicke, matron; and Mrs. Parker Smith, preceptress. The school had more than 200 students in 1902—1903. In 1904 Arthur Hallock became principal, and Dr. Cora Richards was school physician. The academy at this time offered 10 grades.

After the main building burned in 1907, a new administration building and dormitories were erected. Bethel became a 12-grade school in 1914, graduating its first class in 1918. A member of this class was A. G. Parfitt, a missionary to Mexico.

By 1942 Bethel Academy needed a new boys' dormitory, improvements on the administration building, better industrial opportunities, and an adequate water supply. A plan was devised for raising-funds, but, when the advisability of improving the old plant was questioned, fund-raising was postponed until a study could be made of the future educational needs of the Wisconsin Conference.

When in May 1943 the special commission on education reported that the improvement of the plant at Bethel would not be adequate, the constituency voted that a more favorable location for the school should be investigated. Subsequently, on Oct. 13, 1943, near Columbus, Wisconsin, 540 acres (220 hectares) of land were purchased for a new school site. T. E. Unruh was serving as conference president when the foundations for the new school were laid.

In June 1944 W. H. Wohlers began operating the school farm, which was well equipped with modern barns and other buildings at the time of purchase, and immediate steps were taken for the purchase of a dairy herd. In 1945 the School Service Bindery opened under the supervision of Glenn Curry, and construction on the girls' dormitory was begun. Upon the completion of a power plant and the girls' dormitory, the school, renamed Wisconsin Academy, opened on Sept. 5, 1949, with Harold F. Lease as principal and manager. At first the one dormitory housed the girls in one wing and the boys in the other, also the library, administrative offices, and two classrooms. Two classrooms were provided in the powerhouse and one in a nearby farmhouse. An old red barn behind the girls' dormitory served as a storage place.

By September 1952 one wing of the boys' dormitory was ready for use. Between 1954 and 1960 a gymnasium, a second wing for the boys' dormitory, and two faculty homes were built.

In October 1953 the Wisconsin Craft Shop was set up under academy ownership in Fall River. In 1960 it was transferred to new buildings on the campus, and on Sept. 1, 1962, it was taken over by Harris Pine Mills. This industry provided excellent work opportunities for the students until it was closed in 1986.

In 1960 the construction of a new administration building was begun. During the summer of 1965 work was begun on the wing, including the offices of administration.

In 1965 another wing of the administration housing administrative offices, two classrooms, and temporary library quarters was constructed.

In 1968 an addition was made to the girls' dormitory providing housing for 42 girls. In 1971 the large Bible classroom in the east wing of the girls' dormitory was converted into a dean's residence.

In 1970 the Dakota Bake-N-Serv, a frozen bread industry, began construction of a plant; operation with employment of approximately 30 students began in March of 1971. In 1975 an additional 7,000 square feet (650 square meters) of storage area was built. The industry now employs about 50 students. In March 1974 the Columbus Bindery service, operated by the academy since 1945 terminated its operation because of inflation and restrictive student labor laws. The facility has been completely remodeled and now serves as an industrial arts-art classroom facility.

Other work opportunities were added in the late 1980s, including literature evangelism work and a school greenhouse industry. Renovations to the chapel and the school cafeteria's dining room were completed in the summer of 1993.

Principals—Bethel Academy: J. E. Tenney, 1899—1901; H. A. Washburn, 1901—1904; Arthur W. Hallock, 1904—1907; A. W. Spalding, 1907—1909; C. L. Stone, 1909—1912; E. E. Gardner, 1912—1913; W. E. Straw, 1913—1914; H. T. Elliott, 1914—1920; B. H. Phipps, 1920—1924; J. G. Lamson, 1924—1925; Philip Schank, 1925—1928; T. S. Copeland, 1928—1931; G. H. Straight, 1931—1934; G. H. Simpson, 1934—1938; A. H. Parker, 1938—1942; V. C. Hoffman, 1942—1945; Kenneth Day, 1945—1948; H. F. Lease, 1948—1949.

Wisconsin Academy: Harold F. Lease, 1949—1950; E. L. Gammon, 1950—1954; F. W. Bieber, 1954—1960; F. R. Stephan, 1960—1966; Stephen Yost, 1966—1968; Robert E. Knutson, 1968—1976; Mildred Summerton, 1976—1983; David S. Penner, 1983—1988; Arthur L. Nelson, 1988—1989; Richard S. Serns, 1989—1992; Steven Brown, 1992— .

Wisconsin Conference

WISCONSIN CONFERENCE. A unit of church organization comprising the territory of the state of Wisconsin. (See also Lake Region Conference.) Statistics (1992): churches, 75; members, 5,878; church schools, 20; ordained ministers, 22; licensed ministers, 6; teachers, 32. Headquarters: 3505 North Highway 151, Madison, Wisconsin. The conference forms part of the Lake Union Conference.

Institutions

Institutions. Wisconsin Academy.

Local churches: Adams (Adams-Friendship), Almond, Altoona (Eau Claire), Antigo, Arpin (Bethel), Ashland, Baraboo, Beaver Dam, Beloit, Black River Falls (Alma Center), Cambridge (Fort Atkinson), Chippewa Falls, Clear Lake, Columbus (Wisconsin Academy), Crandon, Delavan, Durand, Eagle River (Clearwater Lake), Evansville, Fish Creek, Fort Atkinson (Oakland), Franksville (Raymond), Frederic, Gillett, Green Bay, Hayward, Janesville, Kenosha, LaCrosse, Ladysmith, Lancaster, Lena, Madison (Madison, Madison Community), Marshfield, Menomonie, Merrill, Milton, Milwaukee (Central Spanish, North Spanish, Northwest, Southeast Spanish), Minocqua (Lakeland), Mosinee (Moon), Neenah (Fox Valley), New Berlin (Waukesha Community), New London, Oak Creek (Franklin), Oconto, Oxford, Phillips (Prentice), Portage, Pound, Poy Sippi, Prairie du Chien, Racine (Racine, Spanish), Reedsburg, Rhinelander, Rice Lake, Richland Center, Rockland (Hylandale), Showano, Sheboygan, Sparta, Spooner, Stevens Point, Sturgeon Bay, Superior, Tomah, Watertown, Wausau, Wautoma, Wisconsin Rapids.

Companies: Ettrick (Galesville-Ettrick), Hartland (Lake Country), Wittenberg.

History

History. Beginnings of the Work in the Area. The Seventh-day Adventist message was introduced into Wisconsin by H. S. Case of Jackson, Michigan, who in the spring of 1851 visited the southern and western sections of Wisconsin. Here he won Waterman Phelps, who, fired with enthusiasm, traveled constantly, preaching throughout a large part of the state. In December 1851 J. H. Waggoner, a newspaper editor and publisher at Baraboo who later became a leading Seventh-day Adventist preacher and writer, was converted. Others who preached in Wisconsin in those early years were D. P. Hall, J. M. Stephenson, Isaac Sanborn, W. S. Ingraham, and T. M. Steward.

In June 1852 Phelps reported a well-attended conference at Middleton; in July Joseph Bates visited a conference at Albion in the Seventh Day Baptist church and preached in an adjacent grove to a crowd estimated at 400. Case, Phelps, and Waggoner were present. Phelps's travels carried him to Beloit, Janesville, Spring Valley, Union, Albion, Christiana, Koskonong, Madison, and Packwaukee. Also mentioned in the Review and Herald reports of that period were the following towns: Metomen, Markesan, Hebron, Berlin, Ripon, Rosendale, Milton, and Fort Atkinson. Waggoner reported that at Eldorado the interest of the people was so great that threshing was stopped on the Sabbath so that people could attend his meetings. He baptized 22 there, and many others were interested.

Tent work in Wisconsin was begun in the summer of 1855 by Stephenson and Hall at Fort Atkinson. However, these two men, new converts, had become fascinated with the distinctly non-Adventist doctrine of the millennium known then as the Age-to-Come view, and were combining it with their preaching. Before they finally renounced the Adventist teachings and preached their opposing doctrine exclusively, they visited most of the Adventist companies in the state and persuaded many to accept this doctrine. To counteract their influence, James White visited Wisconsin in 1854, and in 1856 Bates made a speaking tour of the state. By 1858 the Review and Herald stated that the effect of the erroneous doctrines was “waning.”

Before the Development of Church Organization. From 1851 to 1860 there were many groups of Seventh-day Adventists scattered throughout Wisconsin. By 1852, adherents or interested people were mentioned in Beloit, Janesville, Spring Valley, Union, Albion, Christiana, Koskonong, Madison, Packwaukee, Metomen, Markesan, Hebron, Milton, Alden, and Fort Atkinson. In 1853 groups were mentioned at Rosendale, Eldorado, Metomen, Oak Hill, Packwaukee, Ripon, and Waukau. Aztalon is mentioned in 1854, Adario, Avon, Berlin, Columbia, and Rubicon in 1858, and Cascade in 1859.

Avon was the first church organized in Wisconsin, according to an article in the Review and Herald in 1872 by I. Sanborn, who had held meetings there in 1858 and had won 12 or 15 converts. He gives no organization date, but it must have been by 1859, since he mentions the formation of church organizations at Mackford in December 1859, and at Rubicon about Jan. 1, 1860. Other churches organized in 1860 were Hundred Mile Grove, Lynxville, Little Prairie, Marquette, and Lodi. There is mention of churches existing in 1860 in Fort Winnebago, Horicon, and Marcellon.

In April 1860 conferences were held at Cadiz and Mackford in southern and northern Wisconsin, respectively. Ingraham, Phelps, Sanborn, Allen, and Steward were present at the latter meeting, but the Whites, who had planned to be present, could not attend. The conferences approved sending the old evangelistic tent to Minnesota and purchasing a new one for use in Wisconsin. The new 50-foot (15-meter) tent was procured for them by James White for $185.

On Sept. 13—15, 1861, a conference of members from Illinois and southern Wisconsin (with delegates from northern Wisconsin also) convened at Avon, with J. N. Loughborough as chairman and W. S. Ingraham as secretary. At this meeting, the largest yet held in Wisconsin, it was voted to approve the suggestion for church and conference organization made at Battle Creek in 1861. It was resolved that all preachers should carry papers, or credentials, and spend sufficient time with the new churches to be sure they were firmly established. A sum of $400 was voted for the operation of the tent for the summer.

Illinois and Wisconsin Conference Organized. The conference convened again Sept. 27—28, 1862, at Avon, Wisconsin, with Ingraham as chairman and Joseph G. Wood, secretary. The following Wisconsin churches were listed as represented by delegates: Hundred Mile Grove, Marquette, Mackford, Rubicon, Oakland, Little Prairie, Franklin, and Avon. Four hundred dollars was again voted for tent operation.

The churches there represented formed themselves into the “S. D. Adventist Illinois and Wisconsin State Conference, composed of ministers and delegates from the several churches,” and voted “that each approved messenger [minister] be furnished with a letter of commendation from this conference, to be renewed annually” (Review and Herald 20:155, Oct. 14, 1862).

In 1863 the Illinois-Wisconsin State Conference announced its first election of officers. Isaac Sanborn was named president; William S. Ingraham, vice president; T. M. Steward, secretary; and Ivory Colcord, treasurer. At this meeting, the conference reorganized and adopted the constitution recommended by the General Conference. There were then 390 members in the state, and systematic benevolence amounted to $1,520.20.

Most of the members in Wisconsin were happy for church organization, but some thought it was leading the church into Babylon, among them Waterman Phelps, the first convert and an indefatigable worker. Unreconciled to organization, he withdrew from the church. Opposition had also come from a fanatical group mentioned in the Nov. 13, 1860, issue of the Review and Herald. James White there reports encountering a group at Mauston who taught an extreme view of consecration, which he thought bordered on fanaticism. At times all prayed aloud at once. A woman interrupted one of White’s sermons claiming that there were prophets among them and that organization was Babylon. Steward came under censure of the leading ministers for some time because of his lack of firmness in dealing with this fanaticism. However, on later expressing his regret for his position in the matter, he was restored to his former esteem.

In 1863 John G. Matteson, a Baptist preacher, learned of the SDA teachings from P. H. Cady. After a few months’ study he came into the church, and with him most of his Baptist members. A powerful preacher and writer, he began working among the numerous Danes and Norwegians settled in Wisconsin. He translated many tracts and articles and began publishing the Advent Tidende, a monthly journal in the Danish language. In 1877 he went to Denmark and Norway, where he wrote and preached constantly, and established a publishing house in Oslo.

In 1865 James and Ellen White visited Wisconsin, holding meetings and counseling the churches. They were pleased with the progress of the cause.

In 1867 Isaac Sanborn, reporting from Cassville, said that one evening a mob had thrown stones through the windows and a revolver had been fired. One woman was slightly injured. Sanborn waited until the excitement subsided, then, after a hymn and a prayer, finished his sermon. He baptized 23 there. The next year he reported the erection of a $2,000 church building at Cassville. He himself helped, laying stone, hewing, framing, and planing timbers, putting on siding, and painting most of the structure. He worked 34 days, 10 hours a day. This, he said, demonstrated how proper eating and drinking fitted one for hard labor, for he ate no meat and had only two meals a day. He organized a church of 42 members there, and left a list of 50 or 60 to join later.

The Wisconsin Conference. In 1870, at its seventh annual session, the Illinois-Wisconsin Conference was divided. The new Wisconsin Conference elected Isaac Sanborn president, N. M. Jordan secretary, and Alexander Paton treasurer. At the conference of June 1880 the 54 churches of Wisconsin were divided into 10 districts with a minister in charge of each.

Until this time the work had been concentrated in the small towns and rural areas, but in 1886 the Review and Herald reported a few believers in Milwaukee. In early 1889 L. R. Conradi conducted a German training institute in that city. The 50 students who attended spent the mornings studying, the afternoons selling publications, and the evenings preaching.

D. T. Bourdeau worked among the French and Belgians at Fort Howard and Green Bay, to be followed by a layman, Napoleon Paquette. In 1922 an Italian church was established in Milwaukee. In 1899, near Arpin, the conference opened the school later known as Bethel Academy, succeeded in 1949 by the Wisconsin Academy, at Columbus. In 1901 the Oneida church with 25 members was organized on an Indian reservation. In 1913 the church building was moved from government land and rebuilt. A school for Indian children was conducted in conjunction with this church.

In 1902 the Wisconsin Medical Missionary and Benevolent Association was organized, and the Madison Sanitarium was built in the state capital. This health center was sold to private owners in 1922.

North and South Wisconsin Conferences. In June 1916 the state territory was divided. The North Wisconsin Conference, with J. J. Irwin as president, included eight northwestern Michigan counties. Offices were established in Ashland, Wisconsin. Walderly Academy, hitherto (since 1907) privately owned, became the conference boarding school. The South Wisconsin Conference, with P. A. Hanson as president, had offices temporarily in Grand Rapids, since August 1916, in Fond du Lac. Bethel Academy served as the boarding school for the South Wisconsin Conference. A third boarding school, Clearwater Lake Academy, served the state from 1906 to 1916, when it changed to a church school status.

Wisconsin Conference Recombined. In 1927 the northern and southern conferences were combined, with E. H. Oswald as president. At the same time the Michigan counties reverted to the North Michigan Conference. The Walderly school property was sold and Bethel Academy became the boarding school.

In 1928 there were 98 churches, 3,101 members, 12 ordained ministers, seven licentiates, and two Bible instructors. Under a succession of strong leaders, the Wisconsin Conference progressed steadily thereafter. A permanent campground was established near Westfield, and a full program of youth camps is maintained. The conference office opened at its present location on Dec. 27, 1976. It is situated on a 25-acre (10-hectare) site on the outskirts of Madison.

Presidents—Illinois-Wisconsin Conference: W. S. Ingraham, 1862—1863; Isaac Sanborn, 1863—1867; R. F. Andrews, 1867—1869; C. W. Olds, 1869—1870; Wisconsin Conference: Isaac Sanborn, 1870—1873; P. S. Thurston, 1873—1874; O. A. Olsen, 1874—1876; H. W. Decker, 1876—1880; O. A. Olsen, 1880—1881; H. D. Decker, 1881—1885; A. J. Breed, 1885—1890; M. H. Brown, 1890—1893; R. A. Underwood, 1893; H. R. Johnson, 1893—1894; O. A. Johnson, 1894—1896; William Covert, 1896—1900; W. S. Shreve, 1900—1901; William Covert, 1901—1905; C. McReynolds, 1905—1910; W. H. Thurston, 1910—1915; P. A. Hanson, 1915—1916; North Wisconsin Conference: J. J. Irwin, 1916—1926; William A. Butler, 1926—1927; South Wisconsin Conference: P. A. Hanson, 1916—1917; C. S. Wiest, 1917—1919; E. A. Bristol, 1919—1920; I. J. Woodman, 1920—1925; B. J. White, 1925—1927; Wisconsin Conference (reunited): E. H. Oswald, 1928—1932; V. E. Peugh, 1932—1937; W. H. Holden, 1937—1940; T. E. Unruh, 1940—1947; F. W. Schnepfer, 1947—1949; Howard J. Capman, 1949—1954; C. M. Bunker, 1954—1957; R. E. Finney, Jr., 1957—1969; K. J. Mittleider, 1969—1975; R. L. Dale, 1975—1981; James Hayward, 1981—1985; Jere Wallack, 1985—1989; Arnold Swanson, 1989— .

Witzke, Emil Charles

WITZKE, EMIL CHARLES (1873—1926). Educator. He was born of a Lutheran family, and attended Lutheran church school and later Concordia College, Milwaukee, Wisconsin (1890—1894), in preparation for the ministry, but was unable to finish his course because his father became ill. Through reading Ellen White's Great Controversy, he became interested in, and joined, the Seventh-day Adventist Church in 1904. He spent some time as a colporteur and also helped with tent evangelism.

In 1906 he joined the faculty of Union College as teacher of modern and ancient languages. While there he took advanced work at Nebraska and Central universities graduating with a degree of Doctor of Philosophy from the latter school. When Clinton German Seminary was opened in 1910, he headed its Department of Ancient Languages. In the course of the 11 years he spent there he served also as its principal and business manager.

In 1921 he received a call to direct the new SDA school at Neandertal, Germany. After two years there, he went to the Friedensau Missionary Seminary to teach ancient languages, history, and philosophy. Because of failing health, he returned to the United States in 1925 and accepted a call to teach in the Language Department of Broadview College. He was unable to complete the first year and died soon afterward.

Woitkiewicz, Ludwig L.

WOITKIEWICZ, LUDWIG L. (1891—1941). Minister and church leader in the USSR. He was born in Riga, Latvia, and was baptized into the Seventh-day Adventist Church in 1909 by J. T. Boettcher. He joined the staff of the International Tract Society's office in Riga and continued there until World War I, when he became secretary-treasurer of the All-Russian Union, with headquarters at Saratov, on the Volga River. He was ordained to the ministry in 1923, and later served as a minister in Moscow and in Petropavlovsk, in Siberia. In the 1925 Yearbook he is listed as president of the West Siberian Conference; in 1927 and 1928, as president of the North Russia Union, with headquarters in Leningrad; and in 1929 as president of the North Russian Conference. Afterward he moved to the Ukraine and served as secretary and departmental secretary of the Ukrainian Union. He was repeatedly arrested, as were other ministers, and finally, after his arrest in 1938, vanished. More than 25 years later it was learned that he died in imprisonment in 1941.

Wolff, Joseph

WOLFF, JOSEPH (1795—1862). Mission traveler and linguist. Of Jewish birth (born in Germany), Catholic education, and finally Protestant persuasion he became known throughout the world because of his trips to Asia (L. E. Froom, Prophetic Faith of Our Fathers, vol. 3, pp. 461—481).

Connected with the London Society to Promote Christianity among the Jews, he worked chiefly for Jews, but he preached also to others of any race or rank.

An eccentric and a solitary traveler, he spent 18 years, “without protection of any European authority whatsoever” in his journeys, which included Palestine, Egypt, Sinai Peninsula, Arabia, Mesopotamia, Persia, the Crimea, Georgia, Turkey, Turkestan, Bokhara, Balkh, Afghanistan, Kashmir, India, and other distant places. He sought the 10 lost tribes and preached the second advent of Christ, stating that “he shall come again, according to my opinion, in the year 1847, and reign at Jerusalem 1,000 years” (Researches, p. 131).

Wolff’s teaching of a millennial kingdom in which the Jews in Jerusalem would teach the Gentiles (see his Journal, p. 123) was considerably different from the Millerite and Seventh-day Adventist view of the Second Advent (see Premillennialism). Nevertheless, he was considered a participant in the great nineteenth-century movement proclaiming the Advent near and giving the first of the three angels’ messages of Rev. 14. He was mentioned as a forerunner by William Miller (Evidence . . . of the Second Coming of Christ [1840], p. 238) and by Ellen White (GC 357).

Wollega Adventist Academy

WOLLEGA ADVENTIST ACADEMY. A coeducational day and boarding school on high school level, situated near the village of Dongoro, 16 miles (25 kilometers) west of Gimbie and some 300 miles (500 kilometers) west of Addis Ababa, Ethiopia.

Originally the school was located in the town of Gimbie. As the town grew both in size and population and at last surrounded the campus, it was felt that the school should be located in a more ideal place with a rural environment. This conviction gave birth to the present Wollega Adventist Academy in 1968.

For five years the school operated grades 1—10; in the year 1973, grade 11 was added. The Ministry of Education in 1976 gave approval to open grade 12, thus upgrading the school to senior high school level.

Originally all buildings were made from mud and sticks. Later a permanent building consisting of eight classrooms and offices was built, partly by Swedish Aid. In the mid-1970s new dormitories and a house for single teachers were constructed. Since 1976 a clinic, cafeteria and kitchen, library, faculty homes, and administrative facilities have been added. The school brick factory provides work for the students as well as supplying bricks for construction.

There is a teaching staff of 16 full-time teachers and eight student teachers. Industries and the work program also include a mill, building construction, gardening, and farming. The school farms 200 acres (80 hectares) of land.

Principals: Leroy Kuhn, 1968—1971; E. E. Perry, 1971—1972; Bekele Biri, 1972—1975; Abebe Disasa, 1975—1983; Beat Odermatt, 1983—1985; Fekadu Olana, 1985—1987; Ato Letta Bedasso, 1987—1991; Mamo Olana, 1991— .

Women of Spirit

WOMEN OF SPIRIT (1995— ; quarterly; files in R&H). A four-color, 56-page magazine targeted to Seventh-day Adventist women. Circulation is primarily in the North American Division, though subscriptions also come from women throughout the world divisions. With the success of women's retreats and the women's devotional book in the early 1990s a grassroots desire developed for a Seventh-day Adventist women's magazine. The Review and Herald Publishing Association surveyed more than 2,000 women at retreats, camp meetings, and churches in the North American Division in 1993 and 1994 to assess potential interest. Women expressed a need for a Christian women's magazine that understands the uniqueness of their beliefs and lifestyle.

The name Women of Spirit captures the essence of the magazine—to be led by the Spirit and to be enthusiastic, spirited women. The magazine's mission is to be a friend and mentor stimulating spiritual vitality, nurturing emotional growth, fostering balanced, healthy living, and encouraging a dynamic Christian witness in the home and community.

To fulfill this mission, it features real people from a diversity of ethnic and cultural backgrounds. It is interactive, providing a place for SDA women to exchange ideas, share concerns, and discuss solutions to problems. The vision of Women of Spirit is to build a joyful sense of community among women in the church and affirm their place of service in the body of Christ.

Women of Spirit features articles in a conversational, practical style dealing with the real issues women face today. Topics include spirituality, stress, parenting, singlehood, witnessing, abuse, career, divorce, wellness, relationships, etc.

Regular columns, some written by well-known denominational women, enrich each issue, addressing emotional growth, parenting, money management, women's health questions, and career issues. One column, written by a man, highlights the mysterious, though often humorous, interrelationship between men and women.

Other standard features include women's ministry news, profiles of ordinary women doing extraordinary things, reports of how women share their faith in their workplace, personal stories, lunch interviews with a group of women, and devotionals emphasizing deeper spiritual life.

Women of Spirit is designed to be intentionally interactive—a forum for Adventist women to communicate with one another. Readers contribute humorous family anecdotes, or respond to questions relating to various articles. Each issue features a reader-response article on such topics as How Mother Made Sabbath Unforgettable, Blessings, Meet My Mentor, or Remembering Special Family Meals. The subtitle of Women of Spirit is “Adventist Women Sharing Their Lives.”

Editors: Penny Estes Wheeler, 1994— .

Women's Cadette Corps

WOMEN'S CADETTE CORPS. See Medical Cadet Corps.

Women's Ministries

WOMEN'S MINISTRIES. An organization comprised of a General Conference Office of Women's Ministries director; division, union, and conference directors; and local church women's ministries coordinators.

History

History. The beginnings of women's ministries are reflected as early as Mar. 30, 1898, when the General Conference issued Sarepta Myrenda Irish Henry a ministerial license as a vote of confidence in her work of women's ministries. Corresponding from Australia in 1898, Ellen White endorsed Mrs. Henry's work. In 1899 a weekly column in the Review was published, entitled "Woman's Gospel Work." The weekly column ceased with Mrs. Henry's death in 1900.

In 1874 S.M.I. Henry joined forces with the newly formed Woman's Christian Temperance Union (WCTU), the largest women's organization in the world. Campaigning against liquor and determined to assist families in crisis, the WCTU fostered temperance, better schools, improved nutrition, and established kindergartens. From 1879 to 1898 S.M.I. Henry became a national evangelist, preaching and organizing for WCTU. Through her preaching, hundreds accepted Christ and were reformed in lifestyle. In 1898 some felt that she should receive a ministerial license, which would be more in keeping with her line of work. A motion prevailed to grant her such recognition from the General Conference. Unfortunately, Mrs. Henry passed away two years later, on Jan. 16, 1900.

Prior to Mrs. Henry's leadership, women ministered intensely and had a significant impact in the beginnings of the Seventh-day Adventist Church. In June 1869 Mary Haskell opened her home in South Lancaster, Massachusetts, to a small group of women on Wednesday afternoons for the purpose and intent of intercessory prayer. The women first prayed for their children, church members, and then non-SDA neighbors. This led to a strategy of action. They divided up their neighborhood and began to visit the sick, cheer the lonely, and distribute free tracts. They wrote letters and sent pamphlets to people in need in different countries. The group became the Vigilant Missionary Society. It had an effective outreach, creating roots for the current Publishing Department, and the Home Missionary Department, which later became Personal Ministries.

Mrs. Henry Gardner established a prayer ministry in Battle Creek that led to the formation of the Dorcas and Benevolent Association in October 1874. Women met to sew, mend clothes, distribute food, and become involved in a caring outreach to widows, orphans, and the sick. Today, this caring ministry impacts thousands of lives worldwide under the auspices of Community Services.

On Jan. 6, 1900, the first Seventh-day Adventist deaconesses were ordained by W. C. White, in Australia.

In print, official recognition of women's ministries was not recorded from 1900 to the 1970s. A record of the first woman ordained as a local church elder was that of Josephine Benton, at the Brotherhood church in Washington, D.C., in 1972. A committee was formed to respond to women's concerns and the Women's Commission on the Role of the Women in the Church met for the first time in September 1973 at Camp Mohaven, Ohio.

The North American Division Women's Commission was voted by the 1984 Annual Council as a liaison between the women of the church and the NAD administration. This commission was founded through the Office of Human Relations when Warren Banfield, director of OHR, received approval and financial support for its establishment. The commission has had shifts in leadership, each adding a distinct influence to its purpose and direction: Alice Smith was the first to chair the commission; Thesba Johnston succeeded her in 1986, and in January 1990 Ramona Perez Greek assumed the chair. Because of its focus on women's ministries activities, the NAD Women's Commission requested a name change. In March 1991 it became Women's Ministries.

In March 1985 the Commission on the Role of Women met again and recommended that an affirmative action plan be developed to enhance women's involvement in the church. In response to this recommendation, the General Conference session in New Orleans in July 1985 voted to urge that 'affirmative action' for the involvement of women in the work of the church be a priority plan with church leadership, and to request leaders to use their executive influence to open to women all aspects of ministry in the church that do not require ordination." This led to the General Conference Committee establishing a Women's Ministries Advisory Committee on Oct. 15, 1985. The committee appointed Betty Holbrook as chair, and in April 1988 Karen Flowers was appointed chair of the General Conference Women's Ministries Advisory.

The first Department of Women's Ministries was established (January 1988) in the North American Division in the Oregon Conference with Ruthie Jacobsen as a full-time paid director.

On July 12—17, 1989, the Commission on the Role of the Women in the Church met in Cohutta Springs, Georgia. Karen Flowers presented the findings of "The Role of Women in the Church: An International Survey of Seventh-day Adventist Women in Leadership." The study conducted by Karen Flowers and Carole Kilcher revealed a profile of 875 respondents from all divisions of the worldwide church and summarized their concerns. The results were intended to facilitate the consideration of qualified women when positions become available at higher administrative levels. On July 17, 1989, the 17 women members of the Commission on the Role of Women in the Church in caucus stated, "We recommend the employment of Women's Ministries coordinators to coordinate ministries for all SDA women, both lay and denominational employees: full-time at General Conference and division levels; at least half-time at unions and local conferences."

Soon after the 1990 General Conference session in Indianapolis, an Office of Women's Ministries was created in the North American Division. Elizabeth Sterndale was appointed as director of the entity. Sterndale also became a NAD officer with the title of field secretary. She carried other responsibilities that included executive director of the Association of SDA Nurses and associate director of the Health and Temperance Department. Ramona Perez Greek was appointed as assistant director for the NAD Office of Women's Ministries.

In October 1990 the Annual Council accepted GC president Robert S. Folkenberg's recommendation to establish a GC Office of Women's Ministries for the purpose of "fostering ministry by women to women in the world church." Rose Otis was named director of this new ministry, and reports directly to the General Conference president. Otis is challenged to encourage opportunities for women in the church's decision-making bodies, and to inspire both young and seasoned women to become intimately involved in the mission of the church, after having their own needs addressed by nurturing programs in the church.

Soon after the GC Office of Women's Ministries was in place, a 30-member Women's Ministries World Advisory was appointed, representing more than 18 different cultures and ethnic groups. It meets quarterly. Also, both Otis and Sterndale are members of the GC Committee.

Six of the 11 divisions worldwide have appointed women leaders to provide direction to the ministries of women: Thelma Nortey, Africa-Indian Ocean Division, provides leadership to tens of thousands of evangelistic-minded women; Dr. Nancy Bassham, Far Eastern Division, has motivated literally thousands of women to become involved in various ministries that resulted in 13,601 baptisms between 1991 and 1992; Ludmila Krushenitskya, Euro-Asia Division, pioneers programs for women where the church is undergoing dramatic growth and where women's ministries is playing a role in nurturing and discipling the influx of new members; Elizabeth Sterndale and Ramona Perez Greek, North American Division, work toward improving the potential and full utilization of the gifts of women in the church, thus maximizing the advancement of the church's mission; Carole Ferch-Johnson, South Pacific Division, established women's ministries through the organization of training seminars for women, and prayer ministries; Birthe Kendel, Trans-European Division, is developing new programs in various parts of Europe and Scandinavia; Valerie Fidelia, Middle East Union, is the newly elected leader meeting the needs of women in the mecca of Muslim experience.

The mission of the General Conference Office of Women's Ministries is to uphold, encourage, and challenge SDA women as disciples of Jesus Christ, and to uplift Him. Specifically, to elevate women as persons of inestimable worth in Christ, to deepen their faith, build networks among women and encourage bonds of friendship, mentor the younger woman, address perspectives to the issues facing the world church, expand avenues of dynamic Christian service for women, and challenge each SDA woman with her potential to complement the gifts given to others and to work side by side in furthering the Global Mission of the church.

Women's greatest participation in church leadership clusters around 1915, the year of Ellen White's death. The changing patterns of the roles of women in leadership indicate increased involvement from 1900 to approximately the early 1940s, when a clear decline occurs. Records indicate there were almost no women in leadership again until 1985. Statistics reflect the slowly reexpanding role of women within the church. In 1970, 17 women served in administrative posts at the General Conference, NAD, union, and conference levels. In 1991 there were 131.

Regarding women in pastoral ministry, the topic of women's ordination has passed through a series of recommendations, study commissions, ad hoc commissions, and General Conference sessions. The issue was voted down 1,173 to 377 by the delegates of the world church at the 1990 General Conference session. Although the church has not seen fit to ordain women, a growing number of women are accepting calls to minister as pastors/associates and chaplains.

Many women, too numerous to mention by name, have been pioneers and visionaries helping to build up the church, laboring and accomplishing in areas as diverse as publishing, home missionary work, Sabbath school, administration, finances, medicine, education, evangelism, and the pastoral ministry. Each has contributed a significant difference to the church, assisting in making it what it is today. Women have taken the counsel in the book Evangelism, page 469, seriously, “When a great and decisive work is to be done, God chooses men and women to do this work, and it will feel the loss if the talents of both are not combined.” “The Lord has a work for women as well as for men. . . . They can do in families a work that men cannot do, a work that reaches the inner life. They can come close to the hearts of those whom men cannot reach. Their labor is needed” (Welfare Ministry, p. 145).

Wŏnju Academy

WŎNJU ACADEMY (Wŏnju Sahmyook Joongkodeung Hakkyo). A coeducational boarding school on the secondary level operated by the East Central Korean Conference at onju, Korea. It was established in 1963. There is an elementary school on the same campus.

New construction began in 1984. The school has dormitories with a capacity of 240 and an auditorium with a capacity of 1,000. A fertile farm supplies the school with fresh vegetables as well as earning profit for the school.

Principals: KimJoon Pal, 1963—1965; Won Kyung Sik, 1965—1968; Choi Ey Kwon, 1968—1973; Choi Myung Hwan, 1973—1974; Kim Suk Kwon, 1974—1975; Han Ki Jong, 1975—1981; Kim Hyung Kook, 1981—1984; Kim Jae Shin, 1984—1992; Kim Dae Sung, 1992— .

Wood, George Albert

WOOD, GEORGE ALBERT (1867—1944). Pioneer Seventh-day Adventist worker in Indonesia. He was born in England, but later lived in Australia. He received his early training in Church of England schools. In 1898 he was baptized in a Baptist church. In 1899 he attended Avondale School for Christian Workers and later worked as a colporteur and taught school. Between 1906 and 1908 he took nurse's training at Sydney Sanitarium. In 1909 he went to Surabaya, Java, as one of the pioneer SDA workers in the East Indies. Later he preached and taught school at Padang, southern Sumatra (1919—1923); directed the SDA work in that area (1923—1926); and preached and led the work (as acting director) in eastern Java (1927—1930), and in Batakland, northern Sumatra (1930—1935). He was ordained to the ministry about 1921. His wife, Anna Amelia Nordstrom, a Swede by nationality, was also a mission worker. She died in 1942 shortly after World War II began. He died in internment at Medan, Sumatra, in 1944.

Wood, Lynn H.

WOOD, LYNN H. (1887—1976). Archaeologist, administrator, educator. Born in Lamar, Missouri, he graduated from Ann Arbor High School, and received a degree in architectural engineering from the University of Michigan in 1909. In the fall of that year he joined the faculty of Washington Missionary College (now Columbia Union College) as a science and mathematics teacher.

In 1911 he married Maude Guilford, and the following year he became head of the Science Department at Union College in Nebraska. In 1914 he was elected principal of Southern Training School at Graysville, Tennessee.

In 1918 Wood became president of Southern Junior College in Tennessee (now Southern College of Seventh-day Adventists). He designed and superintended the construction of the three main buildings on the hill—the two dormitories and Lynn Wood Hall, which was named in his honor.

In 1922 Wood went to Australasian Missionary College (now Avondale College), where he spent six years; later he served as president of Stanborough College in England. In 1930 he was called to be president of Emmanuel Missionary College (now Andrews University). In 1934 he began advanced training in the University of Chicago and obtained his Ph.D. degree in June 1937, with a dissertation entitled “Evolution of Systems of Defense in Palestine.” During the year 1936—1937 he was Jastrow Fellow at the American School of Oriental Research at Jerusalem, and during that time took part in the excavation of Khirbet Tannur and in the sounding of Tell el-Kheleifeh (Ezion-geber) in Transjordan, under the direction of Nelson Glueck, director of the school. Profiting from his architectural training, Wood was the expedition surveyor. From 1937 to 1952 he served on the faculty of the SDA Theological Seminary as professor of archaeology and history of antiquity, and from 1944 to 1951 as chair of the Department of Archaeology. During these years Wood worked especially on ancient chronological problems. One result of this work was the establishment of the beginning of the Twelfth Dynasty of Egypt in 1991 B.C. A report of this work was published in the Bulletin of the American Schools of Oriental Research in October 1945. Another fruit of his studies was the discovery of evidence that the Jews had used a fall-to-fall calendar after the Exile, corroborating conclusions drawn from such biblical passages as Neh. 1:1 and 2:1. The results of this work were published under joint authorship with S. H. Horn in the Journal of Near Eastern Studies in January 1954, and in expanded form as a monograph, The Chronology of Ezra 7, in 1953 (revised 1970).

Woodland Industrial School

WOODLAND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL. See Wisconsin Academy.

Worker, Journal of Sabbath School Action

WORKER, JOURNAL OF SABBATH SCHOOL ACTION. See Church Ministries Worker.

Workers' Institutes

WORKERS' INSTITUTES. A general name for several types of short-term schools for evangelistic workers and colporteurs, such as Bible schools, Bible institutes, and biblical institutes. These schools began about 1874 and continued into the early years of the present century, when their functions were taken over by the theological departments of denominational colleges and by colporteur institutes (see Literature Evangelist). In several instances, particularly overseas, these institutes developed into denominational schools.

One of the early announcements of such an institute sets forth its objectives and procedures: "It is proposed to hold in Battle Creek, Mich., commencing at the close of the present term of school, about the middle of December next, a series of exercises to be conducted by Elds. White, Smith, and others. . . . The work proposed to be done is to give instruction theoretical and practical in regard to the presentation of the present truth before the people, as Teachers' Institutes give instruction in regard to the theory and practice of teaching.

"The object to be accomplished is to aid our preachers in a better preparation for the work of publicly presenting the truth, and to instruct such as may be desirous of at once engaging in that work, who know not how to spend a long time in preparing. The exercises will consist of, say two lectures each day, with reviews and examinations; and the time employed will be about three weeks" (Review and Herald 44:120, Sept. 29, 1874).

Institutes were held at various places, among them Oakland, California, in 1877 (*ibid.*49:140, May 3, 1877). A synopsis of lectures given there by James White and Uriah Smith was published under the title The Biblical Institute: A Synopsis of Lectures on the Principal Doctrines of Seventh-day Adventists. In the same year, a biblical institute was held in South Lancaster, Massachusetts, and in 1878 one was held at Rome, New York (*ibid.*51:72, Feb. 28, 1878).

In 1883 S. N. Haskell conducted a 10-day Bible Reading Institute intended especially to train colporteurs to give Bible readings.

Also in 1883 the churches in Illinois, Wisconsin, and Michigan raised $3,000 to establish a permanent training school for Bible instructors and home and foreign missionaries. The site chosen was Chicago, where a school under the name Central Bible School was operated first by the International Tract and Missionary Society, and later by the General Conference. In 1887 the General Conference in session recommended that a building be erected in Chicago to house the school. In response the Illinois Conference in 1889 built a four-story brick structure with 38 rooms at a cost of $28,000, and deeded it to the General Conference Association. By 1893 the building became inadequate to meet the growing needs, and arrangements were made to conduct the school at Battle Creek College. The property was sold to the Medical Missionary and Benevolent Association. Directors of the Central Bible School included James Sawyer, D. T. Shireman, G. B. Starr, Mrs. G. B. Starr, Maria Huntley, and E. J. Waggoner.

Another attempt to prepare workers in short-term training sessions was made in New York City in 1901 by S. N. Haskell and his wife. This institute-type course, named Bible

Training School in the General Conference Bulletin, was short-lived. See also Bible Schools and Institutes; General Conference Bible Schools.

Working Policy (General Conference)

WORKING POLICY (General Conference). A compilation of administrative policies adopted for the purpose of guiding the conferences, churches, missions, and institutions in carrying on the many activities of the church's work. Originating in 1926 as a digest of former General Conference actions, printed in leaflet form, it is now published, with two other basic documents, in a book called General Conference Working Policy, which is revised every year.

The contents of the policy book can be divided roughly into six general subjects: 1. Constitution and Bylaws; 2. General Administrative Policies; 3. Departmental Policies; 4. Interdivision Service Policies; 5. Financial Policies; and 6. Retirement Plan Policies. The provisions of the working policy are all adopted or amended at an Autumn Council of the General Conference Executive Committee in harmony with the changing needs of a growing and expanding work.

The working policy has contributed to unity of outlook, coordination of operations, and refinement of methods.

Workingmen's Home

WORKINGMEN'S HOME. See City Missions.

Works

WORKS. See Faith and Works.

World Foods Service

WORLD FOODS SERVICE. See International Health Food Association.

World Literature Ministry Coordinating Board

WORLD LITERATURE MINISTRY COORDINATING BOARD. A board that coordinates all phases of the literature ministry in the world through regional literature ministry coordinating boards. It serves as a central advisory, planning and coordinating board, dealing with the initiation, production, and distribution of Seventh-day Adventist literature. It also promotes compatibility of equipment among the publishing houses and is the administrator of the Publishing Development Fund.

An important part of the coordination of publications deals with Ellen White books. The WLMCB facilitates the production of Ellen White books in French, Spanish, and Portuguese to avoid duplication of translation and to ensure larger print runs and lower unit costs. The board membership is made up of General Conference officers and publishing leaders, division presidents, division publishing directors, and select publishing house managers. This board normally convenes once in each quinquennium, with an executive committee of the board meeting once or twice yearly.

World Mission

WORLD MISSION. See Institute of World Mission.

World Service, Seventh-day Adventist

WORLD SERVICE, SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST. See Adventist Development and Relief Agency International.

Wortman, Louis Marie Dirk

WORTMAN, LOUIS MARIE DIRK (1906—1945). Teacher in Indonesia. He was Dutch by nationality, born at The Hague in the Netherlands, and received his training at Neandertal Missionary Seminary in Germany. In 1929 he went to the East Indies and served as a teacher at Tjimindi Training School (1930—1932), Bible instructor in the East Java Mission (1932—1934), principal of Tjimindi Training School and of Gadobangkong Training School, predecessors of Perguruan Tinggi Advent. In 1938 he was ordained to the ministry. In the course of World War II he was interned and died in internment only a few weeks before the end of the war. His widow, Sibylla Häbel Wortman (they were married in 1930), returned to Indonesia after the war and worked as a Bible instructor and nurse until her retirement to the homeland in 1961.

Wright, John Francis

WRIGHT, JOHN FRANCIS (1889—1944). President of Southern African Division and vice president of the General Conference. He was born in a Seventh-day Adventist home and received almost all of his education in SDA schools, graduating from Southern Training School, Graysville, Tennessee, in 1911. He began his service by assisting C. B. Haynes in evangelistic work in Atlanta, Georgia, in 1912. Next he preached in Georgia and Alabama and then was president of the Alabama and the North Texas conferences. In 1925 he went to South Africa as president of the Cape Conference. The next year he became president of the South African Union, and from 1930 to 1941 was president of the Southern African Division. In 1941 he was elected vice president of the General Conference, an office he held until he died.

Wydawniczy Znaki Czasu

WYDAWNICZY ZNAKI CZASU. See Polish Publishing House.

Wyoming

WYOMING. See Central States Conference; Rocky Mountain Conference; Wyoming Conference.

Wyoming Conference

WYOMING CONFERENCE. A unit of church organization that comprised the territory of the state of Wyoming. (See also Central States Conference.) In 1981 the Wyoming Conference was merged with the Colorado Conference to form the Rocky Mountain Conference. At the time of the merger the membership was 1,927, with 22 churches.

History

History. Beginnings of the Work in Wyoming. When the Colorado Conference was organized in 1883 the territory of Wyoming was part of it. As early as 1893 J. D. Pegg reported having “visited the little company at Fort Laramie, and found them of good courage.” In March 1894 Charles Shafer was reported to be preparing to return from Denver to his work at Cheyenne. The same year a layman named Barnes was giving Bible studies and distributing publications at Laramie.

In April 1895 a W. M. Twombly reported to the Colorado Conference office concerning a little group of Seventh-day Adventists at Cambria, and appealed for literature for use in their missionary activity. In the same year tent meetings held by G. O. States and J. A. Leland at Wheatland resulted in a Sabbath school of 24 members. States visited a group at Douglas and then rode his bicycle over to Buffalo, which was not on a railroad, where he baptized one. He went to Big Horn and to Sheridan, where he baptized two. That same summer the General Conference took over the responsibility of the Wyoming field.

In October the General Conference sent H. F. Ketring and O. S. Ferren to Sheridan, where they held what probably was the first tent meeting in northern Wyoming. The tent was banked around the base, warmed by two heaters, and lighted by electricity. In that raw frontier country, where many had never attended a religious meeting, the attendance was good, and many who had fallen under the power of strong drink and other evil habits were convicted of their sins and started a new life in Christ. An organized church of 20 members was left when these preachers concluded meetings at Big Horn, near Sheridan.

Six years later, when O. S. Ferren was sent again to Sheridan, accompanied by a couple named Nethery, they found that the church had remained faithful through the years in spite of having no meeting place. Driven to action by an inquiry of the townspeople as to why they did not build a church, one brother offered $100, other members pledged $300, and the townspeople willingly added enough in a few days to buy the materials. The ministers themselves built the 24' x 36' (7 m. x 11 m.) house of worship with the help of members who came from some distance. The builders lived in tents and colporteur wagons, working from daybreak until late at night. When the church was dedicated on Dec. 8, 1901, Ferren announced through the local paper that no collection would be taken, since all bills were paid. The whole neighborhood came to the dedication and rejoiced with the church members over the first Seventh-day Adventist church built in northern Wyoming.

As a result of the work of a colporteur, E. L. Cook, a group of settlers near the Big Horn Mountains asked for evangelistic meetings. The ministers found a log schoolhouse, plugged up the broken window lights with gunny sacks, and making the place as comfortable as possible, opened a series of meetings. The people came out of the hills from two to six miles (three to 10 kilometers) away and gave earnest attention. Old habits were broken; lives were cleansed; and as a result a little company was organized and plans were soon laid for constructing a log meeting place.

About 1900 the General Conference asked the Nebraska Conference to oversee the work in Wyoming—an arrangement that lasted three or four years. The Upton congregation, which originally was known as the Sheldon church, was founded in 1904 through the preaching and personal work of J. H. Wheeler. The church of 14 members bought a log building for $50. This has given place to several other buildings through the years

The Wyoming Mission Organized. At the Nebraska camp meeting of 1904 the Wyoming members pointed out that a vast sparsely populated area lay between the Wyoming churches and eastern Nebraska and asked that Wyoming be allowed to organize as a separate mission. Accordingly, the Wyoming Mission was organized on Sept. 17, 1904, under the leadership of the Central Union Conference. The territory of the mission included the state of Wyoming, counties in western Nebraska, and the Black Hills region of South Dakota. At the time of organization there were five churches with 156 members. J. H. Wheeler was appointed the first director or superintendent, and the headquarters were at Crawford, Nebraska.

The Wyoming Mission Becomes a Conference. On June 23, 1907, at a camp meeting of the Wyoming Mission, the Wyoming Mission was reorganized as the Wyoming Conference, with the same territory. At the end of 1907 there were 13 churches with a membership of 300, almost double the original membership of the Wyoming Mission. It had enough funds to vote $500 to the General Conference for missions. Wheeler, the mission superintendent, became the president of the new conference.

The new conference soon gave its attention to educational needs. As early as the school year of 1904—1905 Sheridan had operated what was apparently the first church school in Wyoming, with Stella Allred as teacher. The next year Sheldon ran a church school, with Mrs. Mary Lamie as teacher. From 1908 to 1914 there was a 10-grade conference school at Hemingford, Nebraska.

In the meantime the colporteur work and evangelism by the spoken word were strongly promoted. C. L. Benson, Otto Fraf, and other Union College students scattered SDA publications in the first decade of the century. R. T. Baer opened up the work in Lander and Shoshone. H. E. Reeder spent considerable time in the Big Horn country. L. B. Porter was the minister in 1907—1908 at Wheatland and Cheyenne. At the latter place, where a company had been meeting since the nineties, he built a church, but it had to be sold, since he had failed to secure title to the lot.

In the second decade of the century, William Baker, a colporteur, was financed by Paul Curtis, who bought him a horse and cart, and later another horse and a wagon, to make his deliveries. Baker sowed the country with copies of Ellen White's Great Controversy. As a result of this and the efforts of lay workers, a company was formed that finally was organized as a church at Greybull in 1939 by Carl Mock. Mock also secured a church building in 1937 for the Worland company, which was organized as a church in November 1948.

In 1912 or 1913 Reeder organized the Buffalo company into a church, which erected a building in 1942. The Powell church was organized by E. H. Curtis in 1910, the Ten Sleep church was organized in 1927, and the Thermopolis church in 1940. A group of humble laywomen began the Sabbath school that grew into the Snake River church in 1948, under the leadership of Bernard Furst.

After a long history as a company, the Cheyenne church was organized in 1909. The church building, erected in 1922, was dedicated in May 1930. Under the leadership of W. H. Schacht, the Casper church was organized in 1921 and the building dedicated in 1925. The Pine Bluffs church was organized in 1948 and the church building dedicated in 1950.

The Big Trails church had a most unusual beginning. Two SDA girls, Grace and Edith Brown, came from Missouri to spend the summer with friends, and were joined later by Florence Brown. They organized a little family Sabbath school and also attended the community union Sunday school. At their suggestion Sabbath school quarterlies were used in the Sunday school. Some of the members brought out old books, bought in times past from SDA colporteurs, to use as helps. In time a number began to keep the Sabbath and soon formed a real Sabbath school. Several were baptized by H. E. Reeder. Eventually a church was organized in 1918 by W. A. Long. A log meetinghouse was built that was later used for a school. A new church building was dedicated in 1956.

Changes in Organization. In 1925 the western counties of Nebraska and the Black Hill counties of South Dakota were transferred to the Nebraska and South Dakota conferences, respectively, and Wyoming was organized as a mission, with Varner J. Johns as the first superintendent. In this loss of territory the number of churches dropped from 28 to 8, and the membership from 871 to 270. Slowly the membership climbed once more, until, at the close of 1945, there were 18 churches with 950 members. Wyoming again became a conference in 1944, with E. H. Oswald as president.

Recent Developments

Recent Developments. In 1956 the Wyoming Conference began sponsoring Sabbath services in Yellowstone National Park, with Wyoming pastors alternating as speakers. A statewide welfare work was developed in 1961, with key centers in Casper, Sheridan, and Newcastle. In 1973 the Cheyenne church secured a strategic downtown location from which it has conducted an extensive welfare operation.

A 40-acre (15-hectare) tract of land on Casper Mountain was made available for conference use in 1964. This gift by the Mills family of Casper has been developed as a youth camp and camp meeting grounds with 25 cabins, a cafeteria, headquarters building, duplex for the ranger and the director, and an 800-seat auditorium. A rock collection, said to be the finest in the state, was donated to the camp by Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Ross, of Loveland, Colorado.

New church buildings were erected after 1964 in the following places: Big Piney, Casper, Cheyenne, Gillette, Laramie, Rawlins, Riverton, Sundance, and Worland. New school facilities were added in Casper and Powell.

A new conference headquarters building was occupied in 1970. Located on Casper Mountain Road, the facility provided for both administrative offices and the Book and Bible House.

In 1981 the Rocky Mountain Conference was formed from the Wyoming and Colorado conferences. See Rocky Mountain Conference for additional history and information.

Presidents and Superintendents. Superintendent: J. H. Wheeler, 1904—1907; Presidents: J. H. Wheeler, 1907—1909; E. A. Curtis, 1909—1911; D. U. Hale, 1911—1914; N. T. Sutton, 1914—1920; J. W. Turner, 1920—1924; V. J. Johns, 1924—1925; Superintendents: V. J. Johns, 1925; B. W. Brown, 1925—1926; C. J. Metzger, 1927—1930; C. A. Purdom, 1930—1935; E. H. Meyers, 1935—1939; under Central Union Conference, 1939—1942; Superintendents: E. H. Oswald, 1942—1944; Presidents: E. H. Oswald, 1944—1946; C. W. Degering, 1946—1949; E. R. Osmunson, 1949—1952; L. J. Leiske, 1952—1954; J. L. Dittberner, 1954—1959; G. C. Williamson, 1959—1964; Lee Carter, 1964—1968; W. C. Hatch, 1968—1973; A. C. McClure, 1973—1977; Don Schneider, 1977—1978; Ben J. Liebelt, 1979—1981.

Wyzsze Seminarium Duchowne Kosciola Adwentystow Dnia Siodmego
Im. M.B. Czechowskiego

WYKSZE SEMINARIUM DUCHOWNE KOSCIOLA ADWENTYSTOW DNIA SIODMEGO IM. M.B. CZECHOWSKIEGO. See Polish Spiritual Seminary.

Y

Yahweh

YAHWEH. The sacred, personal name of God, for which the KJV generally substitutes Lord. Four times this version has “Jehovah” (Ex. 6:3; Ps. 83:18; Isa. 12:2; 26:4). “Jehovah” is a transliteration of the form of the name produced when the Jewish scholars called Masoretes, a few centuries after Christ, added the vowel sounds of the Hebrew word ’adônay, “lord” or “sir,” to the original form of the word, which consisted of the Hebrew consonants YHWH, thought to have been pronounced Yahweh.

The Jews considered the name YHWH so sacred that they would not pronounce it even when reading the Scriptures, lest they inadvertently profane the name of the Lord. Instead of Yahweh, they read ’Adônay. Thus the true pronunciation of YHWH had been lost centuries before the time of the Masoretes.

The derivation of YHWH is not known, but it is thought by some to be a form of the Hebrew verb hayah, “to be,” and thus could mean “the [eternally] existing one.” Or if, as some think, it is from the verb chayah, “to live,” the meaning would be “the [self-existent] living one.” On the other hand, Dr. W. F. Albright favors the idea that YHWH is a causal form and means “He causes to be” (W. F. Albright, From the Stone Age to Christianity, pp. 259, 260).

The name by which God authorized Moses to identify Him to the Hebrew people, “I AM [’ehyeh]/WHO I AM,” or simply “I AM” (Ex. 3:14, RSV), is commonly thought to be related to the Tetragrammaton YHWH considered as a form of the verb “to be.” In John 8:58 Jesus appropriates to Himself the title “I am.”

Yakima Valley Academy

YAKIMA VALLEY ACADEMY. See Upper Columbia Academy.

Yangon Attached District

YANGON ATTACHED DISTRICT. See Far Eastern Division; Myanmar.

Yearbook

YEARBOOK. See Seventh-day Adventist Yearbook.

Year-Day Principle

YEAR-DAY PRINCIPLE. The reckoning of a symbolic day as a year in interpreting time periods in symbolic prophecy. The biblical texts generally cited for this are Num. 14:34 and Ezra 4:6, both of which mention a “day for a year.” This principle, used from medieval times for some of the periods in the books of Daniel and Revelation, became a basic part of the standard Protestant school of interpretation, called the historical, or historicist, view of prophecy. Seventh-day Adventists, being historicists, have inherited this method of interpretation from the earlier commentators.

According to the year-day principle, a symbolic day in prophecy stands for a literal year, but a symbolic year stands for the same number of actual years as there are days in the symbolic year. The 1335 prophetic days (Dan. 12:12) are thus interpreted as 1335 actual years; the three and a half prophetic years (as derived from the phrase “a time, and times, and half a time,” Rev. 12:14; cf. Dan. 7:25) are $3\frac{1}{2} \times 360 = 1260$ prophetic days, or 1260 actual years.

The 360-day year was formerly explained by some of the older commentaries as a “Jewish calendar year,” but there is no known straight 360-day calendar year; the Jewish year is lunar, with variable months of 29 and 30 days, and with 12 or 13 months (see SDADic: “Year”). The later explanation of the 360-day prophetic year is based on the equivalence of several prophetic periods in Revelation: “A time, and times, and half a time” = 1260 days (Rev. 12:6, 14) = 42 months (Rev. 11:2, 3); and 42 months = $3\frac{1}{2}$ 12-month years; therefore, these are theoretical months of 30 days each, and the symbolic year must be reckoned as 360 symbolic days.

Yele Seventh-day Adventist Secondary School

YELE SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTIST SECONDARY SCHOOL. A senior high co-educational boarding school situated on 100 acres (40 hectares) in the center of both the nation and the Seventh-day Adventist work of Sierra Leone, bordered by the wide Teye River on one side and Yele village on the other. Instruction is in English and prepares students for the General Certificate of Education level.

The need was felt for a mission-owned boarding school in addition to the government-owned mission-operated day school in Waterloo (see Peninsula Secondary School). With an initial grant of 20,321.48 leones (about $18,000) from the West African Union Mission, a two-classroom building, a boys' dormitory, a storehouse, and a house for the principal were built, and school opened on Sept. 14, 1965, with 27 boys and 10 girls. The girls were housed at the church compound in the village under the supervision of Mrs. J. S. Myers, wife of the district pastor. L. Read, of England, was principal-business manager and T. K. Kagbo was preceptor-teacher. On their shoulders lay the entire school program, with the help of Mrs. Read. That first year a baptismal class of 18 was formed at the close of the Week of Prayer, which was conducted by B. S. Christiansen, mission president.

By the following year progress was seen in the addition of a girls' dormitory and another staff house, with Mr. and Mrs. U. Rinta-Aho and Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Webb joining the staff.

In quick succession a water system, an electricity generator, a third staff house, and two more classrooms were provided. A chicken house was completely renovated into a kitchen-dining room. The 1967 student enrollment was 56 boys and 31 girls.

Since 1971 the school program has been enriched by the youthful energy and dedication of student missionaries, who enthusiastically work with English classes, Sabbath school, MV, recreational periods, and even kitchen supervision.

In 1972 a four-unit dormitory for 64 girls, which included a dean's apartment, was added. Many students labored faithfully hauling buckets of sand from the adjacent river to make the cement building blocks at the site. The boys now use the old girls' dormitory in addition to their original smaller one. The sports field has been improved by the installation of a tennis court, the gift of several merchant friends.

A change in policy was made at the beginning of the 1974—1975 school year with the admission of 111 day students. With the 92 boarding students this brought the enrollment to the all-time high of 203.

As the enrollment increased, further expansion was necessary. In 1975 a multi national group of volunteers worked with indigenous help to construct an eight-classroom and administrative complex building. In the early 1980s technological developments provided the school with electricity. The school compares favorably with all other schools in the country on examinations and since 1987 has had an annual baptismal goal of 30.

In the 1992—1993 school year the enrollment was 450, with 120 of these being boarding students.

Principals: L. Read, 1965—1966; T. K. Kagbo, 1966—1969; J.A.M. Kamara, 1969—1970; D.M.P. Rao, 1970—1973; J. Onjukka (acting), 1973—1974; D. Richert, 1974—1979; W. R. Palm (acting), 1979—1980; A. Y. Kargbo, 1980—1987; J.A.M. Kamara, 1987—1991; J.S.B. Conteh, 1991— .

Yemen

YEMEN. A republic on the southern coast of the Arabian Peninsula, including the island of Socotra. It is bounded on the north by Saudi Arabia and on the east by Oman. It has a total area of approximately 205,356 square miles (531,872 square kilometers) and a population (1994) of 11 million. Most of the people are Muslims. The country became independent on Nov. 30, 1967, after 129 years of British rule. It was made up of two nations prior to May 21, 1990: the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and the Yemen Arab Republic. The port of Aden has been the area's most valuable natural resource, with thousands of ships putting in for refueling, servicing, and transshipment of goods.

As a result of the reorganization of the Middle East Division in 1970, Yemen was assigned to the Middle East Union of Seventh-day Adventists as an unentered territory. In 1972 K. S. Oster conducted an antismoking clinic in Sana, the capital. In 1993 there was no SDA work in Yemen. However, in 1989 Captain Roy Facey and his family moved there from England as migrant workers. Captain Facey has been helping ADRA workers get a foothold there. In 1994 the Middle East ADRA director, Jim Neergaard, signed an agreement to place an ADRA director in Yemen.

Yost, Frank Herman

YOST, FRANK HERMAN (1894—1958). Minister and teacher. He was baptized in 1921, and entered the colporteur work. In 1924 he married Esther Zimmer. He completed the junior theological course at Washington Missionary College (now Columbia Union College) and later took his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees at the University of Nebraska. He began his ministry in Minnesota and was ordained in 1927. He taught Bible at Maplewood Academy (1929—1932) and at Union College (1932—1940). At the Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary he was chair of the Department of Church History (1940—1946) and the Department of Theology (1950—1954). He was associate secretary of the General Conference Religious Liberty Department (1946—1950, 1954—1958), and was editor of Liberty magazine (1955—1958). He taught Bible and church history at La Sierra College for a brief period of time during 1958.

Yost was the author of numerous articles for denominational papers, and of several monographs, such as The Early Christian Sabbath and Let Freedom Ring. With A. W. Johnson he was coauthor of Separation of Church and State (1948).

Young and Alive

YOUNG AND ALIVE. See Christian Record Services, Inc.

Young People's Missionary Volunteer Department

YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSIONARY VOLUNTEER DEPARTMENT. See Youth Department of Missionary Volunteers.

Young People's Missionary Volunteer Societies

YOUNG PEOPLE'S MISSIONARY VOLUNTEER SOCIETIES. See Adventist Youth Societies.

Youngberg Adventist Hospital

YOUNGBERG ADVENTIST HOSPITAL. A 42-bed medical institution situated in Singapore, operated by the Southeast Asia Union Mission. It was named in memory of Gustavus B. Youngberg, veteran missionary to North Borneo.

On May 15, 1948, a 1.8-acre (.7-hectare) site, one city block north of the Southeast Asia Union Mission headquarters on Upper Serangoon Road, was purchased. A large residence on this property was remodeled, and the outpatient clinic moved to this location in May 1948. That same year, on Aug. 21, Wilma Leazer arrived as superintendent of nurses.

The institution prospered and soon became too small for its patronage. On the arrival of additional medical help in the person of Dr. Galen H. Coffin, a 42' x 150' (13 m. x 46 m.) wing was erected. This two-story addition of reinforced concrete, which more than doubled the size of the hospital, was dedicated on Apr. 24, 1952.

One fourth of the cost of $140,000 came from hospital earnings and three fourths from public contributions.

In May 1962 construction began on a third floor to the 1952 addition, providing space for a large operating suite, delivery room, labor room, obstetrical ward of four beds, nursery with 12 bassinets, and five private or semiprivate rooms. This floor was completed and opened in stages beginning with the surgical and delivery suites, then adding the patients' rooms and nursery later, which were finished in March 1973. In August 1970 the Dentistry Department received its first patients, seen by Dr. Robert Gan Seng Ann, a locally trained dentist.

From the original 20-bed quarters for inpatients in 1948 with a staff of 16 workers, the institution grew to an 82-bed hospital in 1973. Also in that year, the hospital began granting admitting and consulting privileges to selected community specialists. In 1979 the first kidney transplant in a private hospital in Singapore was performed at Youngberg.

In the 1980s other local private hospitals provided tough competition. In 1989 the aging 1952 wing was totally renovated and reequipped and dedicated on Apr. 11, 1991.

Youngberg continues to take the lead in health promotion in Singapore, having introduced the stop-smoking program in 1971, and the NEWSTART program in 1983. In 1993 it was selected by the Ministry of Education to conduct a three-day live-in health workshop for all of Singapore's 420 school principals.

Medical Directors: G. G. Innocent, 1948—1953; G. H. Coffin (acting), 1953—1956; G.H.A. McLaren, 1956—1958; G. H. Coffin, 1958—1961; Stephen Tan (acting), 1961—1962; G. H. Coffin, 1962—1966; C. A. Olson, 1967—1968; Paul Genstler, 1968—1974.

Administrators: A. L. Jacobson, 1974—1977; E. J. Heisler, 1977—1979; J. A. Hay, 1979—1981; D. L. Schatzschneider, 1982—1984; K. D. Reimche, 1985—1989; Joshua Goh, 1989— .

Youngberg, Gustavus Benson

YOUNGBERG, GUSTAVUS BENSON (1888—1944). Missionary. He was a graduate of the University of Minnesota (1912), and of Union College (1915). In 1916 he married Norma Ione Rhoads. After several years of evangelistic work in South Dakota he went in 1919 to Singapore and then to Borneo (now in Malaysia). With the exception of two years in Batakland, Sumatra, and about three years with the Malayan Seminary in Singapore, he was a pioneer missionary in Borneo until the time of his death.

In 1931 Youngberg began pioneer work among the Dyak tribes of Sarawak. In 1935 he began educational work among the Dusuns of British North Borneo (now called Sabah, a part of Malaysia), thus fulfilling a long-cherished design. Returning to Borneo from furlough without his family in 1941, he was interned by the Japanese in Kuching, Sarawak. When he became ill, he was transferred to Kuching Hospital, where he died of septicemia three days after his fifty-sixth birthday.

Your Life and Health

YOUR LIFE AND HEALTH. See Vibrant Life.

Your Muslim Neighbor and You

YOUR MUSLIM NEIGHBOR AND YOU. See Seventh-day Adventist Global Center for Islamic Studies.

Youth

YOUTH. See Church Ministries Department; Youth Department of Missionary Volunteers.

Youth (Braille)

YOUTH (Braille). See Christian Record Services, Inc.

Youth Bible Conference

YOUTH BIBLE CONFERENCE. A gathering of young people (introduced officially in October 1960), sponsored by a local or union conference or mission youth department, for a few days of Bible study in the areas of Christian doctrine and philosophy. Bible scholars and leaders of youth present chosen subjects and guide discussion, and seek to imbue the delegates with a desire to search for truth and to conform their lives to it. To keep distractions to a minimum, usually no visitors are invited. The delegates are appointed by their churches on a prorated basis. Such Bible conferences, held preferably in a camp location, which adds the ministry of nature to the adventure in the Book of the Creator, have become one of the most popular and spiritually productive of AY projects.

Youth Campsites

YOUTH CAMPSITES. The conferences of the North American Division maintain permanent campsites primarily for youth activities, but also as suitable, restful locations for various gatherings of both workers and constituents. In 1994 the campsites were:

Atlantic Union Conference—Greater New York Conference: Camp Berkshire, Wingdale, New York; New York Conference: Camp Cherokee, Saranac Lake, New York; Northeastern Conference: Camp Victory Lake, Hyde Park, New York; Northern New England Conference: Camp Lawroweld, Weld, Maine; Southern New England Conference: Camp Winnekeag, Ashburnham, Massachusetts.

Seventh-day Adventist Church in Canada—Alberta Conference: Foothills SDA Camp, Olds, Alberta; British Columbia Conference: Camp Chawuthen, Hope, British Columbia; Manitoba-Saskatchewan Conference: Camp Whitesand, Theodore, Saskatchewan; Maritime Conference: SDA Campgrounds, Pugwash, Nova Scotia; Ontario Conference: Cloud Lake Camp, Ontario; New Frenda Youth Camp, Port Carling, Ontario; Quebec Conference: Bois Francs Adventist Camp, Ste. Clothilde de Horton, Quebec; Seventh-day Adventist Church in Newfoundland and Labrador: Woody Acres Camp, Southwest Pond, Newfoundland.

Columbia Union Conference—Allegheny East Conference: Camp Daniel L. Davis, Pine Forge, Pennsylvania; Allegheny West Conference: Conference Campsite, Thornville, Ohio; Chesapeake Conference: Mount Aetna Youth Camp, Hagerstown, Maryland; Mountain View Conference: Valley Vista Adventist Center, Huttonsville, West Virginia; New Jersey Conference: Tranquil Valley Youth Camp, Tranquility, New Jersey; Ohio Conference: Camp Mohaven, Danville, Ohio; Pennsylvania Conference: Laurel Lake Camp, Rossiter, Pennsylvania; Potomac Conference: Camp Blue Ridge, Montebello, Virginia.

Lake Union Conference—Indiana Conference: Timber Ridge Camp, Spencer, Indiana; Lake Region Conference: Camp J. R. Wagner, Cassopolis, Michigan; Michigan Conference: Camp Au Sable, Grayling, Michigan; Wisconsin Conference: Camp Wakonda (at Camp Go-Seek), Oxford, Wisconsin.

Mid-America Union—Central States Conference: Central States Conference Center, Kansas City, Kansas; Dakota Conference: Northern Lights SDA Camp, Bottineau, North Dakota; Flag Mountain SDA Camp, Hill City, South Dakota; Iowa-Missouri Conference: Camp Heritage, Climax Springs, Missouri; Kansas-Nebraska Conference: Broken Arrow Ranch, Olsburg, Kansas; Camp Arrowhead, Lexington, Nebraska; Minnesota Conference: North Star Camp, Brainerd, Minnesota; Rocky Mountain Conference: Glacier View Camp, Ward, Colorado; Mills Spring Camp, Casper Mountain, Wyoming.

North Pacific Union Conference—Alaska Conference: Camp Lorraine, Wrangell, Alaska; Camp Polaris, Aleknagik, Alaska; Camp Tukuskoya, Anchorage, Alaska; Idaho Conference: Camp Ida-Haven, McCall, Idaho; Montana Conference: Camp Lanham, Seeley Lake, Montana; Oregon Conference: Big Lake Youth Camp, Sisters, Oregon; Upper Columbia Conference: Camp MiVoden, Hayden Lake, Idaho; Washington Conference: Camp Sunset Lake, Wilkeson, Washington.

Pacific Union Conference—Arizona Conference: Camp Yavapines, Prescott, Arizona; Central California Conference: Wawona SDA Camp, Wawona, California; Northern California Conference: Leoni Meadows, Grizzly Flats, California; Southeastern California Conference: Pine Springs Ranch, MountainCenter, California; Southern California Conference: Cedar Falls Camp, Angelus Oaks, California.

Southern Union Conference—Carolina Conference: Nosoca Pines Ranch, Liberty Hill, South Carolina. Florida Conference: Camp Kulaqua, High Springs, Florida; Georgia-Cumberland Conference: Cohutta Springs Adventist Center, Crandall, Georgia; Gulf States Conference: Camp Alamisco, Dadeville, Alabama; Kentucky-Tennessee Conference: Indian Creek Youth Camp, Liberty, Tennessee; South Atlantic Conference: South Atlantic Campground, Orangeburg, South Carolina; Southeastern Conference: Hawthorne, Florida.

Southwestern Union Conference—Arkansas-Louisiana Conference: Camp Yorktown Bay, Mountain Pine, Arkansas; Oklahoma Conference: Wewoka Woods Adventist Center, Wewoka Woods, Oklahoma; Southwest Region Conference: Lone Star Camp, Athens, Texas; Texas Conference: Nameless Valley Ranch, Leander, Texas.

Youth Congresses and Rallies

YOUTH CONGRESSES AND RALLIES. The term youth congress is applied to a large-scale gathering of young people for two or more days. When national or international congresses are held, the programs are more elaborate. Youth rallies might be described as one-day congresses. In these the program is simpler and the participants fewer than in congresses.

The first Seventh-day Adventist youth congress on record was held at Chemnitz, Germany, July 17—22, 1928, for which 1,837 delegates and many visitors (a total of 3,000) came from Germany, Britain, Scandinavia, Poland, the Baltic States, Hungary, Romania, Switzerland, Italy, France, Belgium, and Holland. The first youth congress for the entire North American Division was held in San Francisco, California, in September 1947, and was attended by more than 12,000 young people.

Following World War II, a European youth congress was held in Paris in 1951. It was attended by about 6,000 young people from 25 countries. San Francisco again was the host city in 1953, when the Pan-American youth congress, to which thousands of young people came from North, Central, and South America, was held there. A youth congress was conducted in Vienna in 1967. It was somewhat larger than the Paris session of 1951. In 1969 a world youth congress was held in the Hallenstadion in Zurich, with 10,000 youth from all divisions in attendance. A worldwide unity was brought to the youth work as a result of this meeting. SDA youth in nearly every division of the world field have been offered the advantages of the youth congress type of program, geared to their interests and needs.

Until 1960 the pattern of the large youth congress remained essentially the same; the principal features were sermons, appeals, pageants, music, and the relation of Share Your Faith experiences. But in that year the youth congress held in the municipal auditorium of Atlantic City, New Jersey, with a reported attendance of 18,000, struck a new emphasis. Called the Festival of the Holy Scriptures, it was a climactic event of a Bible emphasis year known as Spotlight on the Bible. Skillfully planned discussion groups were a new feature of the congress; there was a Bible quiz demonstration; the sermons and all other parts of the congress program were specifically planned to fit the pattern of the Festival of the Holy Scriptures. The high enthusiasm for this type of congress resulted in its repetition in division, union, and local conferences throughout the world.

Youth Department of Missionary Volunteers

YOUTH DEPARTMENT OF MISSIONARY VOLUNTEERS. The former Youth Department of the Seventh-day Adventist Church (including the National Service Organization). The General Conference Youth Department had its office in the General Conference North Building in Washington, D.C., until it became a part of the Church Ministries Department in 1985.

Early History. Systematic organizing of the young people of the Seventh-day Adventist Church came in response to appeals from Ellen White, written from Australia in late 1892. (These appeals were presented at the 1893 General Conference session.) The church in Adelaide, Australia, was the first to respond with the organization of a young people's society under the leadership of A. G. Daniells. Soon young people's societies sprang up in North America and elsewhere overseas.

However, even earlier there had been at least two local societies formed, but these had not led to concerted action. The first was a society consisting of a small group of boys (and later girls also) organized in 1879 by Luther Warren and Harry Fenner in Hazelton Township, Michigan; the second was a society organized 12 years later by Meade MacGuire at Antigo, Wisconsin.

In 1893 the Young People's Society of Christian Service was organized at College View, Nebraska (at Union College) "to secure the increased spirituality of the young people, their enlistment in all missionary activity through existing channels of work, and their elevation to a higher plane of living and thinking" (Matilda Erickson [Andross], Missionary Volunteers and Their Work, p. 13).

In 1894 the first Sunshine Band was organized, under the leadership of Luther Warren, in South Dakota, and in 1896 members of several bands in the state held a convention.

Several groups of young people had been organized by the Battle Creek church at various times, and in the early 1890s there was a young women's Dorcas Society that met in the home of Uriah Smith.

The Ohio Conference led the others in giving formal recognition to the young people's groups. At the camp meeting held in the summer of 1899, a resolution was passed forming an organization of "Christian Volunteers" who signed this pledge of service: "Recognizing the preciousness of God's gift to me, I volunteer for service for Him anywhere in the wide world that His Spirit may lead, and in any form of service that He may direct."

In 1900 the young people of Germany formed a youth organization within the church.

The General Conference Committee, recognizing the need for coordinated leadership, asked the Sabbath School Department of the General Conference in 1901 to take charge of the young people's work. This arrangement continued until 1907, when the rapidly expanding youth activities led a General Conference council, meeting in Gland, Switzerland, in May 1907 to vote that "a special department, with the necessary officers, be created, the same to be known as the Young People's Department of the General Conference" (General Conference Bulletin [1909], p. 327). M. E. Kern, who had been active in youth leadership in the Middle West, was appointed “chairman” of the new department, and Matilda Erickson (Andross) its secretary. A seven-member advisory committee was also appointed.

At a Sabbath school and young people’s convention held at Mount Vernon, Ohio, July 10—20, 1907, a distinctive name, Young People’s Society of Missionary Volunteers, was chosen for the youth organization. At the General Conference session of 1909 a resolution was passed that mapped plans for separate Junior MV Societies in the churches, and for the training of leaders. This was the beginning of a specialized work for youth who are in the formative years of 10 to 16.

The first 10 years of the department’s history were a period of rapid advance. Already in 1907 there was a Young People’s Day in the church calendar; the Standard of Attainment course for senior youth and the senior reading course were begun, and reports on the progress of the youth work in Africa and British Guiana were being sent in.

The next year, 1908, the Morning Watch calendar was inaugurated and the junior reading course was selected. In 1909, at the time of the General Conference session, the department was formally recognized as part of the General Conference organization, as prescribed by the General Conference Constitution. The Morning Watch idea caught the imagination of the MVs overseas; the young people of Japan and Germany had calendars in their own language for the first time in 1909. Two years later, in 1911, a reading course in German was being offered to the young people of Germany, and, on the opposite side of the globe, Young People’s Societies were being organized in Korea.

By 1912 the department’s work had grown to the extent that it required the services of a field secretary, and Meade MacGuire was asked to assume the responsibility. In 1913 Spanish-speaking young people received a Morning Watch and a reading course in their language. In the same year a Young People’s Society was formed in the country of Hungary, in the heart of Europe.

In 1914 the newly founded Church Officer’s Gazette began to carry programs for the senior and junior youth meetings, Morning Watch calendars were printed for the first time in China, and Swedish and Danish-Norwegian reading courses were begun. The first overseas convention of young people’s workers met in Shanghai, China, in that same year.

In 1915 the Senior Bible Year reading plan was initiated, and an important council dealing with the developing work of the young people’s department convened in St. Helena, California.

In 1916 the first census of the youth in the SDA Church was taken; and the union MV departments were given administrative responsibilities in the young people’s work hitherto carried by the General Conference Missionary Volunteer Department itself.

In the tenth year of the department’s existence (1917), the Junior Bible Year reading plan was begun. In April of that year a special issue of the Youth’s Instructor commemorated the tenth anniversary of the organization of the department on the General Conference level.

Shortly after this the department developed additional reading plans for the youth of the church, and in the twenties laid special emphasis on the work for the junior-age groups. In 1926 the first JMV (junior MV) camp was conducted at Town Line Lake in Michigan. In 1928 the Vocational Honors (now AY Honors) came into existence.

Also in 1928 the first youth congress was held. It met in Chemnitz, in the eastern part of Germany, for the young people of Europe. Some 3,000 delegates and visitors came together from all parts of the continent, except Russia, to share their experiences and to learn how to be better Missionary Volunteers.

By 1930 the Master Comrade class (later known as the Master Guide class) had come into existence, and 53 Master Comrades were invested with their pins in 1931 (see Adventist Youth Classes). To aid in the developing camp program the Camp Leader's Handbook was published in 1932; and an Advanced Study and Service League was inaugurated in 1939. The league embraced four lines of study to prepare MVs to conduct cottage meetings, to engage in general missionary work of the church, and ultimately to hold public meetings.

In 1946 the department introduced the Character Classics reading plan. In 1971 the name was changed to Encounter. In 1947, 12,000 eager young people gathered in the Civic Auditorium at San Francisco for the first North American youth congress. At that time the "Share Your Faith" slogan and program were introduced. A year later two congresses were held in Europe, one in Prague, Czechoslovakia, the city of John Huss, and the other at Watford, in England.

In 1950 the General Conference officially endorsed the Pathfinder Clubs, which had been conducted under various names throughout the country since the early 1920s, and which from 1944 to 1950 had been developed by the Pacific Union Conference.

Another European congress, attended by delegates from North America as well, was held in Paris in 1951. Six thousand young people gathered there. In that same year the Youth Department inaugurated the MV Program Kit, a quarterly magazine that presented program and leadership guidance for the Young People's Societies. In 1975 the magazine became a free journal printed by the department and distributed to division and union youth leaders for their fields. In 1952 the MV Legion of Honor was introduced. This program has since been discontinued.

The youth of the Americas gathered for the Pan-American youth congress in 1953 in San Francisco. Its theme was "Christ Above All"; its emphasis, outpost evangelism.

In 1960 the Festival of the Holy Scriptures was the name of the third North American youth congress, held at Atlantic City, New Jersey. A world youth congress was conducted in Zurich in the summer of 1969 with 10,000 youth present. Many overseas division congresses have also been conducted.

In 1985 the Youth Department became part of the Church Ministries Department of the General Conference.

Secretaries: M. E. Kern, 1907—1930; H. T. Elliott, 1931—1933; Alfred W. Peterson, 1934—1946; E. W. Dunbar, 1946—1954; Theodore Lucas, 1955—1970; J. H. Hancock, 1970—1974.

Directors: J. H. Hancock, 1974—1980; Leo Ranzolin, 1980—1985.

Youth Evangelism

YOUTH EVANGELISM. See Adventist Youth Community Service; Adventist Youth Societies; Lay Evangelism; Church Ministries Department; “Share Your Faith”.

Youth Happiness (braille)

YOUTH HAPPINESS (braille). See Christian Record Services, Inc.

Youth Ministry Accent

YOUTH MINISTRY ACCENT. (1975— ; formerly MV Kit, June, 1951—1975). A leadership and program magazine for those who work with young people. It began as a quarterly youth leadership journal, plus a special March Missionary Volunteer Week of Prayer issue, printed by Southern Publishing Association for the General Conference Youth Department. From 1951 to 1974 MV Kit was a 130-page subscription journal. Since 1975 Accent has been printed by the department and distributed in bulk free to the local conferences in North America and a limited number sent to divisions overseas. The journal contains local church youth ministry resource materials for both senior and junior youth.

Editors: Mildred Johnson, 1951—1957; Don Yost, 1957—1961; Lowell Litten, 1961—1970; James Joiner, 1970—1972; Donald John, 1972—1975; James Joiner, 1975—1990; Mike Stevenson, 1990—1992; Israel Leito, 1992—1993; David Wong, 1994— .

Youth's Instructor, The

YOUTH'S INSTRUCTOR, THE (1852—1970; weekly; RH; file in RH, with exception of vol. 4, 1856; vol. 5, 1857; vol. 36, 1888; vol. 37, 1889; vol. 37, 1889, in Ellen White Estate, Inc.). A 24-page paper for readers aged 16 through 30.

Beginning. The Youth's Instructor was launched by James White as an eight-page monthly in August 1852. He had announced the forthcoming paper in this way: "We design publishing a small monthly paper, containing matter for the benefit of the youth. And we are satisfied that our brethren and sisters will agree with us, that something of the kind is very much needed. The children should have a paper of their own, one that will interest and instruct them.

"We intend to give four or five lessons, in the form of questions and answers, in each number, one for each week for Sabbath-School lessons. . . .

"We publish this paper on our own responsibility, and think it duty to set the price at twenty five cents for a volume of twelve numbers, to be paid in advance, or within three months from the date of the first number" (Review and Herald 3:37, July 8, 1852).

The fiftieth anniversary issue (50:250, Aug. 7, 1902) states that it was "founded August 9, 1852."

The first-page article in the first issue observed: "The young, at this day, are exposed to many evils and dangers, and they must have right instruction to enable them to know how to shun them."

The editor wrote on page 2: "We give four Sabbath Lessons in this number, one for each week, and hope the parents will establish Sabbath Schools, even where there are but two or three children in a place. And we expect the children will read them over many times, so as to be able to answer all the questions. . . .

"We design that the Instructor shall be filled with sensible matter, not only for the benefit of small children, but for the instruction of the youth from sixteen to twenty years of age.

"As we wished to state the condition of many of the youth, and the object of the Instructor, in this short address, we shall be excused for saying so much to the parents."

The first nine issues carried this sentence in the masthead: "Its object is, to teach the young the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus, and thereby help them to a correct understanding of the Holy Scriptures."

Since its founding, the magazine was published by what is now the Review and Herald Publishing Association. It was issued first at Rochester, New York, then at Battle Creek, Michigan. Volume 51, number 35, Sept. 1, 1903, began the Washington, D.C., address; and after volume 54, number 23, June 5, 1906, the magazine was issued at the Takoma Park plant.

From 1852 through 1870, page size was approximately 7" x 10" (18 cm. x 26 cm.). After minor variations, it was enlarged to 10½" x 15½" (27 cm. x 40 cm.), but in 1908 it was standardized at 8½" x 11½" (22 cm. x 30 cm.).

Three issues appeared in 1852, in August, October, and December. The 11 numbers comprising volume 1 concluded with a 16-page "Nos. 11 & 12" in August 1853. The next issue did not appear until January 1854, beginning volume 2.

The paper appeared as a monthly through 1869, as a semimonthly in 1870 and 1871, and returned to monthly status in 1872. The December 1878 issue announced that "to meet the wishes of very many of our readers, we have decided to print the Instructor once a week. . . . The monthly Instructor will be continued its present size, and at the old price, for those who prefer it."

A four-page weekly issue began Jan. 1, 1879. The eight-page monthly was discontinued with the December 1880 issue. The weekly was published continuously until April 1970, varying in size from 8 to 32 pages, the standard being 24.

Contributors. Readers were encouraged to write for the paper from the outset. Issue number 1 solicited, "We also invite our young friends to write. Do not try to imitate any one; but write, in a simple style, your own views, experience and feelings."

Ellen White described the circumstances under which her editor-husband produced some of his copy: "From time to time we went out to attend Conferences in different parts of the field. My husband preached, sold books, and labored to extend the circulation of the paper [Review and Herald]. We traveled by private conveyance, and stopped at noon to feed our horse by the roadside, and to eat our lunch. Then with paper and pencil, on the cover of our dinner box or the top of his hat, my husband wrote articles for the Review and Instructor" (1T 91).

During her lifetime Mrs. White appeared as a Youth's Instructor author approximately 500 times. The August 1852 issue presented her article "Communications." Apparently her last article written specifically for first publication in the Instructor was "Following On to Know the Lord," June 9, 1914.

James White explained in the January 1854 issue why some numbers had appeared without Sabbath school lessons, and doing so threw light on his efforts in launching the magazine: "When I commenced its publication, more than a year ago, I then intended to write a Sabbath-school Lesson for every Sabbath in the year. But this I could not do. I have traveled much the past year, and when at home, the Advent Review and the publication of books have occupied my time so that I have had to rob my sleeping hours to write for the Instructor" (Youth's Instructor 2:4, January 1854).

The Youth's Instructor Pen League was started in the fall of 1929 by editor Lora E. Clement. This was a writing contest conducted through the English classes of Seventh-day Adventist academies and colleges in the United States and Canada. Manuscripts produced as a part of the teaching program in writing were judged for their suitability for publication. Those receiving awards or recognition were published in the magazine. It was in continuous operation until publication ceased, with the Advanced Writers Division now functioning on several college campuses.

A 50-installment serial began publication November 1858 and concluded in February 1863. It was by Joseph Bates, beginning under the title "Sailing." Installments two through seven were titled "Incidents in My Past Life" or "Incidents of My Youth." It then became "Incidents in My Past Life" for the remainder of the run.

For several years many articles and stories from non-Seventh-day Adventist sources were reprinted. The April 1853 number mentioned that "in selecting from other books and papers we design to be careful, and give nothing but what will have a tendency to lead the youthful mind to virtue and to God." Reprints were common until 1925, when they began to appear with diminishing frequency. Reprints dropped from more than 270 in 1914 to less than 30 in 1925.

Letters to the editor appeared throughout the magazine's history, being called "Communications" in volume 1, number 1. After Apr. 22, 1958 they appeared as part of the "Grace Notes" column, and excerpts both favorable and unfavorable were used.

Editions. One H. E. Simkin, who, beginning about 1885, worked at the Review and Herald Publishing Association, in his fiftieth anniversary article Aug. 7, 1902 mentioned that "I remember arrangements being made for an 'Australian edition.' Each week after the regular run was finished, we set the date four weeks ahead, and inserted the words just quoted in the date-line. These were sent off early to catch the boats which carried them to Australia for the use of our first missionaries in what then seemed that far-off island continent in the southern hemisphere."

Circulation. A clue to anticipated circulation appears in issue number 1: "The Youth's Instructor will cost about $20 for each no. of 1500 copies." After two years of publication, the following appeared in the September 1854 editorial column: "In order that the Instructor be well sustained, we should have 1200 paying subscribers, or should be able to receipt $25 in each no. At present we send out about 900 copies, and our receipts are about one half what they should be."

Subscribers were receipted through back-page publication of their names and the amounts received weekly.

The Review and Herald Publishing Association report of 1913 listed the circulation of the Instructor at 14,098. The August 1952 figure (one hundredth anniversary) was 50,301.

Before reaching the journal's fiftieth birthday, the editors had visions of a large circulation. A Jan. 6, 1898, editorial included this hope: "Yes, it is the aim of the Instructor publishers to push its circulation up, up, until it reaches a regular paid subscription of 100,000 copies."

Youth Activities. A June 13, 1901, editorial reported that as part of the program for "establishing the young people's work on a firmer basis," the General Conference held that year had recommended that it be made a branch of the Sabbath School Department of the General Conference. This department readjusted its organization to incorporate the new program, and recommended that the Youth's Instructor open a department for "fostering and promoting the interests and growth of the young people's work."

Such a department, titled "Young People's Work," made its initial appearance June 27, 1901. News of the service activities of youth continued to be handled by the magazine.

Temperance Issues. During the period from May 14, 1907, through Mar. 17, 1931, several temperance issues were published. Though none appeared in some years, at least one each came out in 1917, 1919, 1921, and 1931. Articles and testimonials from prominent public officials as well as from church writers advised the readers of the evils of alcohol and tobacco.

Counseling Service. The magazine provided "Answers to Correspondents" from Feb. 5 through Aug. 13, 1907. "Questions and Answers" appeared three times between Aug. 13, 1907, and Apr. 12, 1910. A "Counsel Corner" was conducted by the MV Department of the General Conference, appearing from Jan. 8, 1918, through July 30, 1946. From June 12, 1956, the Counsel Clinic feature provided a similar service for readers, with most of the answers going directly to questioners, and only questions and answers of wide application being placed in print.

Advertising. Advertising began as early as April 1854. That issue carried on page 32 a line advertisement for a "Hymn Book for Youth and Children," then in preparation: "Those who have hymns, original or select and would like to have them published in this collection, will please forward them very soon. The book will probably contain 84 or 100 pages—price 10 or 12½ cents. Send your orders. James White."

The May 1854 number announced under "Hymns for Youth and Children": "We have just published a neat little Hymn Book with the above title, compiled by Anna White. It contains 84 pages, and 117 Hymns—Price 10 cents a copy."

The Dec. 22, 1892, holiday number was published with pink covers. Two pages of advertising promoted a number of items. Display ads included those of the Central Michigan Carriage Co., picturing a buggy; the Eureka Hand Loom, with the picture of a loom; Advance Thresher Company, showing both a separator and a traction engine; and the Battle Creek Bakery Co., with a health food ad.

A display ad for Garland Stoves and Ranges appeared Oct. 6, 1898 and was used a number of times thereafter. The Remington Standard Typewriter Company advertised five times in July and August 1899. The Chicago Writing Machine Company appeared four times in April of 1901.

Four railway systems were advertised during 1898—1903. The Grand Trunk Railway System, running from Apr. 27, 1899, to Jan. 1, 1903, published a timetable for Battle Creek for part of this period.

Editors. The longevity record for Instructor editors is held by Lora E. Clement. She first appeared as an associate editor Mar. 12, 1918. When the name of Fannie Dickerson Chase disappeared as editor on Sept. 12, 1922, Miss Clement's continued as assistant editor. From Sept. 26, 1922, through Mar. 13, 1923, she was listed as acting editor. In the following issue, of Mar. 20, her name was in the editorial box as editor, a post that she held through the issue of Sept. 2, 1952. Her association with the magazine spanned 34 years, the last 30 as editor.

The service period of some early editors is difficult to determine, as their names did not always appear in the editorial box. A fiftieth anniversary article by a former editor, G. W. Amadon, Aug. 7, 1902, provides a partial record of the first years in "A Sketch of the Editorship of the Youth's Instructor." James White, 1852—1853; Anna White, 1854; James White, 1855—1857; G. W. Amadon, 1858—1864; Adelia P. Patten (later Van Horn), 1864—1867; G. W. Amadon, 1867—1869; G. H. Bell, 1869—1871; Jennie R. Trembley, 1871—1873; Jennie A. Merriam, 1873—1875; Mrs. Minerva J. Chapman, 1875—1879; Mrs. Mary K. White and Miss V. A. Merriam, 1879—1880; V. A. Merriam, 1880—1881; Eva Bell (later Giles), 1882—1883; Editorial Committee of Eva Bell Giles, Adolph B. Oyen, Winnie E. Loughborough, 1883; Mr. Minerva J. Chapman, 1884—1889; Winnie E. Loughborough (later Kelsea), 1890—1891; "Editorial Contributors," M. B. Duffie, P. T. Magan, J. O. Corliss, Fannie Bolton, 1891; no editor listed Dec. 30, 1891—Aug. 30, 1894 (however, in his last editorial [42:400, Dec. 20, 1894] N. W. Lawrence, calling himself "the present editor," mentions laying down the responsibilities he has carried "during the three years just passed"); J. H. Durland and M. E. Kellogg, 1895—1896; J. H. Durland, 1897;

W. H. McKee and J. C. Bartholf, 1897—1899; Adelaide Bee Cooper (later Evans), 1899—1904; Fannie M. Dickerson (later Chase), 1904—1922; Lora E. Clement, 1923—1952; Walter T. Crandall, 1952—1970.

Yugoslavia

YUGOSLAVIA. A republic in southeastern Europe. It borders Hungary on the north, Romania and Bulgaria on the east, Macedonia and Albania on the south, and the Adriatic Sea, Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Croatia on the west. It has an area of 39,449 square miles (102,000 square kilometers) and a population (1994) of approximately 10 million, mainly Serbian, Montenegrin, and Albanian. The official language is Serbo-Croatian; Macedonian, Hungarian, and Albanian are also spoken. The main religion is Serbian Orthodox.

The South Slavs (mainly Serbs, Croats, Macedonians, Montenegrins, and Slovenes), who form the major part of the population of Yugoslavia (literally, “the land of the South Slavs”), migrated from the east into what is now Yugoslavia about the sixth century A.D. Under the influence of the Franks in the north and the Byzantines in the south they were converted to Christianity during the eighth and ninth centuries. After the great schism of the Christian church in 1054, the northern tribes became Roman Catholics and the southern tribes, Greek Orthodox. For centuries, the Slovenes were under the domination of Austria, their northern neighbor. The Serbs and Croats established independent kingdoms, which lasted until they were overthrown by successive invasions of Hungarians and Turks, beginning in the twelfth century. The Turks controlled the area for 500 years until near the close of the nineteenth century, and during this period many Slavs accepted Islam. At the close of World War I the South Slavs united to form an independent kingdom of Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes. In 1929 the country was named Yugoslavia.

During World War II the Yugoslav government joined the Axis powers, but resistance to Germany was prevalent among the Yugoslav people. In the mid-1940s a Communist government under Josip Broz Tito gained control of Yugoslavia and remained in power until 1990. In 1991 and 1992 Croatia, Slovenia, Macedonia, and Bosnia and Herzegovina all declared independence from Yugoslavia. In 1992 Montenegro and Serbia (including Kosovo and Vojvodina) formed a new Yugoslavia.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Yugoslavia is part of the South-East European Union, comprising the North and South conferences and part of the Southwest Conference within the Trans-European Division. Statistics (1994) for the South-East European Union: churches, 190; members, 6,973. Headquarters: Belgrade, Yugoslavia.

Statistics for the conferences—North Conference: churches 87; members, 3,168. Headquarters: Novi Sad, Yugoslavia. South Conference: churches, 84; members, 3,164. Headquarters: Nis, Yugoslavia. Southwest Conference: churches, 19; members, 641. Headquarters: Sarajevo, Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Institutions

Institutions. Adventist Seminary (Croatia); Old People's Home ("Konak"); Yugoslavian Publishing House.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. When the Seventh-day Adventist message entered the Balkan Peninsula in the last decades of the nineteenth century, the western area was divided into three parts. The northern and eastern parts became part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire (Vojvodina, Croatia, Slovenia, Bosnia, and Herzegovina); Serbia and Montenegro were independent states in the east and southwest. The southern part (Macedonia, Kosovo, and southern Serbia) fell under Turkish domination.

Records indicate that the Seventh-day Adventist message was first preached in Macedonia in 1880 when A. Seefried went to Skoplje as a representative of the British and Foreign Bible Society. For nine years he actively preached the message in Skoplje and in Macedonia and Albania. Later he was transferred to Constanza, Romania, on the Black Sea, where he died in 1927. Two years after his arrival in Skoplje he was imprisoned for two months. During that time he was assigned to distributing food to the prisoners, thus coming to know them. Two Macedonians were comforted as they listened to his reading of the experience of Paul, who, although innocent, spent many days in prison. An 82-year-old Albanian also listened attentively. One day he sadly commented, "These two Macedonians have heard words of comfort and encouragement from your black book because they are innocent, but I am guilty of killing a man. Surely there can be no comfort for me in your book." Seefried read to him about the thief on the cross who turned to God. After listening to the Bible for six weeks, the Albanian confessed one evening, "I now believe with all my heart that Jesus has forgiven my sins too. He is my personal Saviour." The following morning when Seefried brought the food to the prisoners, the old Albanian was dead. His Macedonian friends testified that he had spent the entire night in prayer, thanking God for the message of salvation. He had finally fallen asleep at daybreak, and soon after died in his sleep.

Early records tell us that near the end of the past century, Dr. Garabet, an Armenian physician, brought his family from Constantinople to Radoviste, Macedonia, and began to preach the SDA message. He carried on a correspondence with Ellen White and Dr. J. H. Kellogg. A young schoolteacher, Atina Dimeva, whom he interested in the SDA message, was baptized. He then encouraged her to attend the Adventist American Medical Missionary College in Battle Creek, where she studied for four years. Members of her family still belong to the SDA church in Skoplje.

After the Balkan wars of 1912 and 1913, SDA book evangelists spread the message in Macedonia until they were stopped by World War I. In 1919 a publishing house was established in Novi Sad. It was transferred to Belgrade in 1931, where it functioned until it had to be closed in 1941. In 1923 Albin Mocnik baptized seven in Prilep, thus organizing the first SDA church in Macedonia.

In 1890 the SDA message was first preached in the Vojvodina area, north of Belgrade. On receiving an invitation from Johann Rotmayer and a group of SDA observers, L. R. Conradi visited Cluj (now in Romania). Rotmayer's daughter, Clara, accepted the truth and moved to Hamburg, where she translated SDA literature into the Hungarian language. This literature was later mailed throughout the country.

She told Conradi that the pastor of the Reformed Church in Zrenjanin, Jozsef Szalay, was publishing a Hungarian language periodical with the motto "We are friends of all who accept Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour." This caught Conradi's attention, and in 1893 he arranged to meet the pastor. Conradi was eager to translate and spread SDA publications in Serbian and Hungarian. Thus the two men formed a joint Adventist Reformed Evangelical Society to scatter SDA publications. A businessman from Zrenjanin who belonged to the Reformed Church provided the funds for the publication of the first series of tracts, and a Reformed Church book evangelist was active in their distribution.

The first tracts in the Serbian language were printed in Hamburg between 1893 and 1896, although there were no baptized SDAs in Serbia. Jozsef Szalay, the Reformed pastor, published Steps to Christ in Hungarian and through his journal spread the health reform message, adding that SDAs surrender not only their souls but also their bodies to Christ.

As a result of the interest aroused in the message, a young pioneer SDA minister, J. F. Huenergardt, was sent to Cluj in 1898. He also heard of interests in Mokrin and visited in the area several times. He was joyful to discover that Jovan Surd, a young watchmaker from Arad, was going from house to house repairing watches and preaching the truth in the homes as he was able. Several had already accepted the Sabbath in Mokrin, where he had remained for two months before leaving to scatter the truth in new areas. As a result of Surd's efforts, a small group was gathering in the home of the first convert, Sima Janic, in Mokrin. Thus the first Sabbath school in territory that now is Yugoslavia was founded in the village of Mokrin in 1899, later to become the first organized church in the area of Banat.

In 1905, in the Serbian village of Kumane, 75 miles (120 kilometers) north of Belgrade, a local Hebrew merchant was surprised to read in his newspaper that a Christian baker in Germany had joined a peculiar religion and as a result closed his shop on Saturday. When the Hebrew merchant showed the news item to Lazar Eremic, a Serbian peasant, Eremic commented, "That man in Germany is right. According to the Bible, the seventh day is the true Sabbath." He had his son write several letters to Germany trying to find the Sabbathkeepers. He was finally told by the British and Foreign Bible Society that there were such people in Hamburg. His next letter was addressed to "the Sabbathkeeping people in Hamburg." When Huenergardt received this letter, he visited Kumane and contacted the Serbian Sabbathkeepers. Because he could not talk to the people in their own language, the village barber was called in to interpret. He, in turn, developed such an interest that he closed his shop on Saturday, his busiest day, and joined in keeping the seventh-day Sabbath.

In 1902 Conradi reported meeting in Hungary with 50 brethren, including some Serbians, who requested that a minister be sent to preach to them in their own language. In 1905 Huenergardt met with a number of Serbian Sabbathkeepers near Belgrade who had not yet accepted the full truth. After studying with them for considerable time, he was impressed to present the Spirit of Prophecy as one of the distinguishing signs of the remnant church, one which had contributed to the unity of the church. He reported an immediate change in the attitude of his hearers. The greatest opponent declared, "I shall not oppose God." Three months later the church paper carried the good news that a local church had been organized in Kumane on July 12, 1905, following the baptism of eight persons. The elder of this new church was Lazar Emeric, the Serbian peasant, who had read the report of the German baker.

An SDA minister, Petar Todor, with his wife, was sent to pastor the little group. Thus there were the required 10 members stipulated by the government to form a church.

After this slow beginning, spanning 25 years, the work in Yugoslavia began to make rapid progress. In 10 months a second church was organized in Mokrin. In 1908 the first conference session was held in Novo Milosevo, with 200 in attendance. Soon members were reported in Belgrade, Zagreb, and Maribor. Until 1909, when the Adriatic Mission field was founded, all the Slav churches belonged to the Hungarian field. Changes in organization were again made in 1911. At that time there were groups with 13—17 believers each in 16 towns. In 1912 the Danubian Union Conference was organized in Budapest with J. F. Huenergardt as president. At the same time the Adriatic Mission field was divided into the Tisa-Sava Conference with headquarters at Novi Sad; Robert Schillinger, president; and the Adriatic Conference, headquarters in Zagreb; V. Schäfer, president.

With the formation of Yugoslavia at the end of World War I, the Yugoslavian Union Conference was founded in Novi Sad in 1925, and later transferred to Belgrade. In addition to the local conferences in Novi Sad and Zagreb, two new conferences were set up: the Southern Conference in Nis, in 1911; and the Southwestern Conference in Sarajevo, in 1956.

The publishing house, established by Robert Schillinger in 1909, contributed greatly to the advance of the work in what was later Yugoslavia. All printing work is now done in state-owned publishing houses, including the church paper. Members give church publications to their relatives and friends. Thousands of Bible correspondence school lessons have also been given out.

Pioneers in Yugoslavia

Pioneers in Yugoslavia. Besides the following, see separate articles on J. F. Huenergardt and Robert Schillinger.

Petar Todor (fl. 1904). The first Seventh-day Adventist minister born in Yugoslavia to work in his own country. He and his wife were baptized in Arad in 1900. Three years later, at a conference in Cluj, he was chosen to serve as a Bible worker and the following year was sent to pastor groups of friends of the truth among the Serbians. He traveled with Huenergardt and translated for him. Soon after his ordination in 1909 he contracted tuberculosis and died.

Albin Mocnik (1888—1973). Born in Slovenia in 1888, he accepted the Seventh-day Adventist faith in Bremen, Germany, in 1906. After spending two years at Friedensau Seminary preparing for the ministry, he, with Robert Schillinger, Max Ludewig, and Alfred Thomas, returned to Yugoslavia. He worked in Zagreb and many other places raising up groups of SDAs. A gifted poet, he prepared the first SDA hymnal in Yugoslavia in 1917. He also published many books and periodicals. In 1923 he was named president of the Adriatic Mission field, and in 1926, of the Yugoslavian Union Conference. He was a teacher at the training school, and at the same time editor of the church paper.

Max Ludewig (1884—1969). After his conversion in 1905, he studied at Friedensau, where Mocnik inspired him to prepare to work among the Slav people. With Mocnik he organized the first church in Belgrade in 1910. Later he served as conference president, both in Novi Sad and in Zagreb.

Yugoslavian Adventist Seminary

YUGOSLAVIAN ADVENTIST SEMINARY. See Adventist Seminary \(Croatia\).

Yugoslavian Publishing House

YUGOSLAVIAN PUBLISHING HOUSE (Adventisticka Knjizara “Preporod”). A publishing organization without printing facilities operated by the Yugoslavian Union Conference at Belgrade, Yugoslavia. All of its publications are printed in state-owned publishing houses. The first Seventh-day Adventist publishing house in Yugoslavia was founded in Novi Sad by Robert Schillinger in 1909 and was in reality a branch of the Hamburg Publishing House. Znaci Vremena (“Signs of the Times”) was printed there. In 1919 it became independent of Hamburg and changed its name, using the name of a recently baptized well-known printer and businessman, Gavra Sasic. It was moved to Belgrade in 1931, this time under the name of Izdavacka knjizara “Preporod” (“The Revival Publishing House”). A branch established in Zagreb under the name of Zivot i zdravlje (“Life and Health”) remained active until the early years of World War II, when both it and the plant in Belgrade were discontinued.

After World War II it was impossible to reactivate the publishing house. All SDA literature had to be printed with the Seventh-day Adventist Church as the publishers. In 1965 a special department for this work was set up for the Yugoslavian Union Conference. In 1972 this union department was reorganized as Adventisticka knjizara “Preporod” (“The Adventist Revival Publishing House”).

Literature: The first SDA books in the Serbian language appeared in 1909 (Steps to Christ and His Glorious Appearing). The same year, the Hamburg Publishing House published the first tracts in Croatian. Three years later the first Slovenian literature appeared. Begun in 1910, Znaci Vremena (“Signs of the Times”), the first periodical in Serbian, continued until the beginning of World War I, when its publication was interrupted. It resumed publication in 1968. In 1971 both Serbian and Croatian editions began to be issued from Zagreb.

In 1910 the first church paper, Srbski Radenik (“The Serbian Worker”), was published. Its name was changed to Misionski poslanik (“The Mission Envoy”) in 1917, and again in 1924 to Adventni Glasnik (“The Advent Messenger”).

The first editor of the church paper was Albin Mocnik. Later editors were Nikola Slankamenac, Anton Lorencin, Mirko Golubic, and Milan Susljic. In 1993 the Adventist Review was published in Serbian, Croatian, and Hungarian with different national names for each paper.

Many periodicals have been published for the benefit of friends of the truth. Much of the credit for preparing and publishing SDA literature in the eight different languages of the people of this area goes to pioneers Robert Schillinger and Albin Mocnik, and to those who have continued their work.

Literature Evangelists: The development of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Yugoslavia has been closely connected with the work of literature evangelists. The first to dedicate himself to spreading SDA publications was Mita Pavkov of Zrenjanin, in the 1890s. The first book evangelists appeared in 1910. Early records include the names of many of the pioneer workers. These self-sacrificing, diligent workers went everywhere, counting no sacrifice too great for spreading their literature and presenting the gospel.

When the Yugoslavian Union Conference was organized in 1925, Ziva Krdzalin was named the publishing secretary and continued to carry this responsible work until 1942. After World War II, when SDA publications could no longer be disseminated by book evangelists, this activity was assumed by the local church members. By scattering these publications among their relatives and friends, the members have distributed hundreds of thousands of books, tracts, periodicals, and Bible correspondence school lessons. In addition, they have distributed invitation cards, prospectuses, and SDA radio programs of the transmissions known as Glas Nade (“The Voice of Hope”).

In the early 1990s, when Croatia and Slovenia declared independence from Yugoslavia, the Znaci Vremena (Signs of the Times) branch in Zagreb, Croatia, became the Croatian-Slovenian Publishing House, with branch houses Izdavastvo Adventistickog teoloskog Fakulteta Marusevec (Adventist College of Theology Publishing), in Marusevec, Croatia; Zivot; Zdravlje (Life and Health), in Zagreb; and Znamenja Casa (Signs of the Times) in Ljubljana, Slovenia.

In 1994 the house was publishing seven periodicals in these languages: Albanian, Croatian, Hungarian, Macedonian, Romanian, Serbian, and Slovakian.

Managers: R. Madacki, 1920—1921; N. Slankamenac, 1921—1924; G. Sasic, 1924—1926; C. Shashich, 1926—1927; R. Schillinger, 1927—1928; P. Brennwald, 1928—1932; M. Trifunac, 1932—1933; W. Schupnik, 1933—1946; M. Golubic, 1968—1971; A. Kanacki, 1971—1975; V. Subert, 1975—1980; D. Radosavljevic, 1980—1985; J. Lorencin, 1985—1991; T. Stefanovic, 1993—1994; M. Zivonovic, 1994— .

Yuka Adventist Hospital

YUKA ADVENTIST HOSPITAL. A 77-bed hospital operated by the Zambia Union, situated in western Zambia, 25 miles (40 kilometers) west of the Zambesi River.

Yuka started in 1935 as a small dispensary of the Liumba Hill Mission headed by Petra Hovig. In 1948, because of the massive patient output, a site overlooking the Leute River was selected by Dr. C. Paul Bringle and W. E. Vail for a hospital to serve the medical needs of the peoples from the Caprivi Strip of Namibia, northern Botswana, southern Angola, and Zambia. Building construction was begun by Frederick George Thomas but was cut short because of financial constraints. The Thirteenth Sabbath Offering overflow of 1953 finally helped complete the hospital. This was followed by the arrival of Helen Furber, the first matron, and Dr. C. J. Birkenstock, the first medical director.

In 1993 the government recognized Yuka as a 77-bed hospital, but actual yearly average for the past 10 years is 100. It mainly serves the Kalabo district, one of the three poorest in the 56 districts comprising the republic of Zambia. The terrain is marshy and sandy, being the tail end of the Kalahari Desert. Even with a four-wheel drive vehicle, travel gets bogged down. In the middle of nowhere, it is located approximately 400 miles (640 kilometers) west of Lusaka, the capital city. The majority of the population belong to the Lozi and Mbunda tribes, which subsist by farming (cassava, maize, millet, pumpkin), raising cattle, and fishing.

Aside from being a general hospital, Yuka started a Leprosy Control Program initiated by John Skuse in 1974 with funds from the Zambia Copper Mines. During the first year of operation, 200 cases were diagnosed among schoolchildren. The program made a major impact with the reconstructive surgeries of Dr. Ray Foster and the introduction of the Rehabilitation and Crafts Program by Paul Giblett in 1979. Lepers were taught skills on how to make baskets, handicrafts, mats, and various wood carvings as a means of livelihood. Finished products reached Lusaka and even the neighboring countries. Massive screening was done in 1985 through a mobile team headed by Maxwell Kazoka, sponsored by the Christoffel-Blindenmission (CBM), resulting in the diagnosis and treatment of 1,773 lepers. Meticulous follow-ups with the use of multidrug therapy saw a drastic drop to 175 cases by 1987. Finally the program worked itself to its demise, ending in the closure of the leper ward in 1991 and the integration of the chronic patients in the main hospital wards.

Eye diseases comprise 10 percent of the inpatient admissions and outpatient consultations. This prompted the hospital to start the Blindness Prevention Program in 1985 with the financial backing of CBM. This consists of a mobile eye team plowing through the sands of the west and a station management team supervised by Dr. Boateng Wiafe, an ophthalmologist.

Tuberculosis makes up 12 percent of all the admissions, with the hospital designating a 45-bed ward to its treatment. With the prevalence of TB in conjunction with AIDS, the ward is bursting at its seams, demanding the expansion of the present facility. The Ministry of Health had designated Yuka as the center for tuberculosis treatment.

In March 1985, because of local politicians wanting to manage the affairs of the hospital, the church decided to hand over the institution to the government. This was aborted by the president himself, His Excellency Dr. Kenneth Kaunda, who appeared on television urging Zambia Union to continue with its operations. This was immediately followed by a spot visit by Prime Minister Nalumino Mundia. In April 1992 the newly elected president visited Yuka, citing the hospital as a historical landmark and praising its unique contributions.

Twenty-four hour commercial electricity replaced the two antiquated diesel generators in October 1987, ushering Yuka to the threshold of the twentieth century. Funding totally came from church institutions and individual members miraculously, multiplied by the Lord through the devaluation of the local currency. Carl Wilkens installed the initial cables, and Andrew Herold completed the project.

Since 1982, through the hospital's evangelistic outreach programs, 10 companies were formed with the construction of seven churches. These companies were delegated to the district pastor, but the area is so vast that Yuka had to assist in its supervision. In 1993, with the ardent desire to see that the new members were adequately served, the hospital aided the field office in setting Yuka as a separate district by providing financial assistance equivalent to six months' pay of the pastor and the use of one of the hospital staff houses.

The hospital also was involved in evangelism by conducting an evangelistic crusade in Sikushi—an unentered territory. The efforts of six workers concluded with 105 converts and the opening of an SDA company. Within the hospital, 10 patients were baptized and 49 who had left the church were brought back in.

AIDS victims present a great witnessing avenue. Nearly 50 percent of the patients are HIV positive.

Medical Directors: C. J. Birkenstock, 1955—1960; R. M. Buckley, 1961—1964; C. L. Wical, 1964—1967; Gordon Marsa, 1968—1969; C. L. Wical, 1970—1971; John Werner, 1971—1972; B. W. Nelson, 1972—1973; E. C. Gaines, 1973; K. W. Hart, 1973—1974; R. O. Yeatts, 1974—1975; R. H. Lukens, 1975—1977; L. W. Ramey, 1977—1978; F. D. Solivio, 1981—1986; A. Llaguno, 1986—1988; M. N. Fabriga, 1988—1989; C. Wical, 1989—1991; A. Llaguno, 1992— .

Yukon

YUKON. See British Columbia Conference.

Yungnam Academy

YUNGNAM ACADEMY (Yungnam Sahmyook Joongkodeung Hakkyo). A coeducational boarding institution on the senior high school level, operated by the Southeast Korean Conference at Kyungsan. In 1993 the enrollment on the secondary level was 446; the staff numbered 28.

A strong mission school was established at Kyungsan, Korea, in 1919, when the newly organized South Chosen Mission set up its headquarters there. A mission station had been established at Kyungsan in 1911 by R. C. Wangerin and his wife, who pioneered in both southeast and southwest Korea. When the church was dissolved by the Japanese government during World War II, the school property was taken over and used as a branch public school. In 1952 possession was regained and classes begun on the secondary level for Seventh-day Adventist refugee students, inasmuch as the academy in the Seoul area lay in ruins. When planning for rehabilitation after the Korean War, it was decided to have three academies instead of only one, and the Kyungsan school became one of the three. Thus Yungnam Academy came into being as a recognized junior academy in 1953; it became a full senior academy in April 1954.

Later more orchard and garden land was acquired, and administration, cafeteria, classroom, industrial buildings, and teachers' homes were constructed. A new administration building with eight classrooms was built and an enlarged playground was added in 1973. A main building with 15 classrooms and eight special rooms was added in 1982. A new girls' dormitory was added in 1992.

The industrial training center opened in 1968 offered mechanical drafting, mechanical engineering, metal painting, wood painting, and welding. Seventy-one of the students who have taken these courses have received government licenses. One of the students received the copper medal in a national skill contest in 1973. Later the Industrial Training Center was transferred to Seoul.

Principals: Lee Ueng Joon, 1953—1959; Shin Byung Hoon, 1959—1960; Han Ki Cho, 1960—1961; Hong Hyun So, 1961—1964; Kim Hong Ryang, 1964—1965; H. S. Kim, 1965; H. Y. Kim, 1965—1967; Kim Pyung Kook, 1967—1970; Kim Joon Pal, 1970—1972; Han Ki Chong, 1973—1975; Y. D. Kim, 1975—1979; Kim Dae Sung, 1979—1984; Ko Chan Yeoun, 1984—1989; Chung Jang Whan, 1990—1992; Shin Byung Ho, 1992— .

Z

Zaheerabad Region

ZAHEERABAD REGION. See India; Southern Asia Division.

Zaire

ZAIRE. An independent African state, the former Belgian colony of the Congo, but independent since June 30, 1960 (not to be confused with its smaller neighbor, Congo). It is bounded by the Atlantic Ocean, Cabinda, the Congo (Brazzaville), the Central African Republic, Sudan, Uganda, Rwanda, Burundi, Tanzania, Zambia, and Angola.

It has an area of 905,563 square miles (2.3 million square kilometers) and an estimated population (1994) of 42.6 million. Seventy percent of the people are Christians, 10 percent are Muslims, and the rest animists. Most of the people live by agriculture and timber. The country is rich in minerals, exporting large quantities of copper, diamonds, gold, zinc, and uranium. The population of Zaire is made up of more than 200 African tribes, mostly of Bantu origin. The early 1960s were marked by much civil war and bloodshed, largely because of intertribal animosities. Economic difficulties, prevalent in the 1980s, have worsened in the 1990s.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of the republic of Zaire constitutes the Zaire Union, a part of the Africa-Indian Ocean Division. Statistics (1992): churches, 1,003; members, 257,742; church or elementary schools, 63; ordained ministers, 211; licensed ministers, 148; teachers, 582. Headquarters: Lubumbashi.

Statistics (1992) for the fields—East Kasai Field: churches, 56; members, 9,698; church or elementary schools, 7; ordained ministers, 15; licensed ministers, 5. Headquarters: Mbuji-Mayi. East Zaire Field: churches, 363; members, 62,685; church or elementary schools, 21; ordained ministers, 48; licensed ministers, 27; teachers, 134. Headquarters: Goma. North Shaba Field: churches, 56; members, 23,392; church or elementary schools, 13; ordained ministers, 25; licensed ministers, 7; teachers, 46. Headquarters: Kamina. North Zaire Field: churches, 143; members, 29,227; church or elementary schools, 5; ordained ministers, 33; licensed ministers, 22; teachers, 190. Headquarters: Butembo. South Kivu Field: churches, 125; members, 19,503; church or elementary schools, 3; ordained ministers, 22; licensed ministers, 14; teachers, 80. Headquarters: Bukavu. South Shaba Field: churches, 47; members, 16,009; church or elementary schools, 4; ordained ministers, 11; licensed ministers, 20. Headquarters: Lubumbashi. Upper Zaire Field: churches, 47; members, 10,376; church or elementary schools, 2; ordained ministers, 15; teachers, 14. Headquarters: Kisangani. West Kasai Field: churches, 180; members, 87,866; church or elementary schools, 7; ordained ministers, 32; licensed ministers, 42. Headquarters: Kananga. West Zaire Field: churches, 4; members, 5,055; church or elementary schools, 2; ordained ministers, 2; licensed ministers, 14; teachers, 19. Headquarters: Kinshasa. Zaire Equatorial Field: churches, 3; members, 114; ordained ministers, 1; licensed ministers, 1. Headquarters: Mbandaka.

Institutions

Institutions. Lukanga Adventist Institute; Rwamiko Institute; Songa Adventist Hospital; Songa Institute. There are also several clinics and dispensaries.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. Beginnings. Seventh-day Adventist work in the republic of Zaïre began in 1920 when Christopher Robinson and Gilbert Willmore arrived to begin work. Willmore soon left and Christopher Robinson and his wife laid a firm foundation at Songa Mission, 400 miles (650 kilometers) northwest of Lubumbashi, among the Baluba people. A few months later Raleigh Robinson and his wife, who spent 15 years pioneering in Zaïre, arrived at Songa. Two years later, A. C. Le Butt established the second station, the Katanga Mission (now South Shaba Field) on the outskirts of Lubumbashi, and opened a school. Prior to 1925 the work in Zaïre was under the direction of the Zambesi Union, with headquarters in Bulawayo, Rhodesia. In that year the Zaïre Union was organized, with headquarters in Lubumbashi.

From 1932 to 1961 there were 11 Seventh-day Adventist stations in the country, each with two or more missionary dwellings, a primary school, a church, and in most cases a dispensary. These were contained in four local field organizations as follows: The South Zaïre Field (organized 1954) embraced Shaba province and the territories of Kasongo and Kabambare in the Maniema district of Kivu province. The headquarters were in Lubumbashi, but in 1959 they were moved to Kamina, at which time it consisted of four stations: the Songa Station and South Shaba Station, already mentioned as the first two stations in Zaïre, the Bigobo Station, and the Lulengele Station (the last named was, for a time, the center of the Kasai Project).

Bigobo Station, some 50 miles (80 kilometers) east of Kongolo, was a successor of Kikamba Station, established in 1924 among the Baluba people near Kongolo. Because of unhealthful climatic conditions and a declining population, it was moved in 1930 to its present site and renamed.

The North Zaïre Field (organized 1956) included the Orientale province, except for the district of Kisangani, and the territories of Beni and Lubero in the Kivu province. The field contained three stations, with headquarters at Rwese.

Rwese Station is situated on the top of a range of mountains at an elevation of about 7,500 feet (2,300 meters), and consequently is cool even though it lies within a mile (1.6 kilometers) of the equator. A. A. Matter, Sr., established this station in 1941. The Banande people live in the area, which is heavily populated. The work of Rwese Station extends north to the Ruwenzori Mountains and to the East Zaïre Field in the south. At the station is the Anderson Memorial church, a landmark, built with a donation made by W. H. Anderson, a veteran SDA missionary.

Nebasa Station, organized and built in 1948 in the forest near the northern border of Zaïre, and Talla Station, “the mission of light,” established 1949 among the Alur people near Mahagi, on the border of Uganda, north of Lake Mobutu, were built on land grants obtained through D. E. Delhove, then a member of the governor-general’s council.

The East Zaïre Field (organized in 1960) embraced the province of Kivu (except the territories of Beni and Lubero in the north), and the district of Kisangani in the Orientale province. In the late 1940s and early 1950s many immigrants, including many Seventh-day Adventists, from overpopulated northern Rwanda moved into the less-populated area near Masisi in Zaïre. The first SDA worker to be sent into the area was J. Ndenziki. A district was organized, and in 1955 a station was built. In 1960 the district was organized into the Central Kivu Field and expanded to include Kirundu Station.

The Kirundu Station (established 1927) was cut out of the thick Ituri forest, 180 miles (230 kilometers) southeast of Kisangani, to serve the Malengola and other small tribes. A girls' school opened there contributed toward lifting home standards and making the gospel more effective. Throughout the mid-1900s Kirundu Station had many churches and companies on the way to Kisangani and southward to Lowa and beyond along the Zaïre River.

Fizi district, near the northwest shore of Lake Tanganyika, was entered in 1951, when a student from the area returned from three years in school at Bigobo Station and began to preach and to conduct a school. In response to subsequent appeals, more workers—a pastor and three teachers—were sent. In 1960 it became part of the Central Kivu Field (now the South Kivu Field).

The West Zaïre Field (organized 1961) was composed of the Equatorial, Kasai, and Kinshasa provinces. Seventh-day Adventist work entered this area through immigrants from a point on the Zaïre River, 150 miles (240 kilometers) east of Kisangani. In 1921 they belonged to a group of radicals that had been exiled there by the government from their homes near the mouth of the Zaïre River. D. E. Delhove, then working at nearby Kirundu Station, held evangelistic meetings among these people at Lowa, and organized a church.

In 1954 a group of government officials sent to examine the exiles were so impressed by the transformation in the lives of the SDA converts that they recommended that they be permitted to return to their former homes. Many of those repatriated in 1955 returned to the village of Nkwanza, about halfway between Kinshasa and the coast. Here an attempt was made to open new work as well as to shepherd the members who had moved back to the Bas-Zaïre. After considerable difficulties a church, a large primary school, and workers' homes were constructed at Nkwanza. Because the government, wishing to avoid religious pressure, would not allow new stations with European missionaries any farther west than Kinshasa, property was purchased in that city.

Lulengele Station in West Zaïre Field was established in 1949 in the center of Zaïre among the Lulua people, 50 miles (80 kilometers) west of Kananga in the province of Kasai. The training school for the West Zaïre Field, formerly at Songa, was operated at Lulengele until 1960 (see Songa Institute). In spite of much civil disorder caused by tribal fighting in the 1950s, Lulengele Station continued to attract students from many areas. During the civil disorders after 1960, when many workers were forced to flee, national leaders continued the work, although for nearly three years no pastor was able to visit the isolated groups. In 1973 the work in the Kasai was separated from the West Zaïre Field and became known as the Kasai Project, under the Zaïre Union administration.

During the period following independence in 1960, great changes took place. Africans were placed in charge of most stations. Some of these leaders, with little or no training, valiantly carried on in spite of trouble from marauding soldiers and other intruders. None of the stations were destroyed, although some looting took place. The union office and mission homes in Lubumbashi were badly damaged during the fighting and completely looted, but no workers lost their lives. Church members in some areas were scattered as a result of tribal and political conflicts. Nearly 100 members fled to their ancestral homes in the province of South Kasai, where no SDAs had ever before lived.

Continued internal strife in 1963 and 1964, together with intertribal warfare in neighboring Rwanda, led to the isolation and occupation of large areas in the central and northeastern regions. Thousands of refugees from Rwanda precipitated a welfare program. Kirundu, Nebasa, and Talla stations were held by insurgents. During this period the message gained access to the Lubumbashi and Kinshasa broadcast stations. Following openings on the Bukavu, Kisangani, Kananga, and Mbuji mayi stations, Swahili programs were added to the French. In July 1966 Kirundu Station was reached using the union Cessna 180. The membership was found to have remained faithful, despite much suffering and persecution.

Lulengele Station, in the Kasai, was reactivated in 1967 and work began on an airstrip. The secondary schools at Lulanga, Kivu, and Songa in the Shaba, were made union institutions. Evangelistic efforts in Bukavu and Goma opened the work in these important centers. In November 1969 a delegation of 17 people arrived at Kalehe after having walked more than 300 miles (500 kilometers) through the forest to plead for the third angel's message to be taken to the remote Shabunda region. Initial contacts were followed by a fruitful effort in 1971. At that time the headquarters of the East Zaïre Field were moved from rural Nyamitaba to Goma, and in the north a national replaced the expatriate president of the North Zaïre Field.

The year 1972 marked the beginnings of the Kasai Project, where, as a result of compulsory reregistration of all churches into the Église de Christ au Zaïre, the attention of thousands was directed to the SDA Church. A program of visitation laid the foundation for an ever-expanding work in the Kasai. The Kasai Project was further enriched with the opening of a pastoral training school.

Mokotsi Mbyirukira was chosen in 1973 as union president, the first national to hold this position.

Recent Developments

Recent Developments. Since 1973 the Zaïre Union has experienced significant growth in membership, most notably in the Kasai. This necessitated a reconfiguration of field territories as outlined in the statistical section above. Continued sociopolitical instability has characterized recent years and made it increasingly difficult to administer the union effectively. Catastrophic to the financial affairs of the union has been the drastic devaluation of the currency. Despite these adverse conditions, the membership has grown phenomenally.

Zaire Equatorial Field

ZAIRE EQUATORIAL FIELD. See Africa-Indian Ocean Division; Zaire.

Zaire Union Mission

ZAIRE UNION MISSION. See Africa-Indian Ocean Division; Zaire.

Zambesi Conference

ZAMBESI CONFERENCE. See Zimbabwe.

Zambesi Union Mission

ZAMBESI UNION MISSION. See Eastern Africa Division; Zimbabwe.

Zambesi Union Tidings

ZAMBESI UNION TIDINGS (1954— ; quarterly; Zambesi Union Press; free to the constituency of the Zambesi Union; incomplete files in GC). Church paper, organ of the Zambesi Union. Editor in 1993 was R. R. Ndhlovu, president of the Zambesi Union.

Zambia

ZAMBIA. An independent African state; formerly Northern Rhodesia, a British colony, from 1911 to 1953; and a member of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland from 1953 to 1963. The country's area is 290,586 square miles (752,618 square kilometers) and its population (1994) was 9.1 million. The African population can be grouped roughly into three language areas: north, mostly Bemba; south, Tonga; and southwest, Lozi. In addition to these there are a number of smaller language groups of indigenous and foreign origin. Agriculture is the chief occupation of Zambia, with maize, wheat, millet, and tobacco the most important crops. From rich mines along the Katanga border, copper was exported in 1969, exceeding 390,000 tons (353,730 metric tons). Power to operate these mines is supplied by the Kariba Dam across the Zambesi River, 200 miles (320 kilometers) below the famed Victoria Falls. Zambia is bounded on the north by Zaïre, on the east by Malawi, Mozambique, and Tanzania, on the south by Namibia and Zimbabwe, and on the west by Angola.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Zambia was formerly part of the Zambesi Union, with headquarters in Bulawayo. On June 1, 1972, it became a separate union of the Trans-Africa Division, and in 1981 it became part of the Eastern Africa Division. The headquarters building in Lusaka provides adequate office space and is situated next to the Lusaka Central church. Five staff houses are situated in close proximity to the office complex. Statistics (1992) for Zambia: churches, 990; members, 185,120; church or elementary schools, 10; ordained ministers, 77; licensed ministers, 93. Headquarters: Lusaka.

Statistics (1992) for the fields—Central Zambia Field: churches, 165; members, 43,778; ordained ministers, 10; licensed ministers, 22. Headquarters: Kabwe. Copperbelt Zambia Field: churches, 149; members, 50,768; ordained ministers, 12; licensed ministers, 16. Headquarters: Ndola. East Zambia Field: churches, 96; members, 4,163; ordained ministers, 4; licensed ministers, 8. Headquarters: Chipata. North Zambia Field: churches, 147; members, 37,377; ordained ministers, 18; licensed ministers, 16. Headquarters: Mansa. South Zambia Field: churches, 152; members, 51,600; ordained ministers, 16; licensed ministers, 16. Headquarters: Monze. West Zambia Field: churches, 281; members, 11,035; ordained ministers, 10; licensed ministers, 14. Headquarters: Mongu.

Institutions

Institutions. Mwami Adventist Hospital; Rusangu Secondary School; Yuka Adventist Hospital; Zambia Adventist Press.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. Beginnings. In 1903, using Solusi Station in (Southern) Rhodesia as base, W. H. Anderson, Jacob Detcha (who could speak the Tonga language), and several African workers set out for Northern Rhodesia (Zambia) on an exploratory trip for a possible mission site. After traveling by train up to Mambanje, which was the railhead at that time, the party traveled on foot to the Victoria Falls, and on to Kalomo, which was then the capital of Northern Rhodesia, and to Chief Monze's area, 100 miles (160 kilometers) to the northeast. On this journey, W. H. Anderson almost died of dysentery, but was nursed back to health by a certain Mr. Walker of Choma. Chief Monze granted them a 5,436-acre (2,200-hectare) plot of ground, which came to be Rusangu Station.

Rusangu Station. On July 1, 1905, a group of workers, including W. H. Anderson and his family, Jacob Detcha, Philip Malomo, Jack Mahlatini Mpofu, and Andrew Nyakana, arrived to open the station, and by September opened a school. The station was called the Pemba Mission Station, or the Barotse Mission, but in 1912 or 1913 the name was changed to Rusangu. A good water supply and fertile soil made Rusangu a suitable place for agriculture and horticulture. The early years were difficult. Attacks of malaria caused some of the workers to leave. Mrs. Anderson died of blackwater fever. The first converts were won through personal work among the people living along the railway from Rusangu Station south to Victoria Falls, and from among the students in the school.

From Rusangu the work spread to such an extent that in 1993 there were 45,000 members in the southern province, which is now known as South Zambia Field. There is also a large secondary school, opened in 1960.

Musofu Station. In 1917 S. M. Konigmacher left Rusangu to open work in the Chitina area not far from the town of Ndola. Until the erection of the first church building in 1918, he gathered the people under the trees and taught them how to sing and pray. In one room of the church building, which was used for a school, he taught both adults and children to read and write. The first African convert was Matthew Chiwanga, who had married a Musofu woman and had settled near the mission. He later became a mission worker. In recent years school buildings, dormitories, staff houses, and other structures have been built. There is now a senior primary school at Musofu. Although the school needs much improvement in the physical plant, in 1993 it had 15 teachers and 500 students.

Chimpempe Station. This station is in the northeast section of Zambia, in the region of the Mweru and Bangweulu lakes, and its territory extends to the Tanzania border. Work at the station began in September 1921, with the arrival of H. J. Hurlow and two African workers, Lawson Endaenda and Isaac Galwele. Other mission societies had already been established, and at first the local chief was opposed to Seventh-day Adventists, but through his services as a nurse Hurlow broke down prejudice. Through medical contacts and public meetings held in villages, converts were won (among whom was James Muyeba, who in 1962 was appointed vice president of the Northern Rhodesia Field). In 1923 a school was opened at the mission. In 1993 it was a junior secondary school. The two sections, elementary and secondary, have a combined total of 450 pupils and nine teachers. By 1926, a church had been organized with 27 members and there were three Sabbath schools and one day school in the district.

From 1926 to 1942 the area was organized as the Northeastern Rhodesia Mission Field, administered by the Zambesi Union Committee. In 1972 it became part of the North Zambia Field. On June 1, 1972, Zambia became a separate union of the Trans-Africa Division.

All Seventh-day Adventists in the North and Copperbelt fields are commonly referred to as “Ba-Chimpempe,” meaning “those of Chimpempe.” The field had 24 mission districts in 1993.

Mwami Station. Mwami Station was established on a farm acquired in 1925 near Fort Jameson. Dr. E. G. Marcus, E. B. Jewell, S. Moyo, and S. Kanjanga helped to build the work in this area. See Mwami Adventist Hospital.

A secondary-level day school was in operation at the station in 1993. Along with the elementary school, it has 10 teachers and about 350 students.

Barotseland. Christianity came to Barotseland, the southwestern section of Zambia, about the middle of the nineteenth century. The first SDA missionary was S. M. Konig-macher, who began work in the Katima-Sesheke area in 1921. In 1927 he traveled north to Lealui to ask the paramount chief for some land for a school in the Kalabo district. His request granted, he returned and opened a school late in 1928 at a place now called Liumba Hill. He also carried on personal evangelism, and later opened a Sabbath school. In March 1929 a converted clerk from Kalabo became the first SDA teacher in Barotseland. The next month the first African evangelist began work. In 1930 an outschool was opened at Numa and another at Sitoti. In later years more outschools were opened, which in time became sites for Seventh-day Adventist churches. In 1944 W. P. Owen pioneered the work at the Sitoti Station, 100 miles (160 kilometers) south of Liumba Hill Station.

In 1946 Barotseland was organized as a field. In 1958, because of improved communications, it was once more made part of the Northern Rhodesia Field. The work in the former Barotseland (West Zambia Field) is now administered from Mongu. The schools have a total enrollment of about 1,800 students.

Organization and Development. The Northern Rhodesia Field was set up in 1921 with J. V. Wilson the first president, and with headquarters at Lusaka. During two periods two sections of Northern Rhodesia functioned as separate fields, the area surrounding the Chimpempe Mission (1926—1942) and Barotseland (1946—1958). In 1929 the European and Coloured constituency of Northern Rhodesia became part of the Rhodesia-Bechuanaland Conference. In 1945 the headquarters of the Northern Rhodesia Field were moved to Chisekesi, a small settlement on the railroad, six miles (9.6 kilometers) from Rusangu Mission.

There are two hospitals: Mwami Adventist Hospital (established 1928), and Yuka Hospital (established 1955). At Rusangu there is a coeducational boarding school (Rusangu Secondary School, reestablished 1960), offering up to and including the twelfth year of schooling. Rusangu was a government-recognized training center for lower primary teachers until 1955. In 1993 only three Seventh-day Adventist primary schools, and no secondary schools, except the Ministerial Training School, were operated by the denomination. The others came under government management. However, the new Third Republic government has negotiated to turn the schools back to the SDAs.

Zambia Adventist Press

ZAMBIA ADVENTIST PRESS. A printing project established in 1989 at Chipongwe, Zambia. For more than three decades Zambia's literature ministry had been import-oriented. At first business had been good, but subsequent years saw the country run into economic problems due to the constant fall in value of the kwacha. Only a few book titles could be purchased, and many literature evangelists were forced to abandon the ministry.

With this problem in mind, the Zambia Union began planning with the Eastern Africa Division for a publishing house. Funds were made available to the union in the form of a loan to purchase a 20-acre (eight-hectare) plot at the town of Chipongwe, south of Lusaka.

Ground was broken in 1989. Actual construction had not started by 1991, but some printing equipment had been purchased: a Rolland Parva single color offset and Heidelberg GTO single color offset press, along with darkroom and editorial equipment. With these items on hand, the Zambia Union decided to go into immediate printing, with the machines installed in the basement of the union office.

The following publications have been produced: English and local language Sabbath school quarterlies, numerous subscription and trade books, and miscellaneous printing projects for sister institutions. In 1992, 110,000 books were produced at a value of US$165,000.

Funds are still being gathered for the construction of the publishing house.

Managers: Marvin Shultz, 1989—1992; Rashford P. Musonda, 1992— .

Zambia Union Mission

ZAMBIA UNION MISSION. See Eastern Africa Division; Zambia.

Zanzibar

ZANZIBAR. See Tanzania.

Zaokski Theological Seminary

ZAOKSKI THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (Zaokskaya Seminariya Adventistov). A coeducational college and ministerial training school established in 1987 in the Tula Region of Russia. In the early days of perestroika, the leaders of Seventh-day Adventist work in the USSR submitted their seventy-sixth petition to the Council on Religious Affairs requesting permission to begin a correspondence school in religion. They were told that this would be impossible because they had no place to do so. Subsequently, a proposal was made to construct a small building adjacent to a building already in the Tula church's possession. There an education center, publishing department, and headquarters for the church in the Russian republic could be set up. When this was not allowed, they found property near Zaokski, 45 miles (70 kilometers) from Tula and 75 miles (120 kilometers) from Moscow, and began negotiations to secure this property for the school.

In the summer of 1986 General Conference president Neal Wilson was received at the Council on Religious Affairs by the chairman, Konstantin Kharchev. Wilson passed on the request of the world church that they be granted an opportunity to have an educational institution in the former Soviet Union. Kharchev promised Wilson that he would do everything in his power to grant the request.

Opponents in the Tula regional government and local authorities in Zaokski did everything possible to prevent a school from being built there. But the Lord worked a miracle for the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Russia, largely through the persistent appeals of Mikhail M. Kulakov. On Jan. 27, 1987, permission for construction was finally received. Volunteers from the Ukraine and other parts of Russia flocked in to build the seminary building in record time. An eight-unit apartment house was also built in approximately two months' time. Miracle upon miracle contributed to the construction of the seminary. The grand opening ceremony was held on schedule, on Dec. 2, 1988.

In April of 1989 a noted agronomist, Dr. Jacob Mittleider, from the U.S., began an agricultural management program at the college. The first group of 15 students came from the Ukraine, the central Asian republics, Russia, and Latvia. In November 1990 the first graduates in the theology program received their degrees. Most of them now serve in leadership positions in the Euro-Asia Division. The college was registered by the Russian government in July 1991 as the first Christian educational institution of higher learning opened since the 1917 revolution. In 1993 MacNeilus Hall was completed, providing dormitories and a cafeteria, and a new library building was built.

Presidents: Mikhail M. Kulakov, 1988—1994; Artur A. Stele, 1994— .

Zeitoun Adventist School

ZEITOUN ADVENTIST SCHOOL. A kindergarten-elementary-intermediate school located near Heliopolis, Egypt. It serves both the Muslim and Christian communities. About 3 percent of the pupils are Seventh-day Adventists. The school is known as a model of peaceful and harmonious coexistence.

The school is self-supporting and has become a source of income for the Egyptian Seventh-day Adventist Church. Zeitoun Adventist School has earned a reputation for academic excellence and school discipline and has received several awards.

Twice placed under government administrative supervision, Zeitoun now functions under able national leadership. Plans are being made to extend the educational opportunities into the upper secondary levels.

In 1993 the school enrollment was 1,291. The students were served by a faculty and staff of 70.

Zertuche, Daniel

ZERTUCHE, DANIEL (1906—1987). He was born in Estación Claudio, Coahuila, Mexico, on Dec. 17, 1906. He married Julia Rodriguez on Sept. 14, 1942. Two daughters were born from this union. In 1937 he began his services in the organized work as a colporteur. His ministerial studies were pursued at the Tacubaya School in Mexico City. In 1939 he began his services as a worker in the field in the Gulf Mission, where he remained for several years. He then moved on to the Pacific Mission, the South Mission, and back to the Pacific Mission. He gave years of fruitful service in the North Mission (now the Northeast Mexican Conference and North Mexican Mission).

On several occasions he prepared more than 100 souls for baptism and performed the ceremony himself. He also distinguished himself for his missionary spirit both in and out of the church. He played the saw beautifully, drawing from it inspirational music of praise to the Lord. He was also an inspiration to new believers because of his consecration, his administrative style, and his speaking ability, strengthening people who were in need.

Zimbabwe

ZIMBABWE. An independent country situated in southeastern Africa, bounded on the west by Botswana, on the north by the Zambesi River, which separates it from Zambia, on the east by Mozambique, and on the south by the Republic of South Africa. It has an area of 150,803 square miles (390,580 square kilometers) and a population (1994) of 10.9 million. Shona and Sindebele are the main African languages. The largest concentration of people live in the cities of Harare, Bulawayo, Umtali, and Gweru. Agriculture is the chief occupation of the people, with maize, tobacco, peanuts, and cotton the main crops. Recently industry has gained prominence and is now competing for first place. Mining is also important. Asbestos, gold, chromium, coal, and copper are the principal exports.

The country was opened to European settlement in 1891, when a small British military force defeated the armies of Lobengula, the last king of the Matabeles. The country was named Rhodesia after Cecil John Rhodes, who led in conquering the area. After the European population had grown sufficiently, Southern Rhodesia was annexed to Great Britain (1923), and in 1924 the British granted the country self-government. In 1953 a federation was formed of Southern Rhodesia, Northern Rhodesia, and Nyasaland, with Salisbury (now Harare) as the capital. In 1963 the federation was dissolved. On Nov. 11, 1965, Prime Minister Ian D. Smith announced his country's unilateral declaration of independence. Britain termed the act illegal and demanded majority rule. The UN imposed sanctions against Zimbabwe (known as Rhodesia until 1980) and around the same time a war of liberation was waged. A cease-fire was accepted by all involved parties in 1979, and on Apr. 18, 1980, independence was achieved.

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics

Seventh-day Adventist Statistics. The territory of Zimbabwe constitutes the Zambesi Union, which is part of the Eastern Africa Division. Statistics (1992) for Zimbabwe: churches, 413; members, 180,553; ordained ministers, 81; licensed ministers, 38. Headquarters: Bulawayo.

Statistics (1992) for the conferences—Central Zimbabwe Conference: churches, 153; members, 71,131; ordained ministers, 19; licensed ministers, 8. Headquarters: Gweru. East Zimbabwe Conference: churches, 165; members, 64,926; ordained ministers, 28; licensed ministers, 13. Headquarters: Harare. West Zimbabwe Conference: churches, 79; members, 42,263; ordained ministers, 20; licensed ministers, 10. Headquarters: Bulawayo.

Institutions

Institutions. Anderson School; Bulawayo Adventist School; Hanke Adventist Secondary School; Lower Gweru Adventist Secondary School; Nyazura Adventist Secondary School; Solusi Adventist Secondary School; Solusi University.

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work

Development of Seventh-day Adventist Work. Beginnings. In 1894 Pieter Wessels and A. T. Robinson, president of the Cape Conference, interviewed Cecil Rhodes, prime minister of Cape Colony and chairman of the British South Africa Company, requesting a piece of land on which to open a mission among the Matabeles in Rhodesia. Rhodes instructed Dr. L. S. Jameson, the administrator in Bulawayo, to permit Seventh-day Adventist representatives to select whatever land they needed. Pieter Wessels, A. Druillard, and other SDA workers then marked out a 12,000-acre (4,850-hectare) site some 30 miles (50 kilometers) west of Bulawayo. Fred Sparrow was left to develop the station, and the next year a mission party sent from North America arrived. This group was headed by G. B. Tripp, who was to be superintendent of the new mission, and included Dr. A. S. Carmichael and W. H. Anderson. The Matabele Mission, as it was first called, was renamed a few years later after Solusi, a local chief who had his kraal nearby and who had assisted in the establishment of the early mission.

From the beginning, work was conducted along evangelistic, educational, and medical lines. The earliest missionaries were expected to contribute substantially to their own support by trading and farming. Malaria took a heavy toll of the early missionaries. From Solusi the work expanded to all parts of Rhodesia. In 1901 F. B. Armitage founded Lower Gwelo Station (at first called Somabula), which held its first baptism in 1903. In 1910 M. C. Sturdevant established the Inyazura Station. Hanke was the next station, opened in 1911. From 1911 to 1923 work was opened up at Shangani and Gunde. Among the missionaries who contributed to the consolidation and advancement of the work in Rhodesia were J. N. de Beer, W. C. Walston, A. Butterfield, T. J. Gibson, S. W. Palmer, F. B. Jewell, F. R. Stockil, and H. M. Sparrow.

Organization and Growth. From 1901 to 1916 all the Seventh-day Adventist work in Southern Africa was administered by the South African Union Conference, from headquarters in Cape Town. In 1916 the Rhodesia-Nyasaland Mission (later Zambesi Union Mission) was established, with headquarters in Bulawayo, to care for mission work in Southern Rhodesia and other missions north of the Union of South Africa. U. Bender, from America, was the first superintendent of this administrative unit. Because of war conditions, it was not until early 1917 that he arrived in Bulawayo. Six months later he was transferred, and W. E. Straw succeeded him. In July 1920 W. H. Branson, the president of the newly formed African Division, came to Bulawayo and completed the organization of the Zambesi Union, with W. E. Straw continuing as union superintendent.

In 1921 P. Hendrie, the first European convert, was baptized. The European work in the Rhodesias and Bechuana (now Botswana) was organized as the Rhodesia-Bechuanaland Conference in 1929. The president of the Southern Rhodesia Mission Field or the Zambesi Union served as conference president. In 1945 E. J. Stevenson became conference president when Rhodesia-Bechuanaland was separated from the Southern Rhodesia Field (African work). In 1953 the name was changed to the Rhodesia Conference.

In 1964 the field was divided into two, and, as the work continued to grow and the membership multiplied, the Eastern, Central, and Western Zimbabwe fields were organized in 1981.

In 1969 the Zambesi General Field was established to care for the Coloured members. In 1977 the Rhodesia Conference and the Zambesi General Field merged to form the Zambesi Conference. In November 1992 the Eastern Africa Division not only voted to grant conference status to the three fields, but also to realign the territory of the Zambesi Union. The three fields merged with the Zambesi Conference in January of 1993 to form the East, Central, and West Zimbabwe conferences.

Zivot I Zdravlje

ZIVOT I ZDRAVLJE (Life and Health). See Croatian-Slovenian Publishing House;
Yugoslavian Publishing House.

Znaci Vremena

ZNACI VREMENA (Signs of the Times). See Croatian-Slovenian Publishing House; Yugoslavian Publishing House.

Znamenja Casa

ZNAMENJA CASA (Signs of the Times). See Croatian-Slovenian Publishing House; Yugoslavian Publishing House.

Zurich Adventist School

ZURICH ADVENTIST SCHOOL (Privatschule der Advent-Mission, Zurich). An elementary school serving the churches in Zurich, begun in 1954 by E. Walder. Secondary classes were added in 1961, and in 1993 there were three elementary and six secondary grades under the care of four full-time teachers. The average enrollment during the past five years has been about 30, including 17 students at secondary level. The state-required syllabus is followed, together with extra daily classes in Bible. The school has an excellent reputation and the number of pupils from non-Seventh-day Adventist homes is restricted because of space considerations.

Principals: E. Walder, 1954—1956; Joseph Agustoni, 1956—1971; Beatrice Steiner, 1971—1976; Pierre Hess, 1976—1983; Ivan Fagioli, 1983— .